Hon. Mr. Davis: Look at some of their policies. Look at some of the policies that created the divisive feelings in this country. Just look at them. Why does the member think people voted against them last May? One of the reasons is because of their policy with respect to national unity. Without any question that was one reason the voters in this province rejected Pierre Elliott Trudeau. There is no question about it. Wait and see if he is the member's federal leader.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. New question; the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask another question of the Premier. I was enjoying this private discussion, Mr. Speaker; that's very, very unfortunate.

MANUFACTURING GROWTH

Mr. S. Smith: Can the Premier explain to this House how it is that in Ontario between the years 1971 and 1977 the value of shipments and value added per capita in manufacturing—in terms of the growth in that very vital matter, which is per-capita growth in manufacturing value added—Ontario ranked 10th among the provinces of this country? How did it happen that while he was there as Premier, Ontario allowed its growth in manufacturing to become the lowest in this country when manufacturing is the life blood of the province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the honourable Leader of the Opposition is playing games. First, it is not factually correct in that sense of the word. Second—

Mr. S. Smith: I have the figures.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let me finish.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition is comparing as he so readily does, apples and oranges or, say, apples and eggs. The reality is that in the manufacturing sector in this province in the past three to four years we have had a far more significant growth in jobs created because of the policies of this government. We have been able to maintain a healthy economy in spite of the pressures internationally and even internally, in spite of the predictions of some, in spite of the activities and the criticisms of the honourable member and his colleagues.

Just look at the employment figures—an increase of 145,000 jobs over a year ago. The Liberal members said it couldn't be done; they are disappointed it has been done. They have been nonsupportive of those measures that have created an economic climate here which in spite of the difficulties has been better than in most other comparable jurisdictions.

This province has done well, extremely well, and is going to continue to do so because of men like the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), the very enlightened group sitting on this side of the House and we are going to be here for many years yet to look after the interests of the people of this province.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: I am sure the Premier would agree with me that without sufficient growth in our manufacturing sector Ontario is never going to be able to solve its economic problems in the 1980s. I am sure we share that view.

Since growth in the economic sector of manufacturing is vital to this province; since it is most reasonably measured in terms of value added per capita, I ask the Premier again, how does he account for the fact that the growth from 1971 to 1977 in Ontario was 79 per cent, which ranked 10th of all the provinces in Canada? How does it happen that we rank 10th in Canada in terms of manufacturing growth? It is not good enough to say we have no oil. Germany has no oil, yet they do very well in manufacturing. Why are we 10th in growth in manufacturing when our future depends on manufacturing?

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Of course the Leader of the Opposition wants to deal in percentages. He really has to look at the base upon which the percentages are calculated. I guess I am one of those people who doesn't deal solely in percentages, I deal in human terms. In human terms the number of people now employed in the manufacturing sector is substantially higher than it was a year and two years ago.

Certainly we have difficulties in the competitive environment of the world economy. Certainly there is a greater pressure on our manufacturers and one reason is because of the unenlightened economic policies of the former government in Ottawa. In spite of them, we have done relatively well in this province.

We are going to do well in the 1980s. I know the Leader of the Opposition would like to say we aren't. We are. We are going to have economic growth; there will be increases in manufacturing; there will be more job opportunities. Thank heavens we will be able to do it in spite of his criticisms and his negative approach, his unhappy nature with the world, his belief the government can never do anything right. Does he know the great mistake he makes with his own party? If on some occasion he said—

Mr. S. Smith: You don't know why you are 10th. You can't explain. Tenth is last and you are last.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's fine. But we are still, in terms of the manufacturing sector of Canada, by far the most significant.

Mr. S. Smith: And we are going down.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, we are not heading down. We are going to do very well. He can use all the statistics he likes. I give him one word of advice. We are getting very close to Christmas. He would be far more credible in the eyes of his colleagues and his own caucus if he were on occasion to acknowledge that the government of this province does some things right sometimes. I know he feels that to be in opposition his job is nothing but to criticize. He is making a fundamental error. He is making a great mistake. It's factual.

Look at the figures, for example, 145,000 jobs, in spite of what the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) predicted and in spite of what the Leader of the Opposition predicted. What we have done to stimulate economic growth is there in the figures. Ask those 145,000 people who were not employed a year ago.

FEDERAL BUDGET

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. We here in this party, of course, don't have any problems in supporting either the leader of our party or the policies of our party.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Where is he today?

Mr. Renwick: He's out winning votes for us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Renwick: As the federal election campaign will be fought on the Crosbie budget proposals and as this government has significant differences of opinion with respect to those budgetary proposals and, in particular, with respect to the price of fuel in Ontario and energy prices generally, will the Premier intercede immediately with the Prime Minister of Canada to ask him to suspend those proposals until such time as those proposals have been rejected or approved by the people of Canada in the federal election?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I acknowledge the statement of the member for Riverdale that he has no problem with his national leadership. I sensed he confined it to the national leadership. I understand that and I respect that. Perhaps he would like to expand it to his provincial leadership. I don't know. Perhaps it wasn't an accident that he mentioned only his federal leadership.

Mr. Renwick: It's a federal election campaign.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I see and I acknowledge that the member for Riverdale has no problem. I think the public of Canada will have a problem with his national leadership, but that's only my own assessment.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sure the Premier wants to answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I certainly do. What was the question? The member for Riverdale is really an old pro. I don't say that unkindly. I say that respectfully.

Mr. Peterson: Did you say goat?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No. I said an old pro.

I don't know what ultimately will be the issues. There is no question but that the budget will be one of the issues. I think the member also knows that ultimately the people of this country will be making their judgment, based upon that party and that leader they genuinely feel can best administer the affairs of this country. It's a very difficult period. I don't think the budget in itself is going to be the sole or single issue. There are some parts of the budget with which we disagree. We have made that quite clear. There are some parts with which we do agree. I think even the member for Riverdale must agree with a few of the things contained in the budget.

As I recall the budget, in terms of energy the budget makes it quite clear that the agreements with respect to next July and October have not been finalized. The budget made it quite clear that the agreement that is in place and which we accept is for $1 on January 1. We take no exception to that. That is part of the agreement, and we find this reasonable. The only area that really directly relates to it is the excise tax which is in place and which, in my view, the government of Canada is not going to alter.

Mr. Renwick: Supplementary: If I may revert to the early remarks of the Premier about an election, perhaps he would like to have a parallel election in Ontario at the same time. Then we could see whether or not we have the support of the people in the province, both for the leader of this party and its policies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That almost sounded like a new question.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question: At the risk of asking the Premier to reiterate what he has said, do I understand the Premier is going to take no steps of any kind to intercede with the federal government, to have them suspend, at least, the 18-cent increase in the excise tax on transportation fuel?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we have already made our point of view known. I did it the night of the budget; the Treasurer did so again yesterday.

With respect to the member's previous observation in that nonpart of the question, if his leader really wants to test the water, believe me, we are ready. I give the honourable member some advice to pass on to his leader. He would be ill-advised to do so.

I know why the member suggests it. He still has aspirations. He would like to replace his leader when they are defeated.

GAS AND OIL SUPPLIES

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, my second question was to the Minister of Energy, but I will put it to the Premier.

I have had an opportunity to look at Bill C-42, the emergency legislation with respect to the allocation of energy supplies, and while there is provision in the bill as to what will take place when there is no Parliament in existence in Canada, will the Premier arrange with the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch), or himself make a statement in this assembly before the prorogation of this session next week on the contingency plans of this province and of this government on the allocation of energy supplies of all kinds, particularly petroleum products in the event that during the dissolution of Parliament any impending shortage should develop?

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is a very fair question, and I shall—or the Minister of Energy will—reply to it early next week.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: While we are dealing with that allocation of energy, would the Premier also see that agriculture and food production and processing is put back into category A as being essential, rather than drop back to category B with garbage collection and snow removal? That is where agriculture and food production and processing is. Would he see that it gets back up to category A?

Hon. Mr. Davis: With this government, the agricultural community has been in, is in, and will always remain in category A, for everything.

REDIRECTED QUESTIONS

Mr. R. F. Johnston: A point of order, Mr. Speaker: It concerns the redirection of questions by ministers in the absence of ministers who are deemed to be more prepared to respond. There seems to be a tendency for these redirected questions never to be answered and I would like some direction.

Last Friday, I asked a question of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), on the Gabrielle Roy school problem and the need to support the French advisory council in the city. The minister replied, "I think that question should be directed to my colleague, the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), who has responsibility for those matters and I am sure would fully answer the member's question."

It has been a week and I have had no reply, Mr. Speaker. I feel it is unreasonable for me to continue to ask the question and take up my colleagues' time when they have questions they would like to ask. What recourse do we have and what assurance do we have that redirected questions are actually redirected and will be answered?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In reply to the member for Scarborough West, to my knowledge there is nothing in the standing orders pertaining particularly to questions asked during question period on how and when a minister should or should not answer the question. If they are redirected, or the advice is given that the minister will be given notice of the question, it is entirely up to the minister to reply at his or her convenience, or it is up to the member to ask the question again.

IMPORT GRADING

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I have a category A question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In view of the Supreme Court of Canada ruling yesterday that a retail store in Toronto cannot be charged under the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act because grade standards are covered under provincial laws, would the minister look to see what this ruling does to other provisions of the CAPS Act?

I'm thinking particularly of the requirement that imported products be marked with the country of origin. Because of the interregnum we have in Ottawa does this ruling demand that the provincial government bring in an emergency amendment to the Farm Products Marketing Act or the fruit, vegetable and honey act so that imported products would be covered by enforceable provincial law to require that imported products be marked with their country of origin?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will take a look at the suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: No doubt the minister will recall questions asked in this Legislature regarding the importation of chicken and its labelling as a product of the United States.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I recall every word quite well.

Mr. Riddell: The answer we received was that came under federal legislation. Since the recent event that has taken place in connection with this hearing on apples, could it be possible that the labelling of chicken from the States now comes under provincial legislation? Would the minister look into that?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I think I responded to the member for Kent-Elgin that I would be looking at that.

Mr. MacDonald: If the minister is going to look into this issue again, why is he looking into it when he flatly asserted, in reply to the question with regard to imported chickens, that packers and processors often handle imported and Ontario poultry at the same time, making identification very difficult? He said identification at the packer/processor or retail level would mean incorporated cost in labour and packaging which will be passed on to the consumer.

In other words, the minister made excuses for the total dismissal of his own foodland program which is going to identify imported products.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We're not making any reasons for not doing it. The member for Kent-Elgin suggested there was a court decision yesterday. I have said we will look at that court decision and we will decide if we, as a province, should proceed down the lines he suggested.

I have been told there was a court decision yesterday and that always makes us open up an issue and take a look at it.

ENERGY EXPORTS

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. Now that we have Mr. Clark's attention again, will the Premier tell him that he should advise the National Energy Board that no new exports of natural gas should be allowed until a new government is chosen by the Canadian people?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think that decision has already been made. I expect that the member's national leader will see certain opportunities during the next X number of days to explain his own point of view, which probably would be slightly different. I expect he will do that, but the decision has been made.

Ms. Gigantes: Could I ask a supplementary? Because the Ontario Energy Board rate rulings have already taken into account the cost of extending the gas distribution systems, would the Premier tell Mr. Clark during the next two months in a prepared and substantial position paper the reasons why Ontario feels that natural gas prices should be unpegged from future oil prices and why incentive pricing of natural gas should benefit consumers rather than gas distribution companies?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the latter point, we intend to do so. With respect to the former point, it is not just the government of Canada's determination as to whether or not the price of natural gas is unpegged from the price of crude. The government of Canada must do this in conjunction with the producing provinces—which are not exclusively confined incidentally to the province of Alberta—but where there is some sort of philosophical point of view on the energy issues in that great province of Saskatchewan, where the member has philosophical followers who've taken an approach not dissimilar to Alberta's on many of these issues, which Mr. Broadbent may have to explain when he's visiting some parts of Canada.

Mr. J. Reed: Could the Premier indicate when he's going to take a position like this, understanding the importance of the future distribution of natural gas to the people of Ontario? When is he going to do it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: What position?

Mr. J. Reed: The position on the unhooking of the price of natural gas.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know where the member for Halton-Burlington has been for the last six months. We have taken this position time and again. He should read the papers; read the documentation. We have argued for the unhooking or freeing of the price of natural gas from crude oil for months. We did it at the time when natural gas became in surplus.

Mr. J. Reed: Are you going to go to the Prime Minister now—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh come on. The member should grow up. He knows it, the government of Canada knows it, everyone knows the position we have taken with respect to the price of natural gas being freed from the price of crude. Everybody knows it. The Prime Minister knows it, so does the member.

CHICKEN QUOTAS

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food regarding his statement this morning on the allocation of chicken quotas.

Because there is an increase of 230 million pounds and the minister is sending a representative to the meeting, how much of that 230 million pounds over the base rate, which had a 50-50 split earlier, does he think is warranted for Ontario's share.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is not the amount that should be allocated to us, it is the method that is to be used. It was taken by the board that it be split right down the centre. The original agreement, section 8, reads:

"It is further agreed that the agency shall establish annual provincial allocations and when considering future provincial marketing allocations shall use the following: (a) any significant change in the consumers' demand; (b) the ability of the province to meet its allocation production; (c) the total market requirements within each market area; (d) the proportion of market demands in a province which is met by production in that province; (e) the comparative advantages of production and marketing of the chicken."

All of those guidelines were completely ignored when they set out the production quotas for Ontario and Quebec. They granted an increase for Quebec by some 18 million pounds and an increase of three million for Ontario. We felt neither the consumption nor production was taken into consideration. They more or less simply equalized the allocation to the two provinces. None of the guidelines was used at all.

Mr. G. Taylor: Supplementary: If there is this increase of three million pounds mentioned, will that do away with some of the 72-hour supplementary permits being used at present to increase production of some local producers?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We haven't looked at that side of it. We have looked at the overall production and needs of our province. When they made the allocations they did not look at the production ability or at the consumption of the market area.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: Why should supplementary permits be given priority when the producers in Ontario can produce all the chicken needed for domestic consumption? Why are we even looking at supplementary permits to bring this chicken in from the United States?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I didn't know that supplementary permits were a part of that question.

Mr. G. Taylor: Yes, they were.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Very well. I am aware of one supplementary permit. There may have been one over the last week or two I am not aware of. I am aware of the one two weeks ago.

As I understand it, the national agency went to all areas of Canada, not only to Ontario and Quebec. They went to all the agencies and all the provinces across Canada and they took into account all of the production that was available and found it would only meet half of the needs for that particular week. That is the reason a supplementary permit was granted.

RECRUITMENT OF FOREIGN WORKERS

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour—or Santa Claus, I'm not sure which. He did a good job that night too.

Is the minister aware that the Steel Company of Canada Limited is short of skilled labour in trades and crafts and also millwrights and is seeking applications for off-shore help?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware there are shortages in a variety of industries throughout the province. We have clearly identified, through the appointment of a manpower commissioner and manpower commission, that we intend to address those needs. The manpower commission and the manpower commissioner have now clearly identified their priorities.

The first, in order to allow us to move forward, will be to provide a more adequate labour-market information base; the second strategy will be based upon the skills shortages that are identified.

In the meantime, only after careful scrutiny of all applications for a need to advertise for offshore workers are applications for advertising being accepted.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Does the minister not feel that these people could be recruited in Ontario or in Canada, rather than having to go offshore? Particularly when there are so many plants closing, such as Pilkington Glass and in the auto trades, should we not be making an extensive effort to recruit these people here?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry and Tourism could comment in greater detail, but it has been made clear to me there has to be a thorough search made by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and that search has to be evaluated by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism and his staff before any approval for advertising offshore can be made.

There is a diligent effort being made to recruit workers within this country.

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the shortage of skilled workers is determined also by the fact that we don't have enough apprenticeship courses in Ontario, and in view of the fact that this government doesn't seem to have a policy, is the manpower commission also recommending a plan to establish apprenticeship courses? If it is recommending apprenticeship courses, when can we have definite information?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that the first priority identified is the need for a labour-market information base that would allow us adequately to project the needs and plan accordingly. The second requirement is the identification of the skilled labour shortage and the need to expand Ontario's industrial training base.

In the meantime, I wouldn't want anyone to think that everyone is sitting around. The Minister of Education can indicate very clearly that the number of community industrial training councils increases weekly. I believe it's now up to 44. Since the summer of 1978 I believe there have been four trades regulated in the industrial sector and more are being planned. There are many things under way.

RADIO SHACK

Mr. Mackenzie: A question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Regardless of the decision about Radio Shack, given the clear evidence of serious labour strife over first agreements in Ontario, together with the evidence that even a tough decision by the Ontario Labour Relations Board may still result in the destruction of a workers' union without the authority to enforce a first agreement, will the minister reconsider his position against bringing in legislation for first agreements in the province?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, we had considerable discussion about this last night during estimates and I made it clear to the member that I don't propose to get into any discussions about the Radio Shack decision. In this country, as in all other common-law countries, those are matters that are and should be left for the courts to decide. He and I understand that.

The issue on compulsory first collective agreements also was reviewed. I told him quite clearly I didn't think the jury was in on that issue. I reviewed the fact that in British Columbia since 1976 there have been 60 applications requesting compulsory first collective agreements. Of those 60, nine were accepted. When the second year came around, five unions were decertified and another was never able to reach an agreement. So two thirds of those were total flops.

I realize there is the argument of a deterrent value of the first contract capacity within a labour relations act, but that's a very difficult thing to evaluate.

I understand Professor Weiler's argument on it, but it's not based on any factual review that I'm aware of to support his position.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: The clear import of my question is will the Minister reconsider his position? Is he telling the House that he will not reconsider his position and that he is not going to bring in first-contract legislation?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I've made it clear on previous occasions that all of the recommendations contained in the Ontario Federation of Labour brief will be reviewed and considered.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Given the legacy of bitterness that results from these first-contract disputes; given the tremendous problems which have afflicted so many communities in Ontario, certainly in recent years with a number of these disputes, why should the minister refuse to introduce legislation which would give at least a guaranteed first contract? Why would he try and create such a mentality of warfare, not only at the certification level, but also at the first contract level, and then at the decertification proceedings that seem to occur afterwards in the cases he has just mentioned? That legacy of warfare and bitterness does no one any good. Why doesn't the minister move to accept that we have unions today and to accept that first contracts should be guaranteed?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I'd like the Leader of the Opposition to clearly understand that on many occasions I have said that I accept, and this government accepts, the position and existence of labour unions in this country. I have a great respect for them. I think they have accomplished many good things in this country and will continue to do so.

However, the member is saying that he has made the decision that first contract compulsory arbitration is the right thing to solve the problems out in society. I am saying I don't accept that the jury is in on that.

Mr. S. Smith: What's the minister's solution?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I'm saying that we have many initiatives going forth now to try to resolve what I view as inappropriate adversarial relationships going on in society. I will continue to do so. We will continue to review alternative suggestions to improve that situation. I'm simply saying that the member hasn't convinced me that what he is proposing is a resolution to the problem.

LIMITATIONS ACT

Mr. Epp: I have a question of the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry). He was here just a few minutes ago. I see his books on his desk, I wonder if he's somewhere behind them?

In the absence of the Attorney General I'll ask the Premier the question, Mr. Speaker. I trust the Premier is aware of the court of appeal decision earlier this week wherein the court decided that an individual was precluded from issuing a counter-claim against the government because the six-month limitation period relating to lawsuits against public authorities had elapsed.

The Premier will recall that the government waited until 11 months after the incident at issue to make its claim, thus eliminating the right to counter-claim. I trust that the Premier is aware that under private circumstances the statute of limitations is one year. I'd like to ask the Premier, in the absence of the Attorney General, in light of Mr. Justice Blair's comments in the course of his judgement that the statute of limitations period is in great urgency of reform, whether he will recommend to the Attorney General and to this Legislature that the statute of limitations be extended from six months to two years?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I want to thank the member for Waterloo North for his great trust in the Premier. He trusts I know this, he trusts I know that; of course I do. I am glad he reminded me of it because I might not have remembered it if he hadn't.

On the actual question: Will the Attorney General review, as a result of that judgement, the length of time and the statute of limitations? I will take it up with the Attorney General.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the government has appealed the decision of the Supreme Court of Ontario, which found in favour of the individual, and so the government has an interest in having the present statute of limitation period apply. Nevertheless, given the obvious hardship that was caused to this individual, and given the Premier indicated only a few minutes ago his great concern, in human terms, for the people of Ontario, I wonder if he will recommend to the Attorney General and to this Legislature that if the statute of limitations is extended it be retroactive to apply to this individual?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will discuss it with the Attorney General. It is a very complex issue, it is very difficult to make any legislation of this kind retroactive to a particular case. Some of the honourable member's friends who practise the law could explain that; there would be some complications, but I will discuss it with the Attorney General.

CHEESE PLANT CLOSURES

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food on the Labatts Limited purchase of two of the Warkworth cheddar cheese factories and closing them down.

Is the minister not concerned about this as pulling the rug out, so to speak, from the local economies of two communities in eastern Ontario; and how does he reconcile that with the fact that at almost the same time as this is taking place, the provincial and federal governments are about to sign the eastern Ontario development pact, replacing ARDA, for the injection of $50 million to develop the economy of eastern Ontario?

Why is the minister sitting idly by; or am I wrong, is he going to do something about this? They are destroying the economy in certain places and pumping in public money to build it in others.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the honourable member, I am sure he is aware this company has purchased quite a number of small plants in the past and moved the quota to the central plant.

He is also aware the Ontario Milk Marketing Board is looking at this. It is looking at the possibility of not giving any further allocation, so it is not going to be beneficial to a large organization of this nature to establish one large plant. If the plan is completed—as the honourable member well knows, he was at the meeting—if the plan is completed and in operation by the spring, the board will not be making any additional allocation to the larger companies. This will deter the taking over by a larger company of the small cheese companies.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: It may deter in the future, but it isn't deterring two that have been sold and closed down. I want to ask the minister: Is he aware of the rumour, and a fairly reliable one, that Ault Food is going to use these closed-down factories as warehouses for the importation of American produce which will be fed into its distribution system in Ontario?

How do you reconcile that little assist to the undercutting of your whole food land development program which was that we eat Ontario produce rather than foreign produce?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have been made aware of the last suggestion of the honourable member. We will be looking at it.

Mr. Riddell: How does the minister reconcile the reallocation of milk from the butter processors to the cheese processors when the cheese plants are being closed down?

Does he realize the serious effect it is going to have on such plants as Gay Lea Foods, Stacey Brothers and others if they can't get enough milk to produce butter, skim milk powder, evaporated milk and what-have-you when we don't have a surplus of those products now? How do we reconcile all this?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, if the honourable member has followed developments of the past few months on the milk supply in Ontario and in Canada, he is well aware the dairy farmers did not meet the quota last year, they only met 95 per cent of the quota. Had they met the full quota there would not have been the problem to which he is referring. It is a matter that the farmer must go out and supply more milk than he did this past 12 months.

Mr. Riddell: Is the minister blaming the producer for something that was ill conceived?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, I am not blaming anybody. I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that there was not sufficient milk produced to go around.

PUBLIC TRANSPORT

Mr. Bradley: My question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Treasurer.

In view of the possible fuel shortage which has been alluded to in this House and in the federal House, and in view of the provisions of the federal budget, specifically the excise tax increase to 25 cents—whether that will remain or not depends on the constitutional experts one talks to—however, in view of these two elements which have really come to the forefront probably in the last month, and certainly the second in the last week, what specific action is the Treasury taking in conjunction with the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) to ensure the public transportation system in the province is improved so people will have a reasonable alternative to using the private vehicle on every occasion? I would like the Treasurer to respond not only in terms of what the province does directly but also what further considerations are being given to transit commissions across the province in terms of further funding?

Hon. F. S. Miller: First, Mr. Speaker, Ontario, almost by itself, has been pioneering some research in transit, as you know. The Urban Transportation Development Corporation, which is located in Kingston, I think has some exciting projects under way.

Mr. Nixon: But no sales.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, it is very difficult to make sales, because as you know full well that is where we run into the nontariff barriers of countries like the United States. One only has to go back to the Philadelphia tenders and see the strings that are attached.

Mr. Nixon: You have been pumping money into this for six or eight years.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Right; and if it works we will be heroes, if it doesn't work you will be able to criticize us; it has always been the way.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that interjection makes me look at the Latin on my left, sapere aude; freely translated it means, I would say, I am listening to saps. I took a lot of Latin.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the honourable minister answer the question and disregard the interjections?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would say you fit much more under the do-cendo discimus than the sapere aude section.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Non compos mentis is the one that applies to you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You are probably a Latin student; you must have been something.

Mr. Speaker, in fact it is a serious problem. The first letter I wrote following the budget, the only letter I have written to the federal Minister of Finance, related to the fact he was adding a 15 cent tax to that particular use of fuel. It seemed to me foolish at the very least, no matter what his fiscal problems were, to add a tax to transit when transit had to be one of our major ways to go about saving energy in the future. First of all, I would do whatever I could to see that we encourage Canadians to use it.

I suppose if there is an advantage at all to the tax you referred to, the 25 cent tax, it is that it will surely make rapid transit or any form of public transit more dollar attractive than it was before. That doesn't excuse or in any way justify the 25 cents, but it certainly means a number of people are going to look at the cost of driving private cars and perhaps rapid transit will get some encouragement.

Mr. Bradley: A supplementary: Since many of the local transit commissions are now ordering buses in anticipation of increased usage, and the time limit on receiving them seems to be about nine months to a year from a major supplier, yet there is an Ontario company which can supply at a much faster rate, is the government giving any consideration to some special assistance outside the regular grants that would go to these commissions, some special assistance in regard to purchasing buses in anticipation of what this government and what the federal government seems to anticipate as a definite crunch coming in terms of energy supply?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Our grant structure, and the Minister of Transportation and Communications will correct me if I am wrong, is roughly 75 per cent for capital purchases. That is a pretty generous grant. It's also fairly heavy on the operating side for a number of the transit commissions. With the great flow of oil revenue going to other provinces or federal authorities, perhaps the federal government also has some responsibility in that field. Perhaps some of that massive cash flow it talks about reinvesting in energy conservation measures should be directed to this area.

SUPERMARKET PRICING AND CHECKOUT SYSTEMS

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. It concerns elimination of the individual pricing by supermarkets on their products. He will recall that on October 19 he said within a brief period of time he would be making a report to this House. Then again on November 23, he said he would be reporting before the end of the session. As it is almost now the end of the session can he make a report today, and if not when?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I said I would make it before the end of the session. Let the honourable member show up next week.

Mr. Swart: I might say that I will be here next week, but I would also add that when the minister is considering that matter for his report, would he pay attention to the study done in the United States by three university professors called A Research Report Conducted for the Ad Hoc Committee of the Grocery Industry for the Development of a Universal Product Code? It was a survey of shoppers which showed three times as many shoppers gave the wrong in-store price in the UPC stores than in the conventional stores; and only 21 per cent in the UPC stores made comparison of prices, as opposed to 32 per cent in the conventional stores.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think that makes up the supplementary question.

Interjections.

Mr. Swart: Can I finish my question, Mr. Speaker? I asked will the minister give consideration to this, and in view of this kind of report which is available, will he assure this House he is going to bring in a bill to prohibit the elimination of individual price tags.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

REPORT

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee reported the following resolution:

That supply in the following amount to defray the expenses of the Provincial Secretary for Justice be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980:

Justice policy programs, $46,400.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL CHILDREN'S LAW REFORM AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 205, An Act to amend the Children's Law Reform Act, 1977.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF TREASURY AND ECONOMICS (concluded)

On vote 901, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further discussion on item 1, vote 901? The honourable member for London Centre.

Mr. Peterson: I would enjoy going to the mat with the Treasurer, Mr. Chairman, if you could find the little squirt. Excuse me, if you could find the diminutive Treasurer, if you could find that steward of the province's finances.

Interjections.

Mr. Peterson: I am just curious, Mr. Chairman, has he sent his surrogate in the name of one of these gentlemen to defend his estimates, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: He may have, if we can be patient and carry on for a moment we—

Mr. Nixon: What do you mean, carry on? How can we carry on with the estimates without the Treasurer?

Mr. Peterson: Is it guilt, Mr. Chairman? What is it that can possibly keep that man?

out of this chamber at this time? I could tell funny stories, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You may proceed. I don't think there's anything that necessarily requires the minister to be here.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Chairman, that's an excellent point you make; perhaps we would accomplish more if he wasn't here. However—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You have the floor.

Mr. Peterson: I must say you are the authority on the House rules, and if that is your ruling as chairman, that the ministers don't have to be here to defend their estimates—

Mr. Nixon: Here is the answer to all of our problems.

Mr. Peterson: Then of course I will accede. I am very happy to see him. Is that pink pills for pale people you are taking now? Perhaps he was out changing his socks for the estimates, Mr. Chairman.

I gather this is the last session we have with this gentleman, and there are a number of things I would like to ask before we discuss the significant issue, the budget of Tuesday night and the Treasurer's response thereto. I would just like to put a few suggestions to the Treasurer on matters I already have discussed at some length and on which I wasn't particularly happy with the responses.

Maybe we could just have a little dialogue about the question of tax expenditures I was one who was very encouraged with the late John Crosbie's introduction in the House of a tax expenditure study showing what has been spent. It has been revealed, according to his figures, that we have spent something like $32 billion in tax expenditures—was it $32 billion or $30 billion? I thought it was $32 billion but I stand corrected if that's the case. Would the minister be prepared to do a similar kind of study in Ontario so we can have enlightened dialogue on this very real question?

As you recall, I introduced in this House private member's legislation to force a study of tax expenditures. I don't believe that bill was ever debated. It is something I would like to bring back, though, because it does bring to light an area of policy in the financial field that hasn't been fully and well discussed historically and I think it's time to engage in some of those discussions. I would like to see a study of tax expenditures, to show what it is costing the province and what are the benefits flowing therefrom. Would the minister be prepared to do that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's an interesting point, Mr. Chairman, and I would like, seriously, to think about it. I don't have any basic reason for not doing so. I am told that a couple of years ago we had a staff paper called The Scope of Fiscal Policy in Canada, which looked into certain issues. I am not sure it contained the data you are asking for. Let me take that as a suggestion without saying I have accepted it; let's say I am leaning more towards saying, "I see no reason why we shouldn't."

Mr. Peterson: We are making a little progress. The minister is very conciliatory this morning. I am glad he made it back from the scrummage in the hall.

As you recall, we did introduce an amendment two or three years ago on the fast write-offs of production machinery, asking for a new study. It was a worthwhile point of view, as were the minister's studies, with questionable conclusions, about the first-time homeowners grant and the cut in sales tax and that kind of thing. If he intends to embark upon that kind of a program again in the future, which he obviously contemplates at election time, at least we will have some information on which to make those kinds of decisions.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That will do you for a couple of years, you mean.

Mr. Peterson: You may just need it next week. You better start thinking about that kind of thing.

The SBDC we discussed a little bit. I remember our discussions very well. You weren't sure about how it was going to work and I wasn't sure, I made some reasonably dismal predictions. It is probably not quite as bad as I predicated, but it is reasonably bad. You have had investments of what, $400,000?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes; and commitments of a lot more.

Mr. Peterson: I don't know what they are and you don't seem to know what they are. I understand the commitments were $432,000 something.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's the actual cash invested.

Mr. Peterson: That's the actual cash in eligible investments?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes.

Mr. Peterson: Okay, so the transfers in the province were 30 per cent of that; really it is peanuts.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Let me correct you a second. If I recall the legislation—and we are looking for the data sheet which could give us the exact figures, somewhere around here we have it—the cash the province pays, the 30 per cent, is paid as the investor's money is placed in the SBDC, not when the SBDC invests it in an eligible small business.

A number of corporations have been formed, several of which have requested the full $5 million authorized capital level. The list I read off the second day we were talking, totalling whatever the figure was, $450,000 or whatever it was so far invested—and that sounds low to me but it could be right; four, five, seven are digits that come to my mind—those were the actual investments by SBDCs from their capital into eligible small businesses.

Mr. Peterson: That's what I said.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Okay, but that is not quite the same as the 30 per cent. The province pays the 30 per cent when you, a shareholder, puts your money into the SBDC, not when the SBDC put it into an eligible small business. You may recall when we debated the legislation we talked about what happened to that. There is a complex formula where three sevenths of your investment is released from the trust fund each time you put your money into an eligible small business, because three sevenths of the company's capital is in the trust fund, which is the money the province gave them.

Mr. Peterson: How much has the government actually paid out?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Ministry of Revenue administers it. I can't give you that figure. If one of my staff can get it in the next few minutes I will be glad to put it on the record.

Mr. Peterson: Have you studied the SODEQ, the plan of Mr. Parizeau, which differs quite substantially from your own plan? Have you studied that one? I would like to hear your views on that, and whether you feel that may or may not be a more satisfactory kind of approach to this question. It reaches a little different marketplace; it is aimed particularly at higher income types.

He had a different kind of problem he was trying to solve, getting the tax differential down because of the discriminatory tax load Quebec residents carry. I understand all of that, but as an investment vehicle, as a vehicle to encourage research development, stimulate new enterprise in the province, apart from the investment in public companies one can make in Quebec, have you studied the effectiveness from the point of view of creating new enterprise?

One of the things we talked about at the beginning was that I wasn't sure the SBDCs, and I am still not convinced, were going to be a stimulus to new enterprise and capital investment in new kinds of businesses, but were just going to be an alternative source of funding for businesses that could survive on their own. I was quoting Wayne Beech, who didn't take the point of view that his company should be investing in new enterprise as much as in established enterprise.

Have you studied the Quebec example to find out which is more effective to accomplish the aims I articulated? I am paraphrasing you because your fundamental objective is the same objective I have.

Hon. F. S. Miller: During the pre-budget discussions last year, the SODEQs were in place in Quebec. There were two of them in existence at the time, that is my recollection. The independent small businessmen who came to see me referred to them, talked about them in glowing terms and suggested that Ontario take a good hard look at the SODEQs. Staff had been looking at them, but they followed the advice of that group and looked at them some more.

I wish I had the kind of money that would allow me to recite all the pros and cons of the SODEQs versus what we eventually ended up with, but some of the things that come to my mind are, for example, that they could invest in loans rather than only in equity.

Mr. Peterson: Which I urged you to do.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If the member recalls though, again going back to our debate, an SBDC is limited to having 70 per cent of its available capital in an eligible small business, and it must maintain that on average. The other 30 per cent is available to be put out on loan or invested in some form not required by the basic 70 per cent.

Mr. Peterson: But that is not necessarily debt in a small business?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Not necessarily, no. It could have been in a certificate of deposit in a bank.

Mr. Peterson: That is my whole problem. I want to get that debt into—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Let me say I'd be pleased to compare again the progress over the past year in Quebec with their SODEQs and in Ontario with our SBDCs. The member will find the SODEQs were about a year old.

Mr. Peterson: Six months.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Okay, in effect we're really six months old with ours right now.

We had 18 the last time I was given a figure. We certainly have more being discussed, because I have been involved in discussions as to whether the spirit and intent of our legislation was being accomplished by the aims and objectives of some about-to-be incorporated SBDCs.

Let me say that the ingenuity of the investment community, which I have always admired, comes to the fore when I see the ways they are considering using SBDCs. All I have to do is assess whether it's accomplishing the goals we talked about here; I think it is.

Up to the point where this piece of paper was prepared, and I don't know how many days ago that was, this is a week or so out of date, there were 18 SBDCs. Those SBDCs had issued $2,151,200 worth of capital. Grants and tax credits paid or payable to them came to about $645,000. Now of that only $323,600 had been paid.

Mr. Peterson: I hope it works. I said that then and hope it now. As I suggested then, there are different ways to handle it, and I probably would have handled it differently. I like the concept. I assume your staff is doing ongoing reviews of the efficacy of this. I guess there's no way to get to the minister before next year's estimates, but if he is doing a staff paper, an internal review, this is not a great partisan issue and I would be most grateful if the minister would share that with me. It's one of those things that everyone in the House wants to see work and wants to have work properly; we're all trying to make constructive suggestions to that end.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Can I just say one more thing if we're changing topics? Are you going on with SBDC any more?

The Northwestern Ontario Chamber of Commerce, the member may recall, came in to see the cabinet about two weeks ago. In their presentation they suggested that there were few, if any, SBDCs in the north. I'm not sure that's true by the way, they may have thought there were none; however, the money certainly is going to the north, to at least three that I've followed.

They've suggested that one of our dreams, that there would be small SBDCs in local northern Ontario communities owned by a few local residents, wasn't happening in the north because of the $250,000 as the lower limit for the capitalization. They suggested that it needed to be $100,000 in the north. I told them I was favourably disposed towards that wind of a change if it wasn't either too difficult or impossible to pass in the House.

I'm not sure whether I require a regulatory—I think I require a statutory change to do that. My deputy says it's statutory. This means we would have to agree that it was worth trying. We had to agree it was for everything or just for the north or just for rural Ontario, or wherever you want it; but I would be appreciative of your views.

Mr. Peterson: Read Hansard. I was the one who argued your limits were too tight; there was too little on one hand and too much on the other hand. I argued at the time that $250,000 was too high for some of the stated purposes in specified areas. What you have just said vindicates exactly what I said and if you read Hansard from our discussion on that bill you will find that out, very much so.

I will permit our party to support that. Let me say this; don't do it just for the north, that's pretty tough to administer. Do it for the whole province. Why not? Why shouldn't Walkerton or some of the other small towns or rural communities be allowed to do that? If a rural group wants to get together to put up a cheese factory or a processing plant or something like that, why shouldn't they? Don't strap them with that. I can tell you from my point of view I didn't understand the $250,000 limit from the beginning. I don't know where you got the number. I still don't understand it. I would be prepared to let it be very much lower than that.

Their problems are the administrative, accounting, and legal costs of doing it for too small a number. Costs are going to be as much as they will be for a more expensive one, for a richer one almost, but surely that's their prerogative. If you are going to encourage indigenous free enterprise across this country in building little enterprises, surely you should use that as flexibly as you can. I can assure you we will support any amendment along that line.

On the other hand, for the pros, the syndicated ones and investment companies who become involved, if you want to take it from the $5 million limit up to $10 million or take it off completely then I have no problems with that, as long as the purpose is to build enterprise and providing it's not just turning into a tax dodge and just an alternative source of conventional funds. You have to satisfy your regulatory people and your bureaucrats have to satisfy you that advantage will not be taken. The object is not a tax dodge, the object is to create new enterprise.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You and I are completely in agreement there. When we have been looking at some of the SBDCs, that has been the basic kind of test we are using. For example, are we simply allowing somebody to get assistance for something they would have done anyway?

There is going to be some of that, I have never denied it. However, I am intrigued to see that where the syndicates are starting to talk about public SBDCs, they are now beginning to believe they can re-establish a market we lost some time ago in an area of particular interest to us and to the north. This is helping the small prospector and developer get himself back into an area where he can be financed, and it is tapping a group of people who haven't necessarily been active in investments in the past. The small public SBDC allows people to buy whatever they decide, say $5,000 worth of shares in a company where they may know they are taking a very high risk in a prospecting development operation or a pool of them in the north.

You saw in the paper the other day where I think Kam-Kotia Mines Limited was a vehicle through which an SBDC was used; it is an eligible small business by definition. It had an investment which was put into a number of properties—not into Kam-Kotia which appears to be not a holding company per se, but a company administering a number of small claims and operations.

We were interested in that and we had to go back and look quite hard at the purpose of the SBDC. First it was getting small investors to put up small amounts of money; that's good. Secondly, it was getting prospecting and developing done and the possibility of some of the present smaller fellows getting investment; that was good.

I would say objectives I espoused as Minister of Natural Resources and to which I couldn't find a way through the Ontario Securities Commission's strict rules were being accomplished.

The other part is this: there is undoubtedly in the structure of the SBDCs the right to replace debt with equity. You know that. If a company has a mortgage it can replace that mortgage with somebody coming along and putting cash in as equity.

There will be those who argue that that does nothing for us. On the other hand I would argue that in a time of high interest it is the very kind of assistance the small businessman desperately needs. He needs it to get the load of debt off his back and to get it into some form of equity, or some form of less-than-common-share equity, that at least has advantages from a tax point of view that permits the lender to come in at a lower cost of money.

Mr. Peterson: That being said—I don't want to be unfair to my friends in the NDP; they want some time—there are a few things I would like to discuss, if I may, this being our final day.

We've talked about the pension thing and I want to get back to it. I don't want to get into all this stuff that the Haley commission is going to worry about and the contributions to the Canada Pension Plan and all that kind of thing. My views are very well known on this issue. The Treasurer and I have talked about this at great length before. But I do want to talk to the Treasurer about one aspect of that and find out his current views. A year ago his views were very much in flux, as I recall. He wasn't exactly sure what the problem was, let alone a solution. This was just after he had been appointed Treasurer.

I am sure the Treasurer has spent this last year familiarizing himself with some of the very difficult financing problems we shall be faced with in this province in the 1980s, in connection with the CPP replacements and the teachers' superannuation and all that kind of thing, and the massive amounts of capital we're going to have to obtain from the system somehow, either by tax increases, expenditure cuts, or by going to the public market to pay back those borrowings, essentially of the last decade. I don't know if the Haley commission is going to deal with this matter or not. To be perfectly honest, I suspect that will be only a peripheral part of the report, not the main thrust.

I would like to hear the Treasurer's current views on those questions—what is going to happen in 1983 or so, when we start running into the negative cash flow of the CPP; what's going to happen in 1985 when we start looking at repaying—

Mr. McClellan: We will go to pay as you go.

Mr. Peterson: We're going to have to go to more pay as you go, whether we like it or not. The Economic Council of Canada has vindicated almost every single thing I have been saying about this very thorny issue for the past two years. From a personal point of view I was very happy to see that report brought out.

Mr. Nixon: I thought it was everything. What do you mean almost?

Mr. Peterson: Yes, they came to a number of conclusions, a number of very important conclusions on this issue and they're all difficult. They're all politically impelled, they all cost money; they all say we're going to pay more now to put a little away for later.

But that aside, what about these thorny financial problems we're going to face? How does the Treasurer see the situation now? Where is he going to get the dough? What are his plans?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I made some comments a few months ago on this. I'm not quite sure where it was. It wasn't in this House. I think it was a speech somewhere or answering some questions from the press.

I'm not saying the commissioner called and said, "Please don't compromise my report," but I got a message that it was a difficult stage in the study and perhaps the Treasurer offering solutions wasn't the best thing to be doing whilst a major paper was being finished.

Mr. Peterson: I don't accept that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: What we did do in the meantime, and I'm sure the member looked at it, was put out the paper 16, a discussion paper on the funding mechanisms—pay as you go, or funded—their effect on the economy—

Mr. Peterson: That's not the issue I'm asking you about.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I recognize that; to a small degree, though. The member is saying the Canada pension fund is a pay-as-you-go plan.

Mr. Peterson: Did I say that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member is implying that it will become one because it isn't funded now. I would read it that way.

Mr. Peterson: It is partially funded.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Partially funded, sure. But in effect it becomes a pay-as-you-go fund if, once we pass the breakeven point, cash has to be made up from the current revenues of government to maintain the benefits people are getting.

Mr. Peterson: Just so I am clear, there's no sense in wasting a lot of words. That's not the question I'm asking the Treasurer about today. I'm asking him—I'm not even asking him to project because he's going to cop out and say we'll wait for the Haley report to come out. The Treasurer destroyed his own argument when he said he's not prepared to comment, yet he had three bloody position papers he published two months ago. He can't have it both ways. He can't say he has no position, that he is going to wait for the Haley report to come down, and at the same time say he is a generous fellow because he has published three position papers.

The Treasurer has some views; they are developing. I'm concerned about the one issue and that's what I'm asking about. I'm not asking about pay as you go versus fully funded versus partially funded because I don't expect he is going to answer that question. He is going to wait and fool around with that.

What I'm asking you is about the financing requirements of this province. How are you going to pay back—not five years from now when we're going to have to move to a pay-as-you-go plan, but what you've borrowed already? When are you going to pay back the $10 billion or so you borrowed in the last decade, plus the billion or so in interest you will owe at that particular time?

Where are you going to get that roughly a couple of billion dollars a year for CPP, plus all the other stuff; the unfunded liabilities of teachers' superannuation and all the other funds? Where are you going to get what amounts to in the real sense fresh money, money you don't have now, money that is not shown or provided for anywhere in your budget? Where are you going to get that money? What are your plans? Are you going to the capital markets? That's the question.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You've made a great issue of trying to differentiate debt owed by the province to accounts for which the province has responsibility or, the federal government has responsibility, such as the teachers' superannuation fund, the public service superannuation fund or the Canada Pension Plan, because today the revenues from those funds exceed the demands upon them in some cases.

I would like to draw to your attention that if I went out to the market today like Hydro does and borrowed money from a set of borrowers, there would be a term on much of it, an interest rate, and there is every year a rollover of maturing issues. Is that correct?

Mr. Peterson: I guess so.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In some years one increases the public debt and in some years one decreases it. Since we last talked we've retired somewhere around $380 million worth of debt that was not owed by government to government, or to agencies of government, or to pension plans of government-related employees. For example, the $325 million treasury issues were retired and we retired some long-term debt as well.

When Hydro does that, of course, these days it's with a net borrowing requirement. They have to roll it over and pay a higher rate. If we have to roll it over, we have to pay a higher rate, so your servicing costs will go up.

I was looking at the federal government's budget—I'm not passing the buck—but it's the most up to date one and their servicing costs were going up 19.5 per cent this year. It was the fastest growth in their budget. Ours are going up somewhere around 14 per cent or so.

Mr. Peterson: It's still the fastest-growing part of your budget.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I might also point out interest in our budget is one-half of what it is, roughly, in the federal budget.

Mr. Peterson: It was 9.2 today and growing at the fastest rate of any item in your budget.

Hon. F. S. Miller: What have we done? We have done exactly what I preached yesterday. We have decided consciously to keep lowering the cash requirements of this province until it is not adding to its debt. That puts us into a position where, I would suggest to you, we have the fiscal capability, first, to release those moneys to go into the regular market. Second, we have the fiscal capability to meet our obligations on them.

Mr. Peterson: I don't understand that. Even if you make your objective of a balanced budget by 1984, where you have no net cash requirements—and I hope you do—that won't solve the problem I'm talking about. That means you don't have to borrow any more at that point, but you've still got to pay back the $10 billion, $15 billion or $20 billion you have borrowed.

My question to you is you have always prided yourself that you've never gone to the public market, with the exception of 1975, which was an aberration, we all admit. You said you were never going to go to the marketplace. Where are you going to get it? Where are you going to get this money? Is it your plan to go to the public market in those years to borrow that money? What are you going to do?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm not as gloomy as the member is.

Mr. Peterson: I'm not gloomy, I just want the facts.

Hon. F. S. Miller: One of the things I was talking about was having a higher rate of payment into those funds so the cash flows into them increase again. You know that. That's the very issue the royal commission is talking about.

Mr. Peterson: Is that your position, that the contribution rates should go up?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's the part I'm staying away from while she is making her report. You can say I'm ducking the issue all you wish. The fact is that I feel it is wise at this point to do that.

Mr. Peterson: How can your response be to me that the rates are going to go up, because you don't know what your position is?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I didn't say I didn't know my position. I had a great belief that we were going to sell that issue at both the provincial and the federal level. Ontario, in terms of the Canada pension fund is not the final arbiter, but it has to have some influence on the final decision.

I am just looking over some information on debt. May I read the note directly into the record? There is no use trying to interpret it:

"Nearly two thirds of Ontario's funded debt, or close to $10 billion, matures in the 1980s. Seventy per cent of these maturities will be Canada Pension Plan debt, with a further 17 per cent accounted for by bonds, issued to the teachers' superannuation fund.

"This maturity bulge does not represent a major problem"—that is where we disagree—"because existing contractual relationships with the Canada Pension Plan and the teachers give the province the capacity to negotiate rollover loans if it so desires and the amount of maturing debt on an annual basis represents only one to one and a half per cent of the projected budgetary revenues of the 1990s."

Mr. Peterson: I understand what the deputy minister is saying, but I am saying to you that, first of all, that CPP money is virtually call money, it is 90-day money. Am I right?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Twenty years with a six-month call, somebody says.

Mr. Peterson: Is it a six-month call? I thought it was a 90-day call, but anyway, it is almost demand money—it is not demand money but it is short term and they can call that if they run into worse troubles than they anticipate.

All I am saying is you are not going to be able to borrow any more from them in 1985, barring an increase in contribution rates. Even if the contribution rates are increased, as I am sure they will be, and provide a new tax on already burdened taxpayers and burdened employees—another payroll tax—pretty soon we are going to reach the limits of our capacity to tax everybody in this country.

Do you know what unemployment tax is proposed by your friends, the increase in unemployment premiums and the gas tax and the surtax and then another increase up to seven or eight per cent for CPP? We are going to tax the whole corporate sector and the private enterprise sector right out of business in this country, because I can tell you there are a lot of people right now who are worried about Ontario's capacity to stay in a competitive tax position, not only provincially, but with the additional federal burdens being placed on this economy.

That is a real problem and you know it is a real problem. Other jurisdictions in this country are starting to look far more attractive. Other jurisdictions in the United States, relatively speaking, are looking more attractive from many points of view.

I don't know if we are going to get anywhere with this question. Frankly, I am no further ahead than I was a year ago on this. I just don't see where you are going to get the dough, because I don't see that you've got the plans in mind. It seems to me your only choice, because you have burned up or will have spent and used to capacity all your internally generated funds, is you are going to have to go to the public market place.

This is what I am asking: Do you see yourself going to the public market and for how much, and in what year?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is always difficult looking down the road, because obviously the budget of Tuesday, should it be implemented, as I mentioned yesterday, is moving into some of my tax room, which is something that concerns me greatly.

If Ontario has 21 cents a gallon on gasoline, the federal government now has 25 cents plus 6.1 cents. They have a tax of about 31 cents on a gallon. I think the sum total of their tax is about 31 cents now, I am told. We have 21.

We argued, when they first moved into that field, that they were basically invading a domain that we traditionally would look at to see if there was room for us to occupy and from which to take our needs. They have done so and they have left us very little room to manoeuvre.

Our tax, unlike their new sales tax, will not be free to change with the value of fuel unless we reconsider it all. Obviously, I am going to have to do some hard thinking in the next while.

I would point out, when one looks at the percentage of gross provincial product that has to be raised within a province from the province's own resources across this country, Ontario looks very good. So that when one asks what tax rates are being applied and how do we compare with other jurisdictions,

I would say, with the exception of Alberta, we still look excellent. The statistics are all around us to refer to if we have to. I read something into the record a few days ago and I would suggest we are still in a well-run state.

I think we have treated some of the issues, like the teachers' superannuation fund—and you may not agree with me—more honestly than some of the other jurisdictions have. At least we have set up the contingent liability. I think we have a requirement to look at it to find, not the contingent, but the unfunded portion of it at any time and if we have to pay for it over a period of years, we do so. I think we have been paying about $50 million a year on that one issue just to make up the difference.

Mr. Peterson: It was $144 million last year.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We had a couple of years to catch up, though, didn't we? Every three years we adjust it as the actuaries look at it. Those things have been taken in steps to make sure the pensions don't get out of hand.

Last year I assumed that only government was the culprit in this kind of thing. If you look through last year's text when we discussed this—I had just finished reading a book, I think you suggested that I read it, on the Canada Pension Plan's problems—I felt quite strongly that government, with its indexation at the federal level in particular, was leading us down a road that was going to take us to some kind of disaster and that industry probably was minding its business and giving its benefits in a much better way. Probably on balance it is.

I have listened to a couple of the awards given recently by some major corporations. I have looked at some of the stated unfunded liability of some of the private plans. I would point out it isn't limited to the government. It is something, sadly enough, very few people are really interested in, even amongst the negotiators I suspect; in other words, the people who give the benefits away or the people who demand them.

I have often argued that perhaps we should be allowing a good many people more choice in whether they have a future benefit or a present benefit.

Mr. Peterson: I am glad to see the Treasurer is just starting to understand this issue. This is the most significant financial issue that the Treasurer of this province faces and he doesn't know it. I have been trying to impress that upon him.

I have made 20, 30, 50 speeches in the last year on this issue, anywhere anybody will listen to me. The Treasurer is right about the private sector. God, it is in more disarray than the public sector and the public sector is in total disarray. You have to start.

One of the things I asked the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) about—and I was so happy to see the introduction of this resolution by the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie). He started the debate in this House on the pension question. I didn't happen to agree with everything he was saying, but at least we are starting to talk about it.

The member for Armourdale (Mr. McCaffrey) is developing some expertise on this particular issue and is concerned about it as am I; this is a most complicated issue and anybody who pretends to know it all is kind of silly. Surely we can impress the gravity of it on the minister and ask him to do something. He has to do something in the private sector too, even though it may not be his ministerial responsibility.

I have argued with my friend, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, that he has to start with some disclosure legislation. The level of knowledge about this whole question, both privately and publicly, is abysmal. Unfortunately people don't care about it. It is not the kind of issue that affects someone or they even think about until they are 50 or start to think about retirement. It is not the kind of issue that has any immediacy for young people. But they have to start to understand what they are paying, what their rights are, the security of the fund, how it is being managed.

There has to be new legislation in this House for the private sector. I urge the Treasurer to work with the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations because if you run into the situation and it's not possible where a major corporation in this province goes into default and you are sitting with 10,000 or 20,000 retirees on the payroll, you have a very significant political problem whether it is your responsibility to step in and assist with this or it isn't. We saw a microcosm of this in the Prestolite case. That is just one example.

The reports of the unfunded liabilities in the private sector are absolutely staggering and far exceed the assets of some of these companies. The Treasurer was right; they haven't taken a total compensation bargaining view. It's easier for management and, respectfully, people in government, to give a pension benefit because it doesn't come out of their immediate payroll, it doesn't come out of their immediate expenditures this year. It is something future management, future governments, future taxpayers, future shareholders will have to deal with. We have to take a much tougher view in the whole collective bargaining process, look at the total compensation aspect and say, "You can make a decision, you take it now or you take it later, but you can't take both because we can't afford it."

We necessarily have to take a more responsible view of our own responsibilities to pay our own way and set aside for ourselves in the future, because we cannot expect future taxpayers to do that for us, it is immoral. Not only that, with the changes in demographics, when there are fewer people in the marketplace, more retirees, fewer people contributing to the gross national product, you have a crisis on your hands—I didn't want to make this speech but the Treasurer forced me to.

You have a crisis on your hands. Trust me. You don't understand. All I can do is when I am a grandfather, I can look at this speech in Hansard and I will read it to my grandchildren and I will say, "Well, I told him so." Because I am frustrated, I don't know what to do and I don't even get the perception you understand that much about it, you are impressed with the gravity of it, or that you know what to do about it.

Take it as a matter of priority. Disagree with me. Tell me I am crazy. Tell me it's a problem. I know if you study it you will realize it's a problem in all sectors and you will do something about it.

You talk about the federally-indexed pension plan for civil servants which I happen to disagree with because it is so totally underfunded. But you have a situation like that with the teachers' superannuation fund today. Your unfunded liability is $1.4 billion, your effective contribution rate is about 15 per cent a payroll a year. All you are getting out of it is borrowing that money back at low market rates to fuel your silly deficits. Now you are the author, this government is the author of the weakness of that plan, those funds should never have been touched.

I just commend again to the Treasurer the reading of young Chris Lett who used to work for you. I wish you still had him because he is one of the most sensible people in the pension business in this country as far as I am concerned. He is now in private practice but he foresaw some of these problems. The former Treasurer gave us glimmerings that at least he understood it and he made little noises here and there about increasing contribution rates.

But had you not had your grimy hooks on those pension funds you accumulated—they are under your jurisdiction—I can say you would have seen a lot more fiscal responsibility out of this government in the past 10 years. You would have seen much better funded pension plans. You would have seen more investment in plant and capital, into private enterprise in this province, you would have seen less unemployment with more real income and a lot better situation than we are at today.

That was like catnip that fuelled those deficits. I have argued the availability-fed demand thesis that you have spent everything you could get your hooks on. I didn't want to repeat myself but I am obliged to. I still don't see the way out of this thing.

I just go back and quote my old friend Grant Reuber, now the Treasurer's friend the deputy minister of finance in Ottawa, who says and has said publicly this is a crisis that is more significant and more important to the financial future of this country than the energy crisis. Those are the proportions. I wish the Treasurer would please start on all fronts and start with Consumer and Commercial Relations, start with disclosures, start with portability, start with those kinds of questions. Get the level of public debate up.

I have my own ideas as to a solution of the dilemma you are in on the teachers' super-annuation and all that. You should turn it back to the teachers, you should buy your way out of it. Turn it back to them and let them run it. You negotiate every year and say what your contribution is going to be, but it's going to cost $1.4 billion to get out of it because of the problems we inherited in the past because that is virtually an indexed fund. It is going to cost $1.4 billion to get out of that fund, because that's the unfunded liability, rather than accumulate these deficits in the future.

This is something that makes me angry and if I could make one tiny contribution as a politician—and I have reconciled myself that it's probably impossible to move you guys in any way, sitting in the position I am—but if I could make one contribution in my dismal little life spent in politics, this has to be the one I would like to impress upon you, to move you just a little bit to at least look at the issue. I don't know how to do it and I would like your ideas on it because it frustrates me to no end and I am so unhappy to see the lack of knowledge at a political level.

I am sure your staff guys are aware of it. They must be. They are pretty intelligent people. But it's so easy not to do anything about it because all of the solutions are politically unpalatable, and we know that, but we also know that the crisis, when it comes in 10 or 15 years, is going to be almost impossible to get out of or at least the price we pay as a society is going to be so much higher than the one we start to pay now if we do it gradually and over a period of time.

I understand the political inertia on this question because it's not going to get you any votes. It's not going to get anybody any votes and any solution is politically unpalatable. It's going to be unattractive. It is going to cost more. But if you leave it for 15 years, whoever has to solve the problem at that time won't be able to solve it without some very serious disruptions and without a galling economic yoke around the necks of our children.

We have no right to do that. I know your staff guys know that. I would be very surprised if any of them disagree with me because they are economists, they are trained in it. But it's action on a political level because all the political debate on this question is, "We must increase pensions and we must look after people who are in trouble" and all that kind of thing and that's part of this problem. It's part of the dilemma we are in today as a nation. But I can tell you, and that's a different speech for a different time, if we don't solve the fiscal arrangement, the financial aspects of it, I can tell you there won't be anything for anybody when it comes down the road.

So there's my annual speech, Mr. Treasurer. I am sorry to bore you with it but I really hope next year, after the Haley commission report comes out, we can really have serious discussions on this issue that involve all members of the House discussing all aspects, because there are many aspects, not only financial but moral and social aspects too. I hope you will act on that. I hope you will bring in legislation and I hope you will make that a top priority for your government to deal with that issue. Anyway, I am totally unsatisfied with the answers I have received to questions I have asked, but I don't think I can extract any more of your hide.

Now, back to your statement. I want to complement the Treasurer. That's a pretty good statement that you made in response to the budget. I don't have any fundamental disagreements. You used a little rhetoric that I probably wouldn't have used. You've got the old Crosbiean disease of blaming the previous 16 years of administration but that's fair enough because in fairness, I blame you. If they have got 16 years worth of sins, you have twice as many years worth of sins and we will get you for that in due course.

What this points up to me—and I only disagree with certain details. Your thrust is right. If you have to characterize it, it is a massive revenue grab. The federal Minister of Finance is asking the Ontario taxpayer, the Ontario consumer, to pay off the federal deficit with not nearly an equitable or concomitant investment in energy conservation, in renewables or any of the kinds of things we have to do to take us over the next decade. It's an obvious fact that in his plans to balance the budget—a noble objective, and I understand probably as well as the minister does the problems he had to deal with—he has dealt a terrible kick in the teeth to the consumers of Ontario and, apart from issuing statements, I think you have to think of something very serious to do about this. I don't want to just sort of get down to this business about campaigning, defeating the 58 members, I don't want to put the discussion on that level.

I don't know what you can do but you must take extremely strong action. You must mobilize almost every force you have to make sure we don't get that extra kick, because as you rightly point out in the statement, the great load of those ill effects of that budget is going to be carried by the consumers in Ontario. The other jurisdictions are insulated, and are protected against some of the vicissitudes in this budget. We aren't.

As we were discussing the other day, there is a great deal of resentment against Ontario; you know that and I know that. They feel that Ontario has had a free ride for too long and hasn't made the adjustments. You know the Lougheed arguments every time they sit down at the desk: "Ontario have been the fat cats all these years. They have wasted it. They are the highest per capita energy consumers in the country and they are not investing in plant and capital. It is running down, it is creaky and it is rusty. If we gave you a better price, you would just waste it, anyway, so why should we?" You know those arguments.

There is some legitimacy in his arguments. He is quite right in saying that your government has not moved fast enough, has not moved with enough vision and enough judgement, enough guts, to make the kinds of adjustments in the economy to the inevitable, adjusting to something you know is going to happen. The rest was just details, matters of degree, how much, when, but it is going to come.

I don't care who is elected in the next federal election, and I don't care what kind of deal is hammered out—and maybe it is only going to be $2 next year as opposed to $4—but we all know the direction we are going to be going five years from now and we know where we are going to be, so let us work on those premises. Let us put the majority of our energy there.

I think this budget is a very rude shock to the taxpayers and the consumers of Ontario. In the old days, we used to look to taxpayers paying on the ability to pay to cover federal deficits. This excise tax of 18 cents is now a tax to cover a deficit and that is really an extraordinary kind of thing to do, particularly when they are going to increase the price of that same oil $4 a barrel in the same year, compounding the question with a tax upon a price increase, and asking us, as the largest consumers, to pay off the deficit. It worries me very much. They add on the surtax—and again we have 40 to 45 per cent of the industry and business in this country—and they add on the other little grabs. As you rightly point out, again we are getting ripped off on the unemployment insurance provincially.

This is a very serious kick in the teeth for the consumers of Ontario and I would urge the Treasurer to do every single thing he can, including urging a moratorium on this thing until the federal election is over, in terms of this government yelling and screaming and using all of their political might, what little they have and all of the political efficacy he has, spare as it is, to try to impress upon the federal Treasurer what a very serious problem we are facing over this budget.

I am most despondent about it. It is too rude a shock. I am in favour of facing the realities, but it is far too rude a shock and we aren't getting the investment back, we aren't getting the recycled dollars back here the way we deserve, concomitant with our contributions to the overall national scene.

I would urge again, in the absence of some kind of new accommodation on these matters, that you now rightfully can claim your equalization and you should do it. What else have you got? If you don't, you are just blowing the whole thing.

Maybe you want to respond to that, I have no idea, but I am pretty unhappy with it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I will talk briefly about the comments on pensions. I have been very interested in pensions in the last year and I had a great deal to learn. I have never really been shy about admitting that.

I have taken the time to talk to a number of people within the business. I've listened with great interest to the member because I happen to feel he's talking very sincerely on this issue. I'm not satisfied that—

Mr. Peterson: I speak sincerely on every issue, Frank.

Hon. F. S. Miller: More sincerely on this issue, then—

Mr. Peterson: It's a matter of degree, but I'm always sincere.

Hon. F. S. Miller: With more conviction perhaps. Yes, I'm under the third degree during this estimate debate.

The fact remains I'm not sure things are quite as bad as the member says or quite as good as governments like to say they are. Our budget paper 16 outlines the kinds of problems we're facing today in deciding whether today's taxpayer should pay, under a funded system, a fair share of the cost of what he receives, or what employees should pay in a company today and have those moneys put into relatively safe places.

The member assumes that if the government didn't borrow some of those moneys in the Canada Pension Plan they wouldn't be in government's debt portfolio. The member assumes then that it would be borrowed by somebody else. Now who would borrow the money the Canada Pension Plan is using?

We would say it would be free to be used for the economy, fine. Yet a moment ago the member said the very fear he had was that some of the industrial plans are sadly under-financed and when the companies go belly-up, the don't have any resource for management to pay their obligations to their retired employees.

Mr. Peterson: Just a minute, what kind of non sequitur is that? That's a ridiculous thing you just said.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would argue—

Mr. Peterson: Well, don't say silly things.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Let me finish my argument. The member is trying to say that somehow on the one hand people in private pension plans may be at risk because the pension plan may not be properly protected and they may not get their benefit if something happens to the financial stability of the company, right? On the other hand the member is saying the government won't be able to meet its obligations.

I would argue that governments have had a very high record of meeting their obligations, even though it meant taking certain unpleasant decisions like taxation further down the line. That then brings it back to the issue of how do we distribute that load? Is it all put on future taxpayers? And you and I, because we're a little older—

Mr. Peterson: Don't include me.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Well, Bob and I. I won't include you.

Mr. Nixon: Didn't Alberta repudiate their bonds at one time?

Mr. Peterson: Didn't Germany?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That they did, Germany did, yes. But I would say that apart from major wars—I don't know what happened to Alberta's bonds. Did they ever get paid off?

Mr. Peterson: You know what? Don't reply, Frank, you're so superficial you are embarrassing yourself.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm not embarrassing me, but I may be embarrassing you.

The fact remains I am satisfied that you will see a gradual change at the government level—the federal level—controlling pensions that will see the needs are met, the commitments are met and the ability to pay remains.

When we get to the oil revenues, the very argument Ontario has used about the 18 cents or 25 cents sales tax has been that it should not have been a field taken by the federal government. We've agreed on that. Where can the federal government get its share of the money if it needs the money to offset its fiscal problems? And it does need it.

One of the weaknesses I saw in the proposed structure to divide the moneys flowing from increased prices for oil was that no one tampered with the share going to the producing provinces. They said that no matter how the price was raised to meet whatever purposes the federal government had, it would be for the fiscal or energy policy purposes. Then the 45 per cent flowed to Alberta or Saskatchewan.

My argument is that that isn't fair. If decisions are being taken to raise the price for policy matters, I think that the producing province doesn't necessarily have the right to say that a certain percentage remains constant. Why should the federal government have to raise the price past $2 per barrel per year before it gets more than 10 per cent?

Mr. Peterson: That was our statement two weeks ago.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Why then should it confiscate 50 per cent of it from there on leaving five per cent for the oil companies and 45 per cent still for the province?

I would have argued that this should be reduced at the provincial or the owners' level simply because we're making arbitrary increases in the price at the federal level. I would argue too that governments that find huge sums of money flowing into their coffers really have lost the ability to say no to almost anything their electorate may wish.

Mr. Peterson: Witness you and the CTC and the teachers' superannuation.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I didn't say that was the case at all. I'm only saying that when you're having debt-free money flowing into your coffers at the rates Alberta now has it flowing the need of governments to be judged efficient by the levies of taxes upon their citizens diminishes, their need to be able to say no to projects they may not want drops.

That is why I said to a group not long ago I had very little trust in letting government pass the money through and recycle it to the consumer, because in passing that money through the Alberta heritage fund, or through the Alberta government or through the federal government and back to the consumers, there is a big overhead. That big overhead adds very greatly; therefore I would have argued that at the very least there should have been a restructuring of the split of the oil revenues before talking about excise taxes and, therefore, possibly eliminating the need for the excise tax which traditionally was a field that our group was in.

I only suggest that kind of argument will carry on. Ontario obviously has to defend the rights of its citizens and we will do so.

Mr. Makarchuk: I would like, if I may, to continue this. In listening to my friend from London Centre I have a feeling that if he had been in the Clark cabinet he would have written the same type of budget that Crosbie presented two or three days ago, with, it would be hoped, the same results.

I was just listening to the minister talk about the passing through of money to the government and the big overheads that develop and the problems, and so on. He forgets the report of the Ontario Economic Council and I just happen to have a copy. Just as an example: Family allowances, old age security, and so on; the cost is less than one per cent; in provincial allowance programs which are welfare programs and so on, the cost has stabilized at below five per cent.

The mythology that both of the other political parties live by is rather mind-boggling. As I have said before in this House, I am glad these people weren't in charge in 1939 when the problems were much more severe than they are today, when we had about 20 per cent of the population unemployed, when the country was in great economic difficulties and we had to fight a war.

As I was listening to the discussion earlier about the deficits, the problems we are going to get with our pension plan, the charges on the taxpayers and so on, one could imagine if my friend from London Centre was in charge at that time, he would be saying: "Look at the problems; we're going to have to fight the war; look at the borrowing we are going to do, the yoke that we will place on our children in the future who will have to carry this big load."

The point there is that during those periods of time the Canadian government incurred deficits of about $2 billion per year at a time when the GNP was only $8 billion, in other words about 25 per cent of the GNP was in deficit; in comparison, the national GNP right now is $200 billion, on which we could sustain a deficit, on a similar parallel, of about $50 billion.

The country didn't go broke, it didn't fall apart. If anything, the country prospered. The people went to work, we started off on an economic boom, we industrialized ourselves; we did all sorts of marvellous things and we managed to pay off that money.

We're not saying that you have to embark on useless programs or start building tanks or planes or ships, but there are certainly enough items, enough necessities in our public sector in which the government could get involved. This preoccupation with the deficit—we've got to cut it down, we've got to have zero deficit et cetera—is utter nonsense.

I would like to point out to the minister that in West Germany, which has a much lower unemployment rate, a much lower inflation rate, a pretty strong currency—

Interjection.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, no; when they had to have surplus labour they brought it in, but the point is their unemployment rate is much lower than ours.

The other factor is that their government spending, is roughly between eight to 10 per cent higher than ours. Eight to 10 per cent more of the GNP is spent by the federal government. They're not worrying about this mythology of big government, they're not worrying about the mythology of deficits, and they manage to run their economy.

The problem here is the financial calcification that seems to permeate the two political parties; that is really the problem you guys—to use a slightly non-parliamentarian term—have absolutely no new ideas. You are not prepared to look at different measures;

you are not willing to examine some of the economic techniques that are used particularly by western European countries—

Mr. Peterson: What do they do in Libya, Mac? Maybe you can tell us.

Mr. Makarchuk: In Libya, they operate in the same way as they do in Ontario, in terms of ensuring that certain social needs are met, in terms of unemployment, in terms of inflation and so on.

Part of the problem we have with inflation is if you have a pile of savings and your savings are deteriorating at a faster rate than the interest rate, you naturally are prepared to go out and spend the money because there is no point in keeping it around. In Germany, as an example, the government is prepared to pay interest on savings at a rate higher than the inflation rate. That encourages people to save money instead of spending it. It seems to work. Perhaps the minister should consider it. Is he using the Ontario Savings Office at this time? I think in comparison with other banks it is about a percentage point ahead.

This is an item I have raised before. I think very seriously that is an area the Treasurer should really expand. The new Bank Act is going to be amended some time in the next couple of years. I think the province of Ontario should go there and get the right to operate a banking system in Ontario, to enlarge the Ontario Savings Office, so it has the opportunity to lend money, so it has the opportunity to be of assistance to small business, instead of some of the programs you have on stream right now.

One of the really serious problems for a small businessman is he is not in a position to go through all the red tape, to go to Bay Street, to go to some other places and find some individual who is going to lend him money. He doesn't know where to go. He doesn't know who to see. He doesn't have the contacts, or anything of this nature. We would like to have some local institution that could make a local decision, where he can go and get the money, in contrast to the regular banks which are rather reluctant at times these days to get involved in that kind of thing.

Every manager is protecting his backside. For fear of making a loan that may not be paid back he doesn't make any loans at all; or if he has the option to make a loan it has to be approved somewhere else. He is limited to about $20,000 or something of that nature as the maximum amount of the loan. The people in Toronto decide who gets a loan in Brantford or Orillia or Gravenhurst. That certainly is not a sensible way of doing business.

I would like to hear the minister's comments on the idea of expanding the Ontario Savings Office.

The other matter that has been discussed here is trying to raise money. What the government of Canada did during the period from 1939-45 was it managed to raise money within the country; we could do very much the same in our current situation. We generate more capital in Canada than we invest in this country, but there is the problem of outflows and everything else. However, I think that on a selective basis the province of Ontario can operate in terms of using savings bonds, as the federal government does, to raise money in Ontario so the income goes to the people of Ontario. If there is any income, a certain amount of it will be coming back to the Ontario treasury, just as the federal government getting its bite out of the situation.

I don't know why, and this has been raised before, since there are short-term treasury notes, et cetera, you don't go out and sell Ontario savings bonds to the people of Ontario to ensure that the money is left in Ontario and recirculated in Ontario.

I would like to hear the minister's comments on these matters.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I guess this is where we part company to a large degree. In one way there is a provincial bank functioning, only it functions in different categories. The Province of Ontario Savings Office I believe was created at a time when there was a need in the agricultural community a long way back. These offices take money in these days, but don't really lend it to anybody but the province of Ontario. It does pay a slight premium over the normal rate, although these days there's a lot of competition.

At the same time, you have the Ontario Development Corporation making decisions to lend money to small businesses, in effect acting as the lending arm of a bank.

I would have to tell you that while there is obviously a large role for ODC, I have grave misgivings about the intrusion of government into those areas of business best handled by the private sector. I'd have to question whether the Province of Ontario Savings Office is still the viable entity it was when it was created and whether it's meeting needs, or whether the money for the province's needs can't be raised in the normal fashion. I simply don't trust the province, or any other government, to run a bank efficiently and make the decisions as well as the banking sector itself would make.

I have to tell you I've got more confidence in my local bank manager than you have. I don't know what kind of experience you personally have had in getting small business loans. Have you ever had a business loan in your life?

Mr. Makarchuk: I probably ran a larger business at a younger age than you've ever done in your life. I think I have some experience in the matter.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Are you bitter? I don't know how young or how big; I don't ever pretend to have been a big businessman. I was a little businessman. If you're a big businessman and a member of the NDP it means two things: You didn't get the money at the bank and the business went down the tube.

Mr. Makarchuk: On the contrary: I want to correct the record. The business did not go down the tube. I sold out my share in the business and I haven't looked back since that time. I may point out that back in 1955, Mr. Treasurer, I was running a business—

Hon. F. S. Miller: In Brantford?

Mr. Makarchuk: No, it was in Sudbury, in Elliot Lake. We had the Hertz, Tilden and Avis Rent-A-Car agencies, until Hertz found out. We had to divest. On occasion however, shall we say, the gross was close to $200,000 a year at that time.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, to put things in perspective: I was the Tilden dealer in Muskoka; my gross was a million dollars a year. Is that okay? However, that's the gross of my whole agency and not just the rental part.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: At this point, I don't think our various achievements are going to do much to help the advancement of the business of the province.

Hon. F. S. Miller: He challenged me, Mr. Chairman.

In any case; the local bank managers, I have found—oh sure, there's the odd sleepy one in the odd sleepy town—but in the main, a local bank manager is very clearly related to his client group. He's got a pretty good feel about who is a competent manager and who isn't. If he's a cautious person he may refer a good many of the minor decisions on to head office. If he's aggressive he will take a very active role in helping them. But I have to tell you I've seldom been turned down by a bank manager when the deal was reasonable. In fact, I can't recall when I've been turned down at all for anything.

I have to tell you, though, when I've dealt with some governmental agencies, and I've had experience with a couple of those, the process is enough to increase the profits of the LCBO handsomely before you're through. I would have to argue the decisions are better made in the private sector, and that perhaps the role the EDF is running these days of guaranteeing some of those loans is much better than being the prime lender. I would only point out that I have that kind of confidence, since Canada's banks, particularly since the 1966 or 1967 Bank Act change, have been very aggressive and have done a good job.

By the way, can I just read one thing into the record? I was just given a note that the Prime Minister of Canada has announced that all the budgetary measures introduced as a part of the budget on Tuesday evening will be withdrawn.

Mr. Makarchuk: Do we get a refund on the gas we bought, the 18 cents extra we paid?

I can see the minister's ideological persuasion, the feeling that governments cannot do anything properly and they can't operate the banks. The point is if you talk to the small businessman, again what they basically say is they're not really happy with the way the banks operate. They put them through the hoops; they put them through the wringers; they do everything to them before they come up with some loans. The fact is in the banking business there really isn't any competition. If you had a provincial bank that had some, shall we say social responsibility towards some other things besides just maximizing profits, perhaps you would have the other banks acting in a more responsible or more sensitive manner in comparison to what is happening right now.

The minister's assumption that the businessmen are happy and the banking system is perfect, or close to perfect, is a lot of nonsense. That is not the reality at all.

In the matter regarding ODC, there is no question that it tries, in the experience I have had with it in referring people to them, but in the process some have been helped and some have not. Generally it ends up that fairly major corporations are able to avail themselves of the assistance.

I want to continue, Mr. Chairman, on one other item, which is the Ontario home repair program. If the government at any time has any program, or has looked at any programs which create jobs in an area where they need to be created, it is the home repair program. Admittedly, we have discussed this under the Ministry of Housing. What that minister said was that the Treasurer only allows him so much money and that is all, and he dishes it out the best way he sees fit.

I want to stress that if the government is really interested in helping small business, that is one of the programs that does help the local businessman, the small contractor, the plumber, the electrician, the roofer, the carpenter and so on. If somebody ever did an evaluation of the jobs created with the money spent in that program, I think he would find the maximum returns in comparison to probably any other program.

When the program was first initiated I saw, in Brantford in particular, that a lot of small contractors were able to acquire new equipment under this program; were able to acquire better facilities and to go into something bigger, or were able to go out into the private construction field because of the assistance they got, or because of some of the things that were done to help their ability to operate in these areas.

I would suggest to the minister that in the future, next year for example, he should triple or quadruple the amount of money going to that program, because the effect it will have on the province of Ontario will be very evident, not only for the small businesses themselves, but of course in the social benefits that flow from that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is a very popular program, certainly in my part of the province at least. I believe in most members' ridings it has helped many elderly people stay in their homes while doing the things the honourable member has mentioned. Each year we have to look at our priorities and decide whether the $20 million that it currently gets will or will not change.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if at this time we could ask that we proceed with the regular votes.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I am prepared. Earlier it was agreed that the party critics would have a pretty free run. We are still on vote 901, but time is getting on and we have the vote on the supplementaries as well, so we will call them if it is the wish of the committee. I don't want to cut anybody off. The member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, I will try and be as brief as I can. I did want to raise a few things with the minister, though, about property tax reform, although I know it is not something that is specifically listed under the votes in this ministry.

On the other hand, both during the revenue estimates and the estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs we were told quite clearly—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I will let you proceed on the basis it is going to be very brief, but if it is not in these votes it is out of order.

Mr. Charlton: That is the question, Mr. Chairman. Both of the other ministers made it very clear that the Treasurer is the minister responsible for policy in the area of property tax and property tax reform, that is a question this government agrees to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: If you are going to make a long preamble I shall have to rule it out of order. If you want to put the question very briefly, I will permit it.

Mr. Charlton: Since time has run so short, Mr. Chairman, I will be as brief as I possibly can.

I want to urge on the minister, as strongly as I can, that property tax reform is a mess we have been into for some 12 years.

We had a strange situation two weeks ago where things got so tense the Liberals actually took it upon themselves to stand and refer the postponement bill out of the House into committee because of a considerable amount of honest and serious concern on their part about some of the things they saw.

There is a considerable amount of misunderstanding in this Legislature about where we are going and what property tax reform is all about. A year ago June, when Mr. McKeough, the former Treasurer, announced the last postponement, he said quite clearly that the Ministry of Treasury and Economics would be continuing to work to try to solve the problems. However, in this session of this House we have heard absolutely nothing about exactly where we are going.

The Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) has gone into the section 86 equalization program, but the Minister of Revenue made it abundantly clear that the section 86 program, although it provides some benefits and some small measure of new equity or more equity, is not the answer and was never intended to be the answer; it is an interim measure.

Everywhere I have suggested this it has been said to me that the Treasurer is the one who is responsible. I want to suggest to him we have had a number of tax studies and reports done by the Blair commission, by this ministry itself and by the joint committee in 1978, and none of those studies has ever been dealt with by this Legislature or by a committee of this Legislature. The understanding of the whole question of property tax reform is not growing at all in this Legislature. There are very few members who understand it at all.

I think it would be of great benefit on two counts if the Treasurer were to take it upon himself to go to cabinet and suggest that we refer the whole matter, and all of the data and studies that have been done, to a committee of this Legislature. It would be beneficial from the point of view of creating a better understanding in this House generally, and perhaps it might even develop a good, substantial understanding on the part of the 10 to 15 members who served on the committee.

The other major ultimate benefit would be that anything that came out of the committee could be a serious indication to the Treasurer, and to his colleagues the Ministers of Revenue, Intergovernmental Affairs and Education, of those areas where we can find some agreement in terms of property tax reform, which perhaps would give us some better basis from which to proceed.

The comment was made by the former Treasurer, by the Minister of Revenue, and probably even once or twice by the present Treasurer, but I don't want to pin him with it, that there has been no co-operation from this side of the House and that we haven't been supportive. The reality is that we have not had anything to support or oppose.

Getting this whole matter out into the open, amongst the members of all three parties in this Legislature, is going to have to happen before we can ever resolve the whole question of property taxes. I urge the minister to seriously consider some method of getting this matter before the House or a committee of this House.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the minister wish to make any reply?

Hon. F. S. Miller: In the interest of time, I had better not. I am certainly studying these matters very seriously.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: We have before us now all of the votes of the Ministry of Treasury and Economics.

Votes 901 to 904, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That completes these estimates, save for the supplementaries.

Vote 903, supplementary, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That completes the study of the estimates of the Ministry of Treasury and Economics.

On motion by Hon. F. S. Miller, the committee of supply reported certain resolutions.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY

First Clerk Assistant: Mr. MacBeth, on behalf of Mr. Edighoffer, from the committee of supply reports the following resolutions.

That supply in the following amounts and to defray the expenses of the government ministries named, be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Dispense.

Reading dispensed with. (See appendix, page 5554.)

Resolutions concurred in.

The House adjourned at 12:50 p.m.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

ONTARIO HYDRO TRANSMISSION LINES

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the House concerning actions being taken on two applications I have received from the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Wiseman) for approval to expropriate land on behalf of Ontario Hydro. The land is required for bulk power transmission lines between Claireville transformer station and Cherrywood transformer station, roughly across the north side of Metropolitan Toronto.

The general route of the transmission lines was established by Dr. Solandt during public hearings between 1972 and 1974. West of highway 48, the route was determined in detail during the parkway belt west planning and public participation process from 1973 to 1978. This route was given legal force by the parkway belt west plan, which was released on July 26, 1978. The Solandt route from Claireville to Cherrywood was incorporated in order in council 1466/78 on May 17, 1978, which authorized the Ministry of Government Services to acquire land on Ontario Hydro's behalf. Since that time, negotiations have been proceeding with the affected owners and many of the required properties have been purchased.

In September 1978, the Premier (Mr. Davis) and my predecessor as Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) met with representatives of the towns of Vaughan and Richmond Hill to discuss their concerns about the transmission lines which pass through those municipalities. During these meetings it was agreed that: (1) Ontario Hydro would be requested to consider adjusting the route of the transmission lines to move them further away from properties on Longbridge Road; (2) Ontario Hydro would be requested to re-evaluate the feasibility of burying the transmission lines underground between Yonge Street and Bayview Avenue; (3) Ontario Hydro and the Ministry of Transportation and Communications would review the possibility of design compromises which would minimize the visual impact of the transmission lines, particularly where they intersect with Yonge Street.

These three reviews were completed some time ago and have been discussed with the municipalities, members of the provincial Parliament and other interested groups.

I am very happy to announce today that some of the local concerns have been met by increasing the separation between the transmission line and the homes on Longbridge Road through a new alignment developed by the parkway belt steering committee. This new alignment is not without its disadvantages, including some crowding of the highway and transmission facilities and the reduction of further design flexibility. Nevertheless, in view of the concerns expressed, the government has approved the new alignment as an acceptable compromise. I will be tabling a copy of the steering committee realignment report today.

Unfortunately, a thorough examination has demonstrated that it is simply not feasible to bury the 500-kilovolt cable transmission lines, both for economic and technical reasons. These reasons are set out in detail in Ontario Hydro's study of undergrounding, which I am tabling today.

It is also unfortunate that the visual impact of the transmission lines at Yonge Street cannot be significantly improved. To date, no one has discovered a way to make a transmission line look more beautiful.

On the basis of all of the extensive public reviews which have already taken place, my colleague the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry) is today tabling in the Legislature an order in council providing that the expropriation west of Highway 48 will proceed without a further public inquiry. With respect to the route of the transmission line east of Highway 48, different considerations apply.

Although there was a general review of this route by Dr. Solandt, the location of the parkway belt has not been determined east of Highway 48 and there have been no hearings under the Parkway Belt Planning and Development Act. However, following a review co-ordinated by the parkway belt steering committee, the general route of the transmission line recommended by Dr. Solandt was adopted by the government. As I mentioned earlier, order in council 1466/78 gives the Minister of Government Services authority to acquire land for Ontario Hydro in this general route.

I should also advise members that at the request of the Box Grove Ratepayers Association the parkway belt steering committee has examined three alternative routes near Box Grove. The steering committee's report, which I am tabling today, supports the route on the north side of the railway tracks. This is the route incorporated in order in council 1466/78. The route south of the railway tracks was not recommended, largely because of the number of homes that would be affected. The third alternative route would add considerably to the length and cost of the transmission line and was considered inferior for this reason. It was also not recommended by Dr. Solandt. The Box Grove Ratepayers Association has asked for clarification of certain matters in the report and this will be undertaken shortly.

As members know, it is the policy of the Ministry of Government Services to negotiate the purchase of land wherever possible and to use expropriation only as a last resort. Most of the land east of Highway 48 required for the transmission lines is already owned by the province as part of the North Pickering community. Rights of way have also been purchased from two private land owners and negotiations are continuing with the remainder. However, notice of the application to expropriate has now been served. Land owners east of Highway 48 whose properties are subject to expropriation may now request an expropriation inquiry.

As the approving authority, I may not make a final decision on the precise alignment of the transmission lines east of Highway 48 until after all land owners subject to expropriation have had an opportunity to be heard in an expropriation inquiry. It is anticipated that should such an inquiry be requested it would be held early next year. Following receipt of the inquiry officer's report, I will then decide whether to approve the requested expropriation.

Perhaps in keeping with the statement, I should table the following reports relating to the Ontario Hydro Claireville to Cherrywood transmission line: First, the report of the parkway belt steering committee on redesign of the parkway belt west, Bathurst Street to Bayview Avenue, May 1979; and second, the report of the steering committee on Ontario Hydro, 500-KV transmission line, Claireville to Cherrywood Box area, January 4, 1979; and third, the feasibility report on high voltage underground cable installation, parkway belt west, October 1978.

ALGOMA CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an announcement today regarding the ongoing labour dispute at the Algoma Children's Aid Society.

Further discussions between the parties took place last week with the assistance of the Ministry of Labour. I have now been advised by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) that these discussions have not been productive and that there is very little hope of a settlement in the near future.

At the same time, we have been advised by both the board of directors and by the local director that they are encountering major staffing difficulties in ensuring that high risk protection cases are served, particularly after over five months of withdrawal of services and with the holiday season approaching. Stated simply, some children will be in serious jeopardy if present emergency staffing levels are permitted to fall to the level anticipated over the next few weeks.

Over the past few months I have repeatedly stated to the House my concern that this not occur, and I have stressed the statutory obligation I have under the Child Welfare Act to ensure that essential child welfare services are provided. Given this situation, the government has decided, therefore, to undertake the following courses of action:

First, the ministry will continue to assist the board and local director to secure their own staff to provide emergency assistance. My staff will be discussing with the board and the local director what further actions must be taken to obtain such staff. In addition, we will be reviewing the situation on an ongoing basis in order to determine exactly what number of persons need to be present to deal solely with high risk cases.

Second, as of today, a small number of government staff with child welfare experience will join the agency to resolve the emergency situation which exists as we enter the holiday period.

It is hoped that help from our personnel will be short-term in nature until the board and local director are able, with our help, to secure external staffing to provide essential services. However, I want to be clear about my commitment to do what is necessary to ensure that the obligation I personally have under the Child Welfare Act is met; it is an obligation which I have both in law and in conscience.

I would stress, as I have on all previous occasions, that the assistance we are offering is solely because children, particularly children at risk of physical and emotional injury, should not be left to suffer serious harm as a result of this labour dispute. In my view, this is very different from actions taken to support one side or another in that dispute.

I am personally very unhappy that the strike has continued for the length of time it has. It was my hope that the recent discussions would have been more productive than they apparently were. Having said this, I have no hesitation about adopting the course of action which I feel the Child Welfare Act demands that I follow while this dispute continues.

In the meantime, I would urge the parties to take all possible steps to bring this dispute to an end. The Minister of Labour assures me that his officials will continue to be available to provide all possible assistance to the parties.

PROVINCIAL SPORTS POLICY

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Culture and Recreation, one of my most important responsibilities is to ensure that Ontario has a cogent policy for sport, fitness and physical recreation.

Such a policy must be sensitive to the times; and it must ensure that the greatest possible number of men, women and children have access to provincial government sport, fitness and physical recreation resources. It must ensure that talent can develop fully; that those who have the gifts and desire to excel will have the opportunity to do so. It must also ensure that the people of Ontario who pay the bills get the very best value for every tax dollar that is devoted to the field.

As honourable members know, the Ministry of Culture and Recreation is almost five years old. In that time, my ministry and others have been involved in the development of a number of inventive sport, fitness and physical recreation programs. Today it is my judgement that we have reached the point at which we need to step back for a moment, take a fresh look at what we're doing overall, assess its effectiveness and chart some directions for the future. It is therefore my great pleasure to announce that I am appointing Mr. Douglas Fisher of Ottawa to review our amateur sport, fitness and physical recreation situation and to advise the government through me.

Mr. Fisher, in my view, is uniquely qualified for this assignment. He is a well-known newspaper columnist and media commentator. Many honourable members will be aware that he is a former member of Parliament, a former chairman of Hockey Canada, and a founding director of the Canadian Coaching Association of Canada. He has had a life-long interest in sports.

The government does not believe that Mr. Fisher's review needs to be long, costly and tortuous. Consequently, he will start his review on January 1, at which time he will relinquish some of his present duties, and his appointment will terminate on May 31.

He will be responsible for considering the state of amateur sport, fitness and physical recreation in Ontario generally.

He will be particularly concerned with making recommendations designed to support and extend both participation and excellence. In that broad context, he will make recommendations concerning: The most effective means of utilizing provincial, local and institutional resources that are available now; the most appropriate mechanism for ensuring that the efforts of the federal government, provincial government and local governments, organizations and institutions are complementary and harmonious; and the ways that government can best co-operate with voluntary, corporate and individual efforts.

Mr. Fisher will be assisted in his work by members of my ministry's staff. Mr. Fisher will be contacting all parties in this House. I hope that all parties will give him the benefit of their experience and counsel.

I know all honourable members will join me in looking forward to the insights that Mr. Fisher will be bringing to the province with his report on sport policy.

GAS AND OIL PRICES

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege that arises out of an exchange in the House on December 11, and is found on page 5373 of Hansard as follows:

I asked a question of the Premier: "Would the Premier assure us he would use his good offices as the Premier of Ontario to help persuade the oil companies not to charge an additional 25 cents, if that is the price, excise tax on those supplies of fuels that are presently in the service stations."

The Premier replied, and I'll take a brief excerpt out of it:

"Mr. Speaker, I really can't believe the member for St. Catharines would advise me to counsel the companies to break the law. If a federal tax is imposed, whatever hour it is imposed, people have to pay it. That is a reality, that's something I hope even the honourable member will understand. I know it's hard, but that happens to be the fact. I can't advise anybody not to pay a tax and I would advise the member not to advise anybody not to pay the tax.

"With respect to the second part of the question, which has a little more logic than the first part of the question," and it goes on, Mr. Speaker.

I merely rise in light of the headlines which appeared in the weekend newspapers in which the federal Minister of Finance, in that case Mr. Crosbie, was quoted to say: Don't Pay Higher Gas Tax.

What I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, is that I was not counselling any one to break the law of this province. I was merely asking the Premier to intervene at a time when it would have been very useful and we wouldn't be in the difficulty we're in now in terms of rebating that money.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'll answer that very briefly, because I understand the member's point of privilege. When I say I understand it, my recollection was the member had urged me to tell people not to pay the tax. I think that's really what was suggested at that particular time. As is the tradition here when a budget comes down, the law has always been interpreted that the cost takes effect the day of the budget. If the Treasurer or the Minister of Finance so stated, if Mr. Crosbie in his wisdom has said that the tax will not apply, that is up to him. Being one of those who pays the tax, I am delighted that it doesn't apply.

With great respect to the honourable member, when I gave him that reply last week that was my impression of the law and the policy of the government of Canada. While he may deem it a point of privilege, I think in fairness he should understand what he is saying today in the context of when it was delivered last week.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the honourable member was given the opportunity to explain his point of privilege. He did it fully, and as he should do.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There's nothing out of order.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm afraid that the House may be misinformed as a result of the Premier's comments.

Mr. Speaker: There's really nothing out of order. If you have a point of privilege—

ORAL QUESTIONS

FEDERAL ELECTION

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Premier: the Premier is undoubtedly aware of the statement attributed to his Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), who is said to have said, according to the Toronto Star: "The time has come for some hard bargaining with Prime Minister Joe Clark." The quote attributed to the Treasurer is, "Our support should be, let's say, predicated upon their doing what we believe is right."

Is the Premier intending to accept the advice of his Treasurer? Is the Treasurer alone among all the ministers in taking that point of view; is the Premier determined to give unquestioning party loyalty type support to Mr. Clark, irrespective of what his policies are for the people of Ontario?

Mr. Riddell: As Hugh Winsor says, "Blood runs thicker than reason." I thought that was a pretty good quote.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted the member for Huron-Middlesex is so influenced by that distinguished columnist in the Globe and Mail and that he will always accept what he says. I can quote some things he has said that he might not agree with.

Getting back to the—I don't know whether it was the leader's question or opportunity for political statement—I haven't seen that particular report in the Star, and I apologize for that because I always read the Star very thoroughly, from cover to cover, but I am not familiar with that particular quote. If the Leader of the Opposition is saying that this government will continue to press this point of view, even though there is an election campaign on in respect to a number of issues, the government, of course, certainly will.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the Premier stated on September 15: "We took the view that to have a price increase which generated the kind of cash for the government of Canada, foreign oil companies and the government of Alberta which they could not possibly reinvest quickly enough to solve energy security problems, would be a mistake and a distortion and a clear raid upon the spending power of the average citizen of this province and of Canada as a whole," could I ask the Premier whether he feels that the price increase which has been put forward in the budget is in that category or whether he now finds that price increase reasonably acceptable?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are two points I think should be made relative to the question and following our exchange last Friday, when the Leader of the Opposition asked me whether I intended to support our federal leader? I said that I intended to. He then seized the occasion to tell me he was going to support their federal leader, who interestingly enough may turn out to be the same gentleman he didn't support last time, probably voted against, and who he said at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education was doing the country a great service by retiring. I expect the member will remember all of those things over the next couple of months.

That gentleman and that government, incidentally, like the member himself, was committed to world price for oil. Further, in terms of the basic issue about which I have expressed concern, that of distribution, the former government of this country had taken no steps; in fact they had established the regime which has presently led to the concern that this government has expressed over distribution.

If the Leader of the Opposition is asking if I'm content with the $4 that has been suggested—there has been no agreement concluded for 1980—of course I would prefer that be a lower figure. We argued vigorously for the maintenance of the existing agreement, which calls for one dollar on January 1. The government of Canada, and apparently the government of Alberta if they are close to an agreement, have accepted that point of view. They also accepted the $2 on July 1, which we had not argued for, and $1 October 1.

I think it fair to point out that the distribution of that $4 has not yet been determined. Part of the argument contained in that quotation read by the Leader of the Opposition did relate to the question of distribution and the question of security of supply. Security of supply relates to how much of that $4 will in fact be reinvested, what portion used by the province of Alberta in terms of the infrastructure support for any synthetic plants that may come on stream in the tar sands and what portion was to go to the oil companies under what conditions. If the Leader of the Opposition reads that quotation carefully, if he reads what the federal budget has said carefully, he will find out that in fact there has been no determination of three of those points, so it is very difficult to answer that question until that determination is made.

Mr. Cassidy: As someone who supported Ed Broadbent in 1971, supported him in 1975 and supports him unequivocally today, Mr. Speaker, I don't have the schizophrenia of my psychiatrist friend.

My supplementary to the Premier is this: Since the Prime Minister said on Friday that the federal budget will be the centrepiece of the Conservative Party's federal election campaign, the budget which both the Premier and the Treasurer so roundly condemned last Wednesday and last Thursday, would the Premier say whether the government has now changed its opinion of that budget or whether he is going to campaign for Joe Clark while continuing to condemn his budget?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am delighted to hear the leader of the New Democratic Party is going to support his national leader. I would have been surprised if he had done anything else. At least he has been consistent in that, unlike the leader of the Liberal Party of Ontario who, when he senses the weather is a little tough, is right behind them until their nose bleeds, then when it starts to bleed a little bit he sort of fades into the woodwork as he did in the last election. We had difficulty finding him during that confrontation. I am delighted to know that he will be on every platform with Pierre Elliott Trudeau if he is his leader in the next couple of months.

If the leader of the New Democratic Party reads very carefully what the Treasurer of this province said about the budget, he said some very positive things and some negative things. It may come as a bit of a shock to the New Democratic Party, but I can't recall, even in the years when there was another administration, when the Treasurer of this province unanimously accepted what was contained in the federal budget.

The only budgets I have ever been totally in support of have been those delivered by whoever happened to be geographically on my left as they were presented in this House, and they were all exceptional budgets. I supported every last one of them.

I really don't think it should come as any surprise or contradiction to find us objecting to certain aspects of the federal budget. Because the honourable member's party leader determined, for whatever reason, along with Mr. Trudeau, to force the people of this country into an election at this precise time—which was totally irresponsible of those two gentlemen in my view, to thrust the people of this province and of this country into an election in mid-February—I don't know why you would find it inconsistent for us to be supporting our national leader, even though we object to certain portions of the budget. We do, without any question.

I would also point out to the leader of the New Democratic Party that there are some of his friends in the great province of Saskatchewan, philosophically speaking who quite obviously accept some portions of the budget.

I might ask the leader of the New Democratic Party if Mr. Broadbent is going to go into Saskatchewan and say he doesn't agree with some aspects of the oil pricing policy? I bet he doesn't.

Mr. T. P. Reid: How does the Premier intend to reconcile an even deeper division between himself and Joe Clark on the question of what Canada is all about and the need for a strong central government as opposed to balkanizing Canada by giving more powers to the provinces? Again I would remind him of his quotation in his speech about nation building as opposed to province building. How is the Premier going to deal with that most fundamental division between himself and Joe Clark?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I never mind answering a question twice. It gives me an opportunity to remind the honourable member that is exactly what he asked me on Friday, almost word for word. I will try to vary the answer just slightly to add a little bit of interest, because I guess the honourable member is concerned that it wasn't reported via the television back in his own home constituency.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Rainy River Review.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It wasn't in the Rainy River Review?

Mr. T. P. Reid: It wasn't answered anyway.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Minister of Energy tells me it wasn't in the Rainy River Review over the weekend.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It was headlines.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh it was headlines, was it? Well anything to help a member of his family, I understand that. Blood runs thicker than water, as his colleague says. I expect he will be on the hustings if no one else in his party is.

I have expressed a point of view which does concern me. That point of view is the tendency that has developed, not in the past six months with great respect but over a period of time, where as a country there has been a tendency to emphasize, shall we say the growth or the functioning or the development of provinces, not as opposed to but on occasion perhaps inconsistent with what I think should be national objectives.

If the member would just think back, and people's memories are very short, the previous government of Canada did very little to bring other parts of this country together. Its economic policy never had any stated objective, any economic goals; it never had an energy policy. I am very tempted to become provocative and almost partisan when I am asked such a question as this, but please think back to the total lack of policy: no commitment to energy self sufficiency, no determination of the difficulty of distribution by the previous government.

I am concerned, and I have expressed that concern. I believe I will continue to express concern; nothing that the present Prime Minister of Canada has done has altered, in terms of the federal posture, what had been going on before.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Premier in the absence of the Minister of Health: In view of the decision which seems to have been reached regarding the increase in the OHIP fee schedule, a nine per cent increase, I believe, plus a certain amount of money in addition to make up for certain deficiencies, can the Premier tell us what commitment the government has received from the Ontario Medical Association that the medical profession will opt back into the OHIP plan, at least in the number that traditionally has been the case, around 90 per cent or so? What commitments has he received that the OMA will advise its members to opt back in and that in fact the members will do so?

Hon. Mr. Davis: In that the honourable Leader of the Opposition is a member of that particular profession himself he will understand that the OMA, as a matter of principle, for many years has not urged its members to opt into the plan. My expectation is that in terms of their official position, as a matter of principle, and I am not familiar with the detailed discussions, I doubt that was ever a part of the negotiation in any strict sense of the word.

The figures the minister has used very recently, I think in response to the Federation of Labour brief that was presented to us last Thursday, indicated, and I am only going from memory, that not only had the figures stabilized but there had been some modest decrease in the number of doctors who had opted out of the plan.

It is our expectation, Mr. Speaker, that because of the settlement that has been reached, because of the adjustment that is being made—internally as I understand it, within OMA—and because their fee schedule gives a greater priority to the general practitioners in terms of the fees they receive, these factors will not only stabilize the situation but it is to be hoped will encourage some of those doctors who have opted out to return to the plan. As I say, Mr. Speaker, the indications are that it has already stabilized and there has been a modest decrease.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, may I ask a two part question of the Premier? Is he, in the first place, satisfied that the fee schedule now agreed upon is comparable to those of the neighbouring provinces, Quebec and Manitoba for example? If he is so satisfied, as the second part of the question may I ask whether he is satisfied with the situation where about 17 or 18 per cent of the doctors are opted out of the plan? Is he going to take some action to get those doctors back into the plan, at least back up to the 90 per cent that used to exist, or is he satisfied if the number is merely stabilized at the present level?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, of course we would prefer that the numbers opted out decrease. I think one of the interesting figures that was used—and I may be wrong in this, I am only going by memory from last Thursday—was that since last April, of the some 38 million OHIP claims only nine per cent of the fees charged were in fact over the OHIP schedule. So while we had 17 per cent of the doctors out—I don't have the exact figure—only nine per cent of those claims involved fees above the OHIP schedule, which I think gives a slightly different perspective to it.

If the Leader of the Opposition is asking are we content, no; we would prefer that the figure go down. I can't guarantee him it will, but the feelings on the part of those who negotiated this agreement were that because of the added incentive or fee increase to the GPs, that the potential for a diminishing of that figure is there. I can't guarantee, of course, that it will happen.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the president of the OMA, in his immediate reaction to the negotiations, said that there was little chance the fee settlement would lead doctors to come back into the plan, would the Premier explain to us how is it the government could negotiate a deal that took doctors' salaries to a net of more than $60,000 a year in 1980, an agreement which will cost the taxpayers of this province $140 million additional in 1980, and yet the government could not lift a finger to get an agreement from doctors that they would come back into the plan and would not seek an agreement from the doctors to get on side, to stop extra billings and to take away this single greatest threat to universal accessibility under medicare?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I say, we are continuing to work with the OMA to achieve a reduction in the numbers. I think it is fair to state that the president of the OMA is himself an opted-out physician. It may be that would account for part of his own personal point of view as he expressed it. I would say to the leader of the New Democratic Party that unlike him, and he would bludgeon the medical profession of this province to conform to his own particular point of view, we don't intend to do that. We think there is still some individual freedom in this province and that includes freedom for members of the medical profession. I know he doesn't agree with that; I know he would put them all on salary, I know that he would have them all as public servants. I understand that he would bludgeon them into the plan by saying, "If you don't do it we are not going to give you any money."

I would say to the leader of the New Democratic Party that attitude or indication of how he would deal with people, really indicates to me very clearly that while he is in total support of Ed Broadbent he should be more concerned about what his party is doing for the people of this province. That attitude would be totally divisive. It would be divisive in this province and we don't expect we need to do it.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I take it from the Premier's answer that he is not satisfied with the present level of opting out and hopes that the new arrangement will attract a substantial number of physicians back into the plan. I can understand that policy, but I ask the Premier whether he has set a target in his own mind and whether he has set any time factor in his own mind for judging this? In other words is he giving the doctors, shall we say three or six months to get back up to 85 or 90 per cent in the plan? What are the guidelines he has in mind before some other form of action might be required to draw them into the plan?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I go on the assumption that if people are reasonable you have reasonable time frames. We have set no time frame for the medical profession. I think the Leader of the Opposition above some others, with the exception of two in this House who probably may have even a greater awareness of it than himself, would understand that if we did this we would never achieve what I think is a realistic and reasonable agreement.

I have no set figure. I would like to see a reduction, the Minister of Health would like to see a reduction, and we think the supplement that has been arrived at will create the kind of climate that will encourage members of the profession to opt back into the plan. We have no time table per se. We will evaluate it month by month to see how we are progressing.

Mr. Cassidy: Final supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: As long as it is not a repetition.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the Premier talks about the freedom of the doctors, can he explain why it is that health-care workers across this province, getting an average increase this year of about $1,000 per annum, do not enjoy free collective bargaining rights; whereas doctors getting an average increase of $5,600 in their net income are still free to charge 42 per cent more than that by charging the Ontario Medical Association tariff?

Can the Premier explain why it is that consumers, who should be free to get medical care under our OHIP scheme in Ontario, are too often intimidated from going to the doctor for fear of running into an opted out doctor who will bill them at a price they cannot afford?

Hon. Mr. Davis: As I tried to say to the leader of the New Democratic Party, who himself was there listening to the discussions last Thursday, I may be wrong in my figure but I think it was around nine per cent of doctors who were actually billing above the OHIP fee schedule. That is subject to correction.

I question whether the leader of the New Democratic Party is correct that people are intimidated from going to see doctors. Certainly the figures don't substantiate that nor do the numbers of people who at this precise moment are either in hospitals or in doctors' offices.

I take exception to the observation made by the leader of the New Democratic Party that those people who are very important employees in our hospitals are not part of a free collective bargaining process. He can argue because there isn't a right to strike in some situations that this is not free collective bargaining; in my view it is and they have had free collective bargaining. I guess we will just differ on the interpretation.

FEDERAL BUDGET

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask another question of the Premier. Since the Premier has now confirmed the overall opposition to the federal budget, which was enacted by himself and also by the Treasurer during the statement he gave in the Legislature on Thursday, would the Premier tell us whether representatives of this government intend to go on the hustings with Joe Clark over the course of the next 60 days to reiterate the fact that the federal budget will cost Ontario 20,000 jobs, to reiterate the fact that the budget will raise inflation by 1.5 per cent, and to reiterate the fact that over the next four years the increases in oil and gas prices and taxes enunciated in the federal budget will take $16 billion from the people of Ontario? That is the equivalent of three Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Funds. Will the Premier be taking that message to the people of Ontario during the course of the federal campaign?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would suggest to the leader of the New Democratic Party that he take what message he wants on the hustings with his leader. I don't think it will make any difference as a matter of fact but take it, and just watch and see what I or any of my colleagues say during the course of the campaign.

I don't really want to reiterate what I have said already, not only today but on Friday. Just to restate, though, because the honourable member has asked the question, that there are some parts of the budget to which we object. There are some parts of the budget, and he had better be very careful in his overall condemnation, about which a number of people are quite content. I think it is fair to state that even some people who might philosophically support his party, but not necessarily himself, would have that particular point of view.

I would just urge the member that if he wants to fight the election campaign in this Legislature that's fine, but I would just suggest I'll wait to hear what he says on the hustings, if anything, and the member might also wait to hear what I say.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: On Thursday in this Legislature, in talking about this government's commitment to Ontario consumers, the Treasurer said, and I quote: "Whatever the government in Ottawa, despite our political affiliations, the government of Ontario's responsibilities and duties remain constant."

On Friday, Mr. Speaker, the Premier said, and I quote: "I am a Conservative, I remain a Conservative and my support will be for the national leader of our Progressive Conservative Party."

Would the Premier tell the House and the province which comes first, his duties to his national leader or constancy to the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, obviously my duties are to the people of this province, but I also have a duty, not just because of our system, in spite of differences to support that party and those people, I feel can best do the job. I have to say to the member, very frankly, that if he expects me to support the leader of a national party that is committed to nationalization and that is committed to limiting the freedom of individuals, if he expects me to support a policy that would lead to economic chaos for this country, if he expects me in any way to endorse his candidate, then I have to say to him "You are all wet"; and I think the people of Canada will say the same thing.

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to ask a supplementary question on this matter of possible conflict between one's role as a party leader and as the Premier. I believe, Mr. Speaker, and I say this without being provocative, that the Premier genuinely feels that the appropriate way for leaders to behave is to be loyal at election time to one's party, and then to fight as hard as possible to influence policy afterwards.

I understand that but I would ask this: Doesn't the Premier agree that the circumstances are different in this instance? In this instance the fight has already occurred. It occurred on national television and on every possible podium and platform. The policy has already been enunciated and would this moment be the law of land, except for the somewhat unanticipated events of last Thursday night in Ottawa. Therefore doesn't the Premier agree that on this occasion he has a somewhat unique situation of possible conflict between his party loyalty and his loyalty to the Ontario public? He lost the battle, but now unexpectedly he has a second chance. Why won't he use the second chance?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if the honourable Leader of the Opposition really thinks that a second chance exists—and one always hopes that while there are times to re-evaluate situations, that people can change their points of view, if not in terms of a total program in terms of some aspects of it, I always live in that sort of expectation—I would say to him with respect that if he is saying to me as Premier of this province that I should abstain from voting, not be involved, I have to tell him that if I have to make a choice between the present government and what his friends did not do in terms of the economic policy of this country—and he knew what their energy policy was; it hasn't changed yet he tells me on Friday, and I know why he's changed his mind, that he's going to support his federal leader whoever it may be—I would only say to him, with the greatest of respect—which is not really what I mean, I'm just trying to get his attention—that he should really assess what he has said in the past and what their policy was in the past. My view is that even though he will support his national leader, in conscience he will end up voting for Joe Clark.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has disturbed me greatly. I didn't expect him to endorse so heartedly every aspect of Ed Broadbent's campaign, but I have heard him distinctly say in this Legislature that he believes, as Ed Broadbent does, that Petro-Canada should remain in public hands and not be sold off to the private sector the way the Joe Clark government is planning to do.

Is the Premier now renegeing on his commitment to keep Petro-Canada in the public sector, or does he intend to campaign for Joe Clark so Joe Clark can take Petro-Canada out of the public sector, despite the Premier's opposition?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is not often, probably, that Mr. Broadbent agrees with me. I think that was really the historical way it happened. I still believe in the retention of Petrocan, and I am delighted to see the member's national leader has endorsed my point of view.

ALGOMA CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services arising from his very unfortunate announcement today about the decision of the ministry to send strikebreakers into the dispute at the Algoma Children's Aid Society in Sault Ste. Marie.

Could the minister say how much has been spent by the ministry in relation to this dispute up until now; how much is the ministry planning to spend to send strikebreakers into that dispute with the announcement today? Why won't the government take all those funds and allocate them to the Algoma Children's Aid Society so this strike can be settled and the regular work of the society can get back on the track?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I explained the situation, I thought, rather clearly in my statement. I realize the honourable member opposite responds with a knee-jerk reaction every time there is any reference to providing essential service during a period of withdrawal of service by employees of an agency. Nevertheless, this is clearly not a strikebreaking situation.

What we have here are children who are perceived to be or who may be in the next couple of weeks placed in a high-risk situation. I have a mandate as legislated by this Legislature as does my ministry and this government, to ensure that children are not at risk in this province. I fully intend to discharge that responsibility.

If that does require, during a period of withdrawal of service in a labour dispute when the parties seem not to be able at this time to resolve their differences, that my ministry respond in a way that will ensure children are not at risk, then we will do that. I am sure the people of this province would never forgive me if I didn't take action and one of those children suffered. I feel the people of this province would expect me to discharge the mandate this Legislature has given me, and I fully intend to do that.

I will not be engaged in strikebreaking.

Mr. Cassidy: You are.

Hon. Mr. Norton: However, I would suggest to the member that his proposal is more clearly strikebreaking than what I am doing to ensure the security of these children. The member is suggesting I inject myself into the middle of that dispute and come down squarely on the side of one party or the other. I am not going to do that.

What I will do is what I am doing; and that is to ensure that the children in Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma are not in a risk situation as a result of the protracted dispute. I will continue to do that and will spend whatever is necessary to protect those children. But I will not engage in strikebreaking or come down on one side or the other. Those parties must assume their responsibility in this dispute and come to a resolution of their differences themselves.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Before this House is flooded with the minister's concern about children in the Sault area and Algoma area, is the minister not aware this dispute could have been settled four months ago with $20,000, but could not be settled then because the Algoma society did not have the funds to do so as a result of the cutbacks by this ministry? Is the minister not aware his ministry injected itself into the dispute from the very beginning? It was the cutbacks imposed by this government which led to that labour dispute, which prolonged that labour dispute and which have kept children in that area at risk over the course of the entire five months.

Why won't the minister bring this matter to a conclusion by ensuring there is adequate funding so the Algoma society can settle the dispute, rather than continuing the crisis conditions, which are bound to prevail so long as the society is on an emergency basis or so long as strikebreakers sent in by his ministry continue to be used?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the honourable member that once again he is misinformed and misguided. I would like to point out to him that if he attributes this strike or the current situation to an issue of funding from my ministry he is wrong. That particular society has had an average of a 23 per cent increase each year since 1975. I'm loath to get into a discussion of specifics that are under negotiation at this point. I expect in the very near future—in a matter of a few days—there will be some statements made, not by me but by the parties.

At this point in those negotiations perhaps it is sufficient for me to say the offer on the table is the highest offer that has been made in that area of service anywhere in this province this year. The member should not accuse us of underfunding an agency which is in a position to make the highest offer anywhere across this province and put it on the table for negotiations. It seems to me there is room there for further discussion among the parties. I will not accept the allegation the member makes in terms of our responsibility in that situation. Those parties must assume the responsibilities they have as parties to that dispute and get down to business to resolve their differences.

Mr. Bradley: Could the minister assure the House he is not contemplating an action in the Niagara region, in the strike in existence with family and children's services, similar to the action the minister has undertaken in Algoma? Indeed the need is not there.

Second, would he also assure the House that his ministry will take whatever action necessary there to bring the parties together and bring about a resolution of that strike, which has been on now for a month and a half, rather than imposing a settlement himself?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, as we have been doing in Algoma, we have been monitoring very closely the situation in Niagara.

I would assure the honourable member that the circumstances appear to be substantially different.

I am assured that the levels of emergency service are being maintained very well in Niagara. From the inception, there has been a degree of understanding on the part of the striking employees and their bargaining agent with respect to the provision of services to children at risk. I am being kept briefed on a daily basis on the situation there. I do not believe there is any reason for my intervention in that situation at the present time.

If the member is suggesting that the services of the Ministry of Labour might be appropriately made available, I think that question might better be directed to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie). At this point, I personally know of no specific requests that have been made to him, but if the member wants to redirect that question, the Minister of Labour could indicate the situation.

Mr. McClellan: I have a supplementary which I would like to redirect to the Minister of Labour. I would like to ask the minister, when his colleague says that as of today a small number of government staff with child welfare experience will join the Algoma Children's Aid Society, if the Minister of Labour will tell this House whether or not in his opinion the use of government employees in a legitimate, legal strike constitutes strikebreaking?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Community and Social Services has made it clear that this is not a decision that was easily taken. He has a legislative and a legal responsibility to look after the care of children in the Sault Ste. Marie-Algoma region. He is living up to those obligations, with the assistance of the children's aid board and its executive director, to the best that he can. I don't consider that in this particular situation there is any strikebreaking activity.

CANADA METAL COMPANY LIMITED

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of the Environment, if I might have his attention.

Could the minister advise this House as to whether Canada Metal Company Limited has in fact now complied with the interim control order, which deadline was December 15.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't have that information today, but obviously it's easy to get. I'll give it to the member tomorrow, in response to that question.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: If the minister is going to try to find out whether they've complied, would he at the same time advise the House, if they have not complied, if he has instructed the staff to proceed legally in this matter?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, I'll confirm both; but I can assure the member that in this particular case there is not much doubt in the minds of staff whether or not I intend to proceed if the order is not complied with. The answer to that would be almost an automatic "yes." If we're talking about a matter of two or three days, or a very short period of time—and I do mean a very short period of time—then we might not proceed to court; but if we're talking about months then the answer is "yes."

AID TO CHRYSLER

Mr. Cooke: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. I'm sure the minister is aware, and if he isn't I'll inform him, that Chrysler has announced that as of January 15 they will have no money to pay their employees their weekly salaries. I'm wondering now whether this minister will show some leadership and some guts and indicate to the Congress and to the President of the United States that they must act quickly and get involved in negotiations with Chrysler so that 13,000 workers are not put out of work?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think I will contact the President of the United States and let him know that he ought to be acting quickly so that in the event they do bail out Chrysler I can rise in this House and take credit for the action of the United States of America.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I'm surprised that the minister and the Premier take this matter so lightly. We're talking about 13,000 jobs. Instead of trying to score political points perhaps the minister will show some leadership.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member have a supplementary?

Mr. Cooke: Is the minister aware that as of January 15 there will be no money in order to pay the employees of Chrysler Canada? What is he prepared to do, especially in view of the fact that the federal government of this country no longer exists and the federal minister seems to indicate that he cannot and will not take any action until the federal election is over? Will this minister contact the federal government and suggest that they go ahead and approve Canadian aid in principle, subject to American aid? Will he further contact the American officials and indicate his concern at their lack of action, since as of today the Congress apparently is not going to deal with this item until January?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I have indicated in this House before, we have indicated our intense interest to the federal government at all stages. We've indicated to the federal government that both they and this province ought to be poised to act immediately upon the United States ensuring that Chrysler Corporation will survive. That seems to me to encompass every single responsible move that a government in Canada, or in a province of Canada, ought to be taking at this time, and that is to put ourselves in a position to respond immediately upon understanding that there will indeed be a corporation in business with assets in Canada which need updating and improving.

The federal minister has been in as close contact with his American counterpart as he has been with me, and with Chrysler Corporation. All the facts are on the table and everyone is prepared to move. Everything awaits, however, action in the United States of America, in Congress.

Both Mr. de Cotret and ourselves have indicated to the appropriate officials in Washington that we think it's important that Chrysler Corporation be saved. I believe Mr. de Cotret, although the member would have to ask him, has indicated the willingness of the federal government of this country to do their part to assist in saving Chrysler Corporation.

I would say finally to the member, that the day I begin to take this lightly or play it for political purposes as he suggests, would be the day I send all of my mail with copies to the press gallery, as he does every day he writes expressing concern over the situation.

In the meantime, until I decide to play partisan politics I will do what I can privately with Mr. de Cotret and the federal government of the United States to try and emphasize the seriousness of the situation.

Finally I want to say one other thing.

Mr. Speaker: The minister said "finally" before.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That was semi-finally last time, this is final. The least constructive thing is to have the leader of the member's party stand up and use figures for layoffs which include those workers who have been laid off twice for one-week periods, as he did last week in the debate, where he took two sets of lay-offs, involving 2,400 who were laid off for one or two weeks at a time at different times and called that 4,800 layoffs in the auto industry in Canada.

That, with respect, totally distorts the picture and does the Canadian automotive industry a very great disservice while we're trying to bargain the best deal we can for Canadian workers.

Mr. Ruston: A brief question: Can the minister assure us that he and the federal minister will take action immediately if something comes about in the United States within the next three or four days? Is he prepared to take action immediately when they approve it over there?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Absolutely.

DURHAM REGIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL HEARING

Mr. Ashe: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. As the minister is aware, the Environmental Assessment Board commenced hearings this morning in the town of Ajax, in the region of Durham in the riding of Durham West, to consider a proposal by the region to convert an existing sewage treatment plant to a plant that would service and treat liquid industrial waste, which is a problem we're all aware of throughout the province. The hearings are being carried on under the Environmental Protection Act and I've had some questions put to me—

Mr. Speaker: You said you had some questions put to you. Will you put one to the minister?

Mr. Ashe: That's what I'm doing, Mr. Speaker, putting a question put to me to the minister. The question is the appropriateness of the Environmental Protection Act versus the Environmental Assessment Act. Does the minister think it is necessary to be involved, in this case, with the Environmental Assessment Act? If not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think in this case that the Environmental Protection Act will serve the purposes of this hearing quite well and in complete detail. As the member knows, the plant is being modified. I don't think there's any doubt that a hearing will give all of the details and will fulfil the requirements absolutely completely. There's no need to have a hearing under the Environmental Assessment Act. The Environmental Protection Act will do that quite nicely.

Mr. Ashe: Supplementary: Will the Environmental Protection Act allow the residents to voice all of their questions and concerns in the way of cross-examination of expert witnesses and members of the board?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes.

Mr. Breagh: Supplementary: When these hearings, which may well turn out to raise more questions than they answer, have finished, would the minister then be prepared to hold further hearings under the Environmental Assessment Act?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, and I'd like to amplify that a bit. The member says they may raise more questions than they'll answer. I must say to him that it's a disappointment that he didn't come to the open house, at least when I was there. I thought that week was a time when a great number of questions were answered. He may have been there, I'm not sure of that; certainly at the opening he wasn't. The report that I have is that that open house was very informative to the area residents, and certainly the hearing will supply any additional information. I hope the member will accept that this hearing is a very complete, full and open process.

FOOD PRICES

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, on November 6 the member for Welland-Thorold asked if I could explain why Canadians are forced to pay $1.05 at Dominion Stores for a 17.6 ounce jar of Kraft Miracle Whip salad dressing while in the United States at a super-market this is sold at 32 ounces for $1.07, or only two cents more than the smaller jar.

The honourable member compares a 17.6-ounce jar in Ontario to a 32-ounce jar in the United States, and there are some problems with this comparison. It hasn't to do with the obvious difference, it has to do with the difference in American and imperial ounces. I would hope that some people across the floor recognize there is a difference. Therefore a comparison is made between a 32-ounce US fluid ounce jar sold in the United States and a one-litre jar sold in Canada.

To proceed with the comparison, we have to convert the US 32-ounce jar into one litre. In doing so, we multiply 32 by 1.040843 times 28.41225. Believe me, I am not doing this for comic effect. I think the member will understand where we are going. This brings the price in the particular supermarket in Buffalo of a comparable one-litre product to $1.31 as compared to $1.56 in Canada.

The wholesale price in Ontario of a comparative size jar is 19.08 per cent higher than in the store in the United States. According to the figures we have, the production costs in Canada for the product are 17.3 per cent higher than in the United States, for four reasons. The ingredients cost more, especially the oils; the packaging costs more, because of double labelling; cardboard is presently in short supply, requiring long-term orders; and the production runs are shorter here. Therefore, the unit price at the factory is higher than in the United States. Also, there are transportation tax levels and so forth.

There is a 1.7 per cent gap between the 19.08 per cent higher price and the 17.3 per cent current higher production cost. This gap fluctuates, being affected by market conditions, which may move in opposite directions or at different time frames.

The product in the United States at that particular store was priced underneath the wholesale price. To prove that, the two products beside it were the 16-ounce jars of this product. The 16-ounce jars of the product were selling at that store for 79 cents each, whereas the 32-ounce was selling for $1.07.

I draw the attention of the honourable member to the Sunday Sun, where there is a coupon enclosed to buy Miracle Whip for a lower price than has been given to us in terms of the current wholesale price.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Welland-Thorold have a supplementary? I thought the answer was very complete.

Mr. Swart: I thought the answers were very complex. Although the imperial measurement of the one quart in Ontario and Canada differs to what it is in the United States, surely the minister must realize that one ounce in the United States is exactly the same as one ounce here. The jar in the comparison which I made had 90 per cent more in the United States, weighed on the scales in Canada.

I will send the minister the actual Canadian weight and perhaps he can then report back further in the House, after he has found out he is wrong in his weights.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am magnanimous today. I went to great lengths to compare them by going to a litre so that there could be a comparison between products of exactly the same size in the United States and here to determine a unit cost.

Mr. Swart: You made four mistakes before in your office.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I say to the honourable member that he sent me a note which said the $1.07 was the wholesale price throughout the United States, not a special.

Mr. Swart: It wasn't the wholesale price.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, he indicated it was. On the very day he bought that it was so obviously a special that if one bought the two 16-ounce jars to get 32 ounces in that store one paid proportionately very much more.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES DISPUTE

Hon. Mr. Walker: On November 29 the honourable member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) asked me about the increased number of problem inmates granted terminal releases or temporary absences in anticipation of the impending illegal strike by correctional officers. I assured him that problem inmates were not being released and I undertook to provide some figures for him of the people who were released by the temporary absence committee.

Half of the sentenced inmates, it should be kept in mind, serve sentences of less than 30 days and 85 per cent of them serve less than three months.

There are about 5,000 inmates in Ontario jails, and with 60,000 admissions a year we have 1,100 inmate turnovers a week. It would appear that approximately 400 persons, the majority of them serving sentences for relatively minor traffic and alcohol related offences, were granted temporary absences or terminal releases during the week ending December 1 and 2. All temporary absences were for periods of one to five days or one to 15 days. On the other hand, the terminal releases were granted only to persons who had fewer than 15 days to serve.

The figure, which amounts to an average of about eight inmates per institution in the 52 institutions, was understandably higher than the average 140 to 160 inmates per week, and that was because of the impending strike. In view of the impending strike and the likelihood that reduced numbers of managerial staff would be available to man the institutions, superintendents used their discretion to speed up the consideration of candidates for temporary absences and their transfers to community resource centres. This would allow the reduced staff at institutions during the strike to concentrate on the higher security inmates who needed their full attention.

I would remind honourable members that the temporary absence program has enjoyed a 98 per cent success rate over the past 10 years, there being some 82,000 temporary absences granted in that period of time.

ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM

Mr. O'Neil: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation. In view of the imminent closing of the Royal Ontario Museum and the subsequent loss of its contribution to the cultural aspects of life in Ontario, most notably to our children, would the minister not agree with me that the period of time during which the ROM is closed presents us with an unique opportunity to decentralize the cultural component of the ROM by distributing some of its exhibits to the hundreds of small museums and communities where the population may have never had the opportunity to see what the ROM has to offer?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, that plan has been considered. I am pleased to report that a good number of the exhibits will be distributed, although obviously many of the major exhibitions cannot simply be dismantled and sent over the province like a Fuller brush. The major exhibitions cannot be disassembled, but certainly those that can be sent out and placed in the museum mobile will be sent out and will be displayed.

Certainly as the minister I have already had several meetings with the ROM board and with the director to encourage them to do as much as they possibly can during the period when unfortunately, but for good reasons, some of the ROM in Toronto will have to be closed.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: I am not speaking about a Fuller-brush approach and I am not talking about the mobile unit. I think there are many other displays within the ROM itself that could be shipped out, either by truck or by train or by other means. I would ask the minister to consider that. I would also ask if he wouldn't be more explicit in what he is going to send out. When the minister is considering that, would he be open to the suggestion of providing Wintario funding to sponsoring groups in both smaller and larger communities who might apply to the ROM for displays of this type during the time the ROM is closed?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As I have indicated, certainly the concept and the plan is a good one. It is one that we have already looked into. We will try to implement it as much as we possibly can. As far as the other proposals are concerned, I will certainly take them under advisement.

TRANSPORTATION OF NUCLEAR WASTES

Mr. Foulds: I have a question, if I can get his attention, of the Minister of Energy, with regard to the transportation of nuclear wastes in Ontario. Can the Minister of Energy give a full report to the Legislature today, or at least before Friday when the House adjourns, on the transportation of high level radioactive wastes through northwestern Ontario from the Bruce nuclear complex to the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited research facility at Whiteshell?

In particular, can he respond to the reports in last Friday's press and media in Thunder Bay that indicated Ontario Hydro was transporting spent fuel bundles from Bruce to Pinawa in a truck that was: (a) reported to be exceeding the speed limit; (b) did not have a police escort; and (c) that Ontario Hydro had not notified the Ontario Provincial Police, or I believe Emergency Measures Organization officials or municipal officials along the route that that shipment was taking place?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Foulds: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker: While the minister is taking that question as notice, can he indicate how many shipments Ontario Hydro has engaged in since the Ontario-federal waste management agreement was signed a year ago last June; and can he assure us that he will give us a full report before the House rises?

ALLEGATIONS RE BRANT COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION

Mr. Nixon: I have a question for the Minister of Education which also involves the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry). Is the minister going to make any response by way of either announcing an investigation or refutation of the charges made by the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) of the fiscal irregularities of the Brant County Board of Education—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Alleged.

Mr. Nixon: Alleged—which he indicated were brought to his attention by the crown attorney for the county?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am aware there was some communication between the member for Brantford and the Brant County Board of Education regarding an alleged fiscal irregularity which the honourable member suggested was being investigated by the RCMP. The RCMP have written a letter to the Brant board stating specifically they are not investigating the board and there has been no investigation of that board to this time. Apparently there was one made by Revenue Canada from September to November, 1978, related to the administration of the Income Tax Act.

We have no factual information at this time upon which to base any investigation. If the member for Brantford has any information then it would seem to me it's his duty to present that information to the Ministry of Education so that an investigation could be instituted if it's necessary. Mr. Speaker, we have no such information at this point.

REPORTS

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee recommends that Bill Pr20, An Act respecting Ontario Bible College and Ontario Theological Seminary, be not reported, it having been withdrawn by the applicant; and further, that the fees less the cost of printing be remitted with respect thereto.

Motion agreed to.

[Later (4:00):]

PROVINCIAL AUDITOR'S REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that the report of the Provincial Auditor for the fiscal year 1978-79 is being tabled today and in accordance with standing order 91 stands referred to the standing public accounts committee.

[Reverting (3:23):]

RESPONSE TO PETITION

Hon. Mr. Wells: Before the orders of the day, I would like to table the response to a petition presented to the Legislature, sessional paper n274.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Before the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the answers to questions 308, 371, 373, 382, 383, 384, 389 and 394; and the interim answers to questions 385, 388 and 390 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix page 5599.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of the whole.

(concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 173, An Act to amend the Municipal Act, 1979.

On section 8:

Mr. Chairman: I believe the committee was discussing an amendment to section 8.

Mr. Isaacs: On a point of order, the amendment we were discussing was moved by myself, and with the consent of the committee I wish to withdraw that amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Is there agreement?

Agreed.

Any further comments on section 8?

Mr. Isaacs: Just before we leave section 8, it might be appropriate for me to indicate that after further review of the matters we were discussing last week, it came to our attention that the matter we are attempting to deal with by means of an amendment might be more appropriately left to the municipal level of government to determine according to their normal procedures. Given that we have trust and have confidence in officials at the municipal level of government not to abuse the powers conferred on them by this particular section, we determined that we would withdraw the amendment; but we want to put it on the record that we will be monitoring this particular section very carefully and we will certainly be back with appropriate reference to the minister if municipalities attempt to abuse the powers which this section confers upon them.

Section 8, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 9 to 13, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 173, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtry, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendments.

COUNCIL OF THE TOWN OF MIDLAND ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 174, An Act respecting the Composition of the Council of the Town of Midland.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, in 1937 this Legislature enacted an act which sets the composition of the council of the town of Midland, that is it could not be changed without changing this act.

As the minister mentioned on first reading, there seems to be no longer a need for this. The town of Midland has requested that this act be repealed and that the composition of their council now be under the Municipal Act, as those of most municipalities in the province are.

This amendment will not affect the present council of the town of Midland, but they are anxious that this take effect for their election of 1980 if they should want to make some changes. To go along with the request of Midland I would ask this bill be approved.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I don't think it will come as any surprise to members of this Legislature that we will be supporting this bill. It is an important bill, particularly as far as the municipality of Midland is concerned, because it does reduce the number of elected representatives in that municipality. In fact it was a little surprising to me when I was going over this bill that there was a municipality, and I guess there are still some municipalities in this province, which have a mayor, a reeve and a deputy reeve and one councillor per ward. I understand Midland has four wards and there are four councillors.

The surprise was not the fact that they might have four councillors, or that they might have a reeve and a deputy reeve, but the fact that they have a mayor, a reeve and a deputy reeve. Most municipalities in this province either have a mayor, deputy mayor and X number of councillors; or they may have a reeve, deputy reeve and X number of councillors; but the fact that they have a mayor, reeve, and then a deputy reeve almost seems a little top heavy.

They may have found this particularly advantageous in 1937 when they came under the Statute Law Amendment Act, but I guess that it's inclined to be somewhat similar to many other municipalities in this province. My particular experience is with south-western Ontario where they have mayors and deputy mayors, or Reeves and deputy Reeves.

It's a good move. The fact they come under the Ontario Municipal Act is noteworthy, because it makes certain most municipalities in the province come under the act. The parliamentary assistant to the minister may want to indicate how many municipalities in this province actually still come under a Statute Law Amendment Act.

Obviously we will support this amendment. I presume that the member for Simcoe East (Mr. G. E. Smith) will have some very important comments about this particular piece of legislation because it is in his constituency. He probably has closer experience with it, and I look forward in particular to his comments on it because of his close association with that municipality and other municipalities in his riding.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I'm greatly disappointed that neither the parliamentary assistant nor the previous speaker have given us any of the rationale as to why this section of the Statute Law Amendment Act was implemented in the first instance.

The bill was passed some 42 years ago, I believe by a Liberal government in this province, and it has survived with us for 42 years. I think it's important that when we're looking at repealing legislation of this kind we determine why the legislation was put in place in the first instance.

Going back through our records, I find to my dismay that Hansard was not kept in 1937. That's one of the few improvements that were made by the Tory government when it was elected, subsequent to that year we have a record of the debates in this House and it's therefore possible to go back and find out why things were done and what has been going on.

However we do not have that record in this case, but I am sure that somewhere in the archives there must have been some indication as to why this particular section was included in an act that is so comprehensive that it also dealt with what to do when a council neglects or refuses to pay the jailer. It also dealt with matters under the Cheese and Butter Exchanges Act. There were all kinds of references to railroads and to the problems that railroads were facing in 1937.

Buried in the midst of all this was one tiny section to establish the composition of the council of the town of Midland. There must have been an incredibly good reason for that section to be included in that bill, Mr. Speaker. It seems presumably that in Midland in those days there was some kind of crisis, because we did have a Municipal Act in 1937. There was possibly some kind of crisis whereby the provisions of the Municipal Act could not apply and this Legislature had to take it upon itself to structure that council.

I very much hope that in his response the parliamentary assistant will enlighten us as to how that matter was put in place by this Legislature, and further why it has taken so long to come to this Legislature to be dealt with in what seems to me to be a very appropriate manner.

It concerns me though that it was on the request of the council of Midland, going back at least to 1976, that this apparently appropriate amendment has come to the floor of this Legislature. That seems to me to be an incredibly long time to deal with something that would appear to be very routine; I wonder why the delay? Why has it taken so long? There has been a change of ministers since 1976, but that seems hardly sufficient excuse for delaying a matter of this kind through one more municipal election when the town of Midland may have wanted to take the matter of the composition of council to the electors in a preliminary way, rather than having to delay it until it finally reached this Legislature at the end of 1979.

The other point I think this bill raises, which I see as being very important, is the approach to law reform. We have heard from the parliamentary assistant his standard line when presenting municipal bills, the municipality asked for it. It seems to me the time has come when the government should be showing some leadership by reviewing the statute book, going back in history and dealing with many of these archaic provisions on its own initiative. In that way we can put all municipal governments on an equal footing and not run into these kinds of problems. Then municipalities won't find themselves caught by something contained in a statute that is not printed in the revised statutes and therefore is not very obvious to the lay person who would be seeking reference to the statutes through the public library. This is a petty annoyance which can with time become very serious.

I hope the parliamentary assistant can also advise us that his government intends to undertake a review of the legislation from the years around 1937, before and after, to ensure all these archaic provisions are dealt with before a crisis develops and before people become impatient, rather than having to wait for requests from municipalities and then taking three years to bring in an amendment.

We will be supporting this bill, we see it as something that brings Midland into line with all other municipalities; but I would certainly seek assurance on the two matters I have raised.

Mr. G. E. Smith: The member for Waterloo North has pointed out that I am the provincial representative for the town of Midland. As such I take this opportunity to speak in support of the bill.

Several of the questions asked by the member for Wentworth are historical and I would like to respond. It may be because of the lack of recorded copies of Hansard that the parliamentary assistant or the ministry itself are not familiar with the circumstances which prompted the Statute Law Amendment Act, 1937, to have been introduced and passed.

In 1936-37 the town of Midland, like a number of other Ontario towns and cities during the depression years, became bankrupt and went into receivership. Prior to that the municipal elections were conducted under the guidelines set out by the Municipal Act. In order to reduce the expenses of the elected members, which may not have been very high at that time but were still expenses, the receiver and those responsible for the operation of municipal affairs in the town of Midland decided to request the provincial government to pass the Statute Law Amendment Act, 1937, to reduce the number of elected representatives in that municipality. This is according to the information I have received from the mayor of Midland, His Worship Morland Lynn.

The act was passed as an interim measure. Now, as has been indicated, some 42 years later, the town is requesting that it be allowed to go back to operating its municipal representation under the guidelines set out by the Municipal Act. So much for the historical background.

I think the member for Waterloo raised a couple of other questions to which, perhaps I could respond. He asked if it was necessary to have a reeve and deputy reeve, as well as the mayor and so on. The population of the town of Midland is approximately 12,000. It is still not a city. As such it is part of the county system, in the county of Simcoe.

Under the guidelines of the county towns of this type, for example the former town of Orillia before it became a city and the former town of Barrie, at the time they were part of the county system did have a reeve and deputy reeve who were the representatives at the county council.

I suppose it would take some amendments, or perhaps a private bill from the county, to make the change where a mayor or a deputy mayor might be the representatives rather than the reeve or deputy reeve.

I am aware that the county planning committee has already come to this Legislature with a private bill requesting some changes. It may be that in the future they will make an additional request to change the structuring of the county even further.

I would ask honourable members to support Bill 174. As has been indicated, it was requested by the town of Midland. I understand it would give them the authority to carry on their regular elections in the future under the guidelines of the Ontario Municipal Act rather than the Statute Law Amendment Act of 1937.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, very briefly: obviously I support this bill, as my colleague the member for Wentworth has done. There are really only two comments I want to make.

The first is that as the member for Simcoe East has stated this is normalizing the council in the town of Midland. Back 30 or 40 years ago there were a great many private bills passed to vary the councils in a great many municipalities to meet a situation that existed at those times. Now many of them are reverting to the standard system; that is desirable and certainly I support that.

On the second reason, the point I want to make is for the benefit of the member for Waterloo North who remarked that not many places have a deputy reeve, a reeve and a mayor. In fact all the towns of this size do when they are situated in a county. The mayor never sits on the county council. A township has a reeve and a deputy reeve, and the reeve acts as the head of that municipality.

In every town there is a mayor, as required under the Municipal Act, and if they have sufficient population there is a reeve and a deputy reeve who perform functions at the county council. It is not unusual to have this sort of thing throughout the province of Ontario; except where you have regional government you have this in force; or where there are private bills or there have been changes made within certain counties. What we're really reverting to here is a standard municipal policy for towns, which we fully support.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the members for their support. I would like to point out to the member for Wentworth that the ministry does have an ongoing review of the various acts and statutes under the ministry's control to remove archaic provisions. We did some earlier this year, as members may recall.

Certainly the town of Midland was not suffering. They have known all along what their act involved. They've now made this request and we are allowing this request. If other municipalities feel they are under archaic provisions and ask, and it seems reasonable to us, we will implement it before the ongoing review catches up with them.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

House in committee of the whole.

CITY OF TORONTO ACT

Consideration of Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the City of Toronto.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that section 1 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"1. For the purposes of a bylaw of the corporation passed under section 386(a) of the Municipal Act, group home as defined in subsection 1 of the said section 386(a) shall be deemed to include a crisis care facility and a residential care facility as defined in a bylaw passed by the council of the corporation under section 35 of the Planning Act.

Mr. Renwick: The bill is a procedural matter. Bill Pr5 of the corporation of the city of Toronto stands in my name. I simply want to read into the record a letter which I received from His Worship Mayor John Sewell a few days ago re Bill Pr5.

"Yesterday, at the meeting of city council, the following motions were passed:

"1. Council indicated support of section 8 of Bill 173, contingent upon the following amendment being made to section 1 of Pr5 receiving consent at this session."

I may say that's the bill which was just in committee of the whole House a few minutes ago.

Then the substance of the amendment which I have just read.

"2. Council indicated its willingness to have the remainder of the section on group homes in Pr5 deleted in favour of section 8 of Bill 173.

"I would be pleased if you would inform the House of city council's action and ensure the appropriate amendment is made to Bill Pr5."

That is why I moved the motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Rotenberg: As indicated when we discussed Bill 173 last week, I would support this amendment, and I would like to publicly go on record as thanking Mayor Sewell and his council for the co-operation in bringing this matter to a satisfactory conclusion.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, we also would support the amendment. We think it's a reasonable amendment. It's one that the city of Toronto has requested. I think it will be incorporated in the bill since it has the support of the whole House.

Motion agreed to.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 2 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Rotenberg moved that section 6 of the bill be struck out and sections 7 to 11, inclusive, be renumbered as sections 6 to 10, inclusive.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, this is not a battleground for the purpose of this amendment. I just want to simply advise the House that this amendment by the parliamentary assistant was a matter of surprise to us. It was brought forward just today. No previous notice was given of the intention of the government to deal with the matter.

As members will recall, Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the City of Toronto, was introduced into the House in May of this year, May 17 I believe. It was considered in the standing administration of justice committee on June 18 of this year, at which time an extensive discussion of the bill and of its various provisions took place. The bill has stood on the Order Paper while lengthy negotiations have gone on between the ministry and the city of Toronto with respect to the question of group homes, which we've just dealt with. At no point during that period of time until today did the parliamentary assistant have the courtesy to raise with me, as the person in whose name the bill stands, so that I could get instructions from the city with respect to it, the question of this proposed amendment at the last minute.

I don't mind too much having to put up with inexperience in a parliamentary assistant, but when it's coupled with a degree of hostility to the city of Toronto for reasons unknown to me, I find it unacceptable. I would expect and anticipate that between now and the next session of the assembly either the parliamentary assistant will change his attitude towards city of Toronto legislation or he would give up his position as parliamentary assistant with respect to that kind of legislation.

In addition to that, for the time that I've been in this assembly the whole procedure of the standing committee on the administration of justice dealing with Bill Pr5 has been totally overturned on this bill. Whatever the reasons may be—whether it's inexperience I don't know—whatever it is I trust there will be no recurrence of the kind of attitude and the kind of obstacles placed in the way of legislation requested by the city council of the city of Toronto, and I trust that the work of this assembly will not longer be impeded in this manner.

I anticipate that this is not the kind of matter that one stands forever and fights about with an obstinate government. It is a very reasonable request. We are going to oppose the motion, but we don't intend to divide the House on the matter.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, I didn't object when the honourable member stood up. I had moved the amendment and usually the person who is allowed to move the amendment is allowed to speak to it. But I'm quite content to have had the member for Riverdale speak ahead of me.

First of all, I would like to indicate there is no hostility between me and the council of the city of Toronto. There's quite a difference between having a disagreement on policy and having hostility. When we dealt with the matter of group homes it was indicated, both at the meeting of the standing administration of justice committee and thereafter, that the bill as brought forward by the city of Toronto was totally contrary to the policy of this government.

I thank the member for Riverdale for the compliment where he sort of puts it all on my shoulders, that I'm doing this all by myself; of course I'm not. This is not a matter of my policy but of government policy on both of these situations. I'm simply the person who has been designated by the government to carry this. I thank him for seeming to indicate to the House that I have all this power that I can do this all on my own. But, Mr. Chairman, I have not.

Dealing with the matter before us, which is section 6 of this bill, I think it's only fair to indicate to the House, especially after the remarks of the member for Riverdale, that I have discussed this matter with the mayor of the city of Toronto. The mayor of the city of Toronto has indicated to me he is not in favour of the amendment which I am bringing forward. I think I should draw this to the attention of the House. He has also indicated to me this is not one of the more critical sections of the bill, because he says he and the council are not intending to act on this section in the near future in any case.

The purport of this section of the bill is simple. The hydro commission of the city of Toronto is now made up of three people, the mayor of the city of Toronto, one provincial appointee and one municipal appointee. The section of the bill simply wants to change the municipal appointee from being a citizen to allow the appointee also to be a member of the city council. If this section of the bill carries, there can, in effect, be two members of city council, the majority of the city council, as elected members on the hydro commission.

I would point out to the House the reason I am bringing this forward is we had a report in 1974 entitled, The Restructuring of Public Utilities, from a committee called the Hogg committee. It recommended as follows: "Commissions be composed of five members, with options for the minimum number being three and the maximum seven, including the head of the council, or his delegate, and other members of council"—and this is the key phrase—"provided that in no case shall members of council form a majority of the commission."

The then Minister of Energy (Mr. Timbrell) issued a statement in 1975 supporting the Hogg committee recommendation to be used as a guideline for the restructuring of public utilities throughout the province.

Very simply, this private bill of the city of Toronto does go contrary to that stated policy of the then minister, which I believe was accepted by this House, in that in hydro commissions, where they are commissions and not elected public utility commissions or appointed committees of council, then the commissions should not have a majority of elected representatives. It is for that reason, with no hostility to the city of Toronto, because we do get along reasonably well with the city of Toronto council whoever its members may be, that I bring this amendment and ask that it be approved by the House.

Mr. Isaacs: I appreciate the remarks made by the parliamentary assistant concerning the amendment he has moved, but I really have to ask him whether he can hinge this amendment that denies the right of the city of Toronto to appoint whoever it wishes to its hydro commission, therefore including members of city council, on a report related to hydro restructuring, which is a very different kind of issue to what we have in the city of Toronto where no one is suggesting restructuring.

He is assuming for some reason that there would be some actions taken that might not be in the best interests of the people of the city of Toronto if there were a second member of city council on the hydro commission I really don't understand why that assumption should be allowed to go forward and be allowed to be enshrined in legislation.

He is also assuming that the city council within Toronto does not have some grasp of what is best for the citizens of the city in terms of the accountability of their hydro commission, given that it does not allow the citizens to exercise the right to elect members directly to that hydro commission, but instead has appointments from city council. He is assuming that city council might not use its judgement in that matter in the best possible way.

It confuses me that while we generally have an argument that city councils and municipal councils in general best understand the circumstances in their municipalities and know how best to deal with the problems their municipalities face, in this one example, for reasons which do not appear to me relevant to the situation in Toronto because they are taken from a report that deals with restructuring, the city of Toronto is being told no, it can't have this because it runs contrary to government policy.

I want to suggest further that while my colleague, the member for Riverdale, was suggesting the responsibility for this amendment rests with the parliamentary assistant, I would suggest to the parliamentary assistant that if it doesn't rest on his shoulders, then it rests on his minister's shoulders, because I cannot accept that this amendment has been discussed by cabinet. I can't believe it is a matter of government policy at that level.

In presenting the amendment here to us today the parliamentary assistant is saying to us that somewhere in the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs there is someone who has decided that this is a right that should not be given to a local council. The argument that is being presented is one that has general application right across this province.

I want to suggest to the parliamentary assistant that in the cases of restructuring bills we have dealt with earlier this session for Niagara, for York, for Halton and for Durham, we allowed the municipal council to have more than one of its representatives on the hydro commission. Every one of those bills set up hydro commissions that are larger than three. I do not dispute that. But there are many, many circumstances when mayors of municipalities are sufficiently overloaded with work that they are not able to attend all the meetings of a board or commission of which they happen to be a member. They therefore find it very useful and the council finds it very useful in the interests of accountability to have another member of council present at that board or commission and acting as a member of that board or commission in order to present the report back to council.

I do not understand the basis for the government policy in this respect. If the parliamentary assistant is insisting that the government policy must be upheld, for whatever reason, then I want to suggest to him that the problem can be dealt with by a proposal to enlarge the hydro commission. Now that may not meet with his approval because it increases in some very minor way the expenses associated with the hydro commission.

I want to suggest to him that the interests of the public within Toronto may not be best served if the city's representative on the hydro commission is being prevented from attending meetings by pressure of work. The proposal that there be another member of city council there and voting as a member of the commission in order to express the city's concerns and to take back a report on commission business to city council makes a great deal of sense. That is what the city was seeking. If we can't go about it this way then rather than deleting it entirely let's find a more appropriate way of dealing with the problem that the city has in the area of accountability.

Mr. Rotenberg: I would like to clarify what the member said. First, this was done in consultation with the minister.

But the last point which the member makes is I think important. It isn't the problem of the mayor not having the time. If the mayor wishes to delegate another member of council instead of the mayor as is done on some other commissions, that could be done. If they expanded to more than three members that could also be done. The point of the situation is that where there is a commission as distinguished from a committee of council, the commission should not have a majority of members who are elected persons or it really ceases to function as a commission.

As an example, as of December 31, 1979, the transit commission of Hamilton-Wentworth will cease to become a commission and will become a committee of council. Where they are all council members, that's what it should be. The borough of York has a committee of council which runs hydro affairs.

If they want council running it, then they should say it is council and have all council members running it. If they are going to have a commission which is a step independent of council, which is the purpose of a commission, then there should not be a majority of council members in effect running the commission and who are not totally accountable to the total council as a committee of council is accountable.

I would say to the honourable member that if the mayor of Toronto is too busy to attend the meetings and wishes to delegate someone, that can be arranged. If they want to expand the commission, that can be discussed. If they want to go to a committee of council, that can be discussed. But we feel there should not be a majority of elected members on a three-man commission.

There are other alternatives, I agree with the member for Wentworth. As I indicated, Mayor Sewell would like this passed and says it's not critical at this time that they have other alternatives. Mayor Sewell will be more than pleased to discuss it with the honourable member.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I can see that we aren't about to change our mind at this stage. I would like to agree with my colleagues that this seems to me an eminently sensible thing to develop.

The city of Toronto has been leading in a number of ways in involving council in making committees and commissions more responsible and more forward looking. The hydro commission itself has been curtailed in a number of ways by Ontario Hydro in trying to develop some very progressive steps in terms of conservation and other areas. I know the council thought it was quite important to try to bring in this particular change in being able to have council members as members of the commission.

I would like to state, as the parliamentary assistant knows, the Robarts commission report on Metropolitan Toronto—and he is very careful in talking about commissions and that sort of thing—says in most cases the membership of such a commission should be up to Metropolitan Toronto. I think the same argument bears fruit here in terms of local autonomy.

If the city of Toronto chooses to have the power to have as permanent members of that commission members of its council, it seems to me that the provincial government should be willing to allow them to do so, notwithstanding any definition of the term commission that the parliamentary assistant wishes to make. As you know, the mayor at this point is not willing to see this bill rise or fall on this particular matter and is therefore stepping back from it.

Mr. Rotenberg: He is not stepping back. He still wants to close. He is not stepping back.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Well, he has not asked us to bruise our knuckles hitting the wall trying to get you to change your mind on it. I would say that I just see it as a retrograde step. It seems to me to be a very logical suggestion and a good approach to accountability and I would have hoped you would have changed your mind.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments? The question before the committee is Mr. Rotenberg's amendment to section 6.

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the ayes have it.

Section 6, as amended, agreed to.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments on any section of the bill?

Sections 7 to 10, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill Pr5, as amended, reported.

On motion by Mr. Brunelle, the committee of the whole House reported one bill, with amendments.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF HAMILTON-WENTWORTH AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 154, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth, 1973.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, this amendment will provide the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth with authority to determine store hours in the regional area. The bill gives the region the exclusive power to enact bylaws related to store closings under section 355 of the Municipal Act, except for bylaws regarding hours of service stations.

I realize this matter has been somewhat controversial in the region and that some members of the regional council are for this—the majority are for it, but several municipalities are against it. Some, particularly Stoney Creek, are not in favour of this amendment. I am also very much aware that there have been several petitions filed with the government contrary to the purpose and the principle of this bill. However, Mr. Speaker, we believe that this should be a local matter, a municipal matter, and that the majority of Hamilton-Wentworth, which really is one social and one retail area, has asked for this legislation. The majority of the regional council has asked for it. We believe this should be implemented and therefore we are recommending this bill.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I can say from the outset that we will be supporting this bill although we have a number of concerns with respect to it. One of the concerns we have is that of a transference of some local autonomy to that of the regional level or regional council. I don't think anyone could argue that the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth does not, through this bill, gain some additional autonomy which it didn't have until this bill was introduced and until—if it does become law—it becomes law. There is no doubt it could be interpreted as a little whittling away of local autonomy. However, I suppose we have to recognize the fact that 18 people out of a total of 24 local representatives on the regional council voted in favour of the bylaw, the resolution of the regional municipality, as opposed to six people who voted against it.

I am unhappy that although the government had an opportunity to bring this bill forward weeks ago, it has constantly delayed it. Had it been brought forth earlier we may very well have taken the opportunity to refer it to a committee to be able to hear some delegations. They have waited until what is certainly the last week and may be the last three or four days of this session to bring it forth and I think the government can easily be faulted in that.

If we were to hold it up now the government would say we're obstructionists, yet they have delayed and delayed in bringing it forth, recognizing of course that there could be more discussion on it if it had been brought forward earlier. Although they pretend they are in favour of a lot of discussion on it, they often take steps which certainly reduce those opportunities for discussion.

It has been argued by people that this legislation will save money for a number of stores, that they won't have to hire as many people. This may help that situation. It may help as far as the profits are concerned in the regional municipality. But, it may adversely affect a number of people who have been counting on jobs and, as a result of this bill, won't receive those jobs. That is very hard to determine and I wouldn't want to make an unqualified judgement on that matter.

In a sense, it does limit a certain amount of freedom that stores have. I know in my own municipality, the regional municipality of Waterloo, back in the 1950s there were store hours in the city of Kitchener that were very limited. I remember a gentleman who organized a very small store at that time, a highway market, which has grown to one of the largest stores in Ontario. He decided to move from the city limits to outside the limits and to open his store at hours which were not incorporated within the city of Kitchener. For instance, he was open to hours that may seem very normal now, to 10 o'clock, but that seemed very radical at that time. As a result, he was able to attract a lot of people and build up a very thriving business which is going very well today and employs hundreds of people.

This is the kind of thing that competition sometimes achieves and I don't think you could argue that this bill does not limit competition in some respects. However, we have to agree that there has been a fairly decisive vote by regional council in favour of this and although we may not always agree with every decision that council may make from time to time—either the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth or any other council—we find ourselves in agreement with this piece of legislation.

Mr. Isaacs: I have to say that I regard this particular bill as probably the most disgraceful piece of legislation that has come before this House in the eight months I have been here. It is the kind of thing that would make the former Minister of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, Darcy McKeough, turn in his chairman's chair if he knew what we were doing here with regional government in Hamilton-Wentworth.

If there was one person who had an understanding of the goal of regional government it was the former minister. We may not have agreed with him in many aspects of that goal, but he certainly had a feel for the direction in which he was going and he understood what he believed regional government could do for the people of this province. We now have a situation where those original intentions are being eroded, where regional government is being destroyed and, indeed, with this bill, is being encouraged to destroy itself in Hamilton-Wentworth.

We don't even have the minister here to hear the debate. That's the kind of interest the present minister has in the affairs of municipalities. It's the reason why municipalities are so upset with what this government is doing with regard to their situation and their role in the life of the people of this province.

If we carry on with this kind of thing we end up in a revolt of taxpayers in all the regions of this province. This bill deals with an item which is the tip of an iceberg that is so large it has the power to destroy local government in Hamilton-Wentworth, to tear apart the entire structure of that region. Instead of attempting to deal with the problem we are being asked to support a bill that, in fact, encourages the warring parties to continue their battles and to ensure that regional government will never be anything other than a battleground until this Legislature comes to grips with the problem in a serious and important way.

This is the kind of thing that competition Waterloo North, referred to this bill being requested by a majority of regional council in Hamilton-Wentworth. I want to suggest that when regional government was set up, it was set up in such a way that it could do for the people of the region, on a regional basis, those things which are best done regionally and leave to the lower tier those things which are best done locally. There was a division of every responsibility of municipal government into regional, i.e. upper tier, or local, i.e. lower tier.

Looked at that way, this was requested by three out of six municipalities in Hamilton-Wentworth. It concerns me very greatly that when you have three municipalities pitted against the other three, then this government comes down simply on the side of one group because of its size and not because of its importance within the region.

I want to suggest that was not what was intended by the previous minister when regional government was set up. It was not an approach that will help regional government to work. It is an approach that will destroy the structure that is in place, not put in place something better and will lead to acrimony that will continue for years and years to come until the government comes to grips with the very serious problem facing regional government in Hamilton-Wentworth.

There was no doubt that when regional government was set up in Hamilton-Wentworth there was an intention that certain lower-tier municipalities, particularly the five suburban municipalities, would be able to handle certain things on their own better than they can be handled by the region. Regional government was put in place, not to override their rights, not to give one municipality the power of veto, but to help them carry out their functions.

If this is the approach being taken by the present government and by the present minister—and many in the Association of Municipalities of Ontario believe it may well herald the start of a new approach—then there will be concern in every one of the 10 regions across this province. It is saying that the desires and wishes of the lower-tier municipalities can be overridden by a vote of regional council and that this government will allow that to be done simply on the basis of population and not on the basis of other considerations.

Turning to the matter of store hours, the problem that led to this bill arose because one municipality in the region decided, for whatever reason, that it wished to amend its local store-hours bylaw to permit stores to be open longer. Others within the Hamilton-Wentworth area felt that would cause unfair and unreasonable competition, forcing them into opening their stores against the wishes of those councils.

I understand and appreciate what regional council was attempting to do when it requested this bill, but I want to ask the parliamentary assistant what will happen when the city of Burlington or the town of Grimsby decides to open its stores for extended hours, as they may very well do within the next year or two—particularly Burlington. If the town of Burlington at some time in the future decides its stores are going to be open until 10 o'clock, six nights a week, then Hamilton-Wentworth will be powerless to come forward requesting this kind of legislation.

Instead, we will have a battle among the municipalities which will cause great unrest and concern and will probably end up forcing Hamilton into a situation even more undesirable than the present situation. The government will then be asked to legislate store hours in Burlington or Grimsby, as the case may be. So it goes on and we will have this problem spreading. We are not part of a tiny urban centre; everywhere in the golden horse-shoe we are part of a great conurbation that spreads from Oshawa to Fort Erie within which the things going on in one municipality cannot help but have an impact on neighbouring municipalities.

I want to suggest to the parliamentary assistant that the method of handling the matter as proposed in this bill is completely and utterly inappropriate. The way to deal with it is to come forward with legislation that puts in place appropriate restricted store hours province-wide. It makes no sense at all to allow restrictions in one area and none in a neighbouring area, thus causing feuds to arise. The issues relating to store hours are the same right across the province, with the possible exception of the northern municipalities and with the possible exception of those municipalities that are very close to the border, such as Windsor, Sarnia and Fort Erie.

Forgetting those for a moment, because they may be in peculiar circumstances, the arguments are the same everywhere else in the province. They relate to competition, to the costs of doing business and to the abuse of the rights of employees who are going to be working in the stores. The approach being taken in this bill is so short-sighted and is going to cause such great problems that I am incredulous that the minister, last September, even saw fit to announce his intention to bring in the bill. It surprises me, given the approach the government normally takes on matters such as this. It surprises me that we have this bill before us at all. In some senses I am grateful that the bill is before us because at least it gives us an opportunity to discuss what this government should be doing and that is legislating province-wide store hours.

The solution is not to be found in the bill that is before us. It is not to play around with regional government and to cause municipalities great heartache and to prolong the battles that are presently going on. The solution is a very clear one. It is to deal with store hours as a provincial issue—which it is—and to deal with the problems that regional government is facing right across this province, especially in Hamilton-Wentworth.

We cannot continue with the kind of battles that have led to this bill. We cannot continue with the fact that there is no reasonable communication between neighbouring municipalities within the same region. The members of council never talk to each other. The amount of communication between the heads of council is very limited indeed and carried out primarily through formal letters rather than the informal get-together that should mark harmonious relations within a region.

It is difficult to know how to deal with the kind of bill that is before us. It's going to create even greater problems than it solves. It's going to cause people within one part of the region to become even more dissatisfied with regional government than they are now, if that's possible. It is going to be difficult because the people of the suburban municipalities are pretty upset with regional government right now.

But given the problem and given the solution we believe should be followed, we have to think that as it is going to restrict store hours in Hamilton-Wentworth—and we have that assurance from the regional chairman and from the majority of members of regional council—given that that restriction will be the result of the passage of this bill, we think that on balance it is better to support it than to oppose it.

I want to associate myself with the remarks of the member for Waterloo North when he said it would have been appropriate to send this matter to committee and to have input from the local people who are aware of the circumstances behind this bill. It is very clear that when the minister announced back in September that he would be bringing in this bill he had absolutely no idea at all as to how it arose and how important it is to the people of Hamilton-Wentworth, both in terms of the store hours issue and in terms of the autonomy issue.

Even the bylaw that is coming forward as a result of this bill has great inadequacies. Many of the arguments for restrictions on store hours are based on costs, they are based on the problems the employees face and they are based on the fact that need simply does not exist in our society today. But the regional bylaw exempts such a wide range of stores that it is a minority of stores within Hamilton-Wentworth that will be affected by the proposed regional bylaw.

All food stores are exempted and all drug stores are exempted. Shoe repair shops, tobacco shops, newsdealers, confectionery shops—the list goes on and on. None of those stores is included in the bylaw that the region intends to pass if this bill is passed here today.

I want to suggest that is particularly unfortunate because the effect of the cost of store operations on items like food is particularly hurtful to the lower-income people within our society who spend the majority of their income on food. It's the food stores that are abusing their employees to a greater extent—if that's possible—than almost any other category of store. The food stores and drug stores are expanding their function to the extent you will soon be able to go into a store labelled "food store" but which carries almost as great a range of goods as a traditional department store such as Eaton's or Simpsons. If the parliamentary assistant will look at some of the stores opening now in Hamilton-Wentworth he will find a range of items for sale not in the least related to food but which covers the whole spectrum of goods on the retail market.

The bylaw that arises from this bill is terribly deficient. The bill itself is terribly deficient in its approach to the problem—it's disgraceful in its approach to the problem. We end up with a circumstance that can only be temporary because a future challenge to this whole matter of store closing in the Hamilton-Wentworth area is inevitable.

The parliamentary assistant might feel it appropriate to get out and talk to some people aware of this situation and who traditionally have supported the things he and his colleagues have tried to do because the bill we proposed to bring in store hours on a uniform province-wide basis has been discussed widely in Hamilton-Wentworth and is seen by many people on that regional council as being a great improvement over the bill we have before us today. But we can't amend this bill to give it province-wide applicability. I wish we could, because that debate would be an appropriate one. But we cannot do that and we are stuck with the mess created, the hostility that will remain as a result of the disposition of the bill today. Either way, pass or defeat, that hostility and mess will be there. It's a close balance but the balance comes down on saying we will support the bill but we urge the government to bring in province-wide legislation, or similar bills for every other municipality so there is an aura of uniformity across the province instead of a situation that can only get worse and worse.

Mr. Mackenzie: I rise to support Bill 154. I do so with a number of reservations.

My colleague has spoken good sense and I wish sometimes the sense he's articulated would carry some weight with government members.

We have an extension, in a minor way, of the old open and extended store hours debate. I fear we may win a small battle in a case like this and risk losing the proverbial war.

What has happened is not an old story. It's an all-too-often-told story today. We have the actions of one regional council deciding to grant the authority to a developer and a new shopping mall to stay open the extended hours. As is usually the case, that initially is a reasonably successful operation. In this case it was the Fiesta Mall in Stoney Creek. There is the large Eastgate Mall, where there is a fairly heavy investment and where probably most of the small shopkeepers would rather have the restricted hours but where the developers themselves would love to see the thing open for the extra rents they could charge if it was on the extended hours. They start complaining and putting pressure on council and saying: "Hey, we're not getting a fair shake here. If you're going to allow this one new smaller shopping mall to remain open then in all fairness you've got to give us the same opportunity."

Of course, the minute that starts being talked around the area you get the people who own the other malls in the region raising the same arguments; you also get those who are thinking of putting in malls questioning whether or not they should have the right to stay open or to shut.

You usually get a delayed but very strong reaction from many of the smaller merchants on many of the secondary streets, or even in the downtown core of the city, who know very well they're having the fight of their lives to compete with the shopping centres as it is. I remind the honourable members of this House that it can be expensive if we destroy the cores and some of the secondary shopping streets in our cities. Certainly the whole question is raised.

In this particular case—more in desperation than anything else—we had the regional municipality, where there was a strong majority who wanted to maintain the restricted store hours, saying, "Either we're going to be able to deal with the smaller municipalities within the region, or we might as well be out of business." That is part of the threat to the whole system of regional government.

What happens is that you get the Hamilton-Wentworth region asking for a bill to give them authority over the entire region and to restrict the shopping hours. They will probably do it. There's no question in my mind that's the route they'll take. I'm really wondering, when the next major mall is opened up in the area, what kind of pressure we will have on all of the regional councillors to allow them to open up region-wide. I can see that battle coming down the road as well.

It seems to me we've been fighting this battle in Ontario for a good number of years. I think some measure of common sense has ruled the day to date. I'm not sure how long that will continue.

I do know that I'm a little surprised at the copout of this government in not bringing in province-wide legislation. As in many things today—human rights come to mind—they seem to be afraid to face some of the tough issues. We are either going to say that we've got some uniformity in shopping hours that covers everybody across the province or we're not. If we're going to go the other route—and I personally hope we don't—we had better take a look at whether or not all our talk, or all the talk that seems to come from this Tory government about being interested in small businesses, means anything.

Many of the small businessmen in our communities are not going to be able to survive if they're up against the unrestricted hours of the major developers. There's no question in my mind about that. We've had difficulties already with them staying in business.

In addition to that, the employees are always the losers in the extended hours debate. As it is, even without the extended hours we have a move in many of the large developments to employ more and more part-time employees. In many of the major shopping centres they try to keep them to 20 hours or less a week. They cannot only get away with a minimum wage but with absolutely no employee benefits to them as well. That certainly doesn't make for steady 40-hours-a-week employment for people so they can maintain their homes and put food on the table and take care of their families.

We risk the worker's right to a decent job and the worker's right to decent benefits. We risk an escalation in the use of part-time employees rather than full-time employees. We certainly risk the livelihood of hundreds and probably thousands of small businessmen in our communities if we don't seriously take a look at restricting the hours.

Much as I dislike them, I'd much rather go the route of looking at exceptions where you can make an excellent case for them than I would just doing away with the restrictions we've had on store hours to date.

The government certainly should have moved on a province-wide basis. I see this particular bill as one that I can support: a necessary, small, interim battle in the fight that's been going on for a good many years in our particular community, but one which leaves the pressure on, doesn't deal with the other communities and really is a copout on the part of this government in terms of not bringing in the one answer to it, which is province-wide legislation. If they're not willing to do that, then they should take the flak—open the whole thing up and let people know where they stand, rather than try to ride both sides of the fence as in this particular issue.

For the time being, there's no question on this particular bill. I have to support it, but with the reservations I've raised.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'm glad the parliamentary assistant came back in so he could hear my comments. Perhaps I could explain to him calmly and coolly what sort of an error he and his government have made by taking the position they have put before the assembly on the question of early store-closing hours.

The minister may not be aware of it but a long time ago when I was a kid they didn't have early store-closing legislation in the Hamilton-Wentworth area. The reason they didn't have it, Mr. Speaker, was they didn't need it. Most of the businesses closed at a reasonable hour. The small businessmen were able to operate under reasonable conditions and the employees didn't face the kind of exploitation that comes from these long hours day after day.

What happened, unfortunately, was that some chains moved into the outskirts of my city and decided they were going to stay open six days a week, 10 hours a day. There were no laws against it, so that kind of thing started. Consequently, it put incredible pressure on the small businesses in the Hamilton economic region. Also it put a number of employees in a very difficult spot because when those small businesses had to close down in the core and in the community shopping areas, that meant not only did the small businessman lose his livelihood, but so did those who were working for him.

On the other hand, what kind of hours were workers working? These large, sometimes foreign chains didn't give one whit about the welfare of their employees. They put them on split shifts. They put them in positions where they had to try and support their families on maybe a 30-hour work week at pay for much less than they could get in other areas. They put them in positions where they didn't have proper protection.

The municipalities in the Hamilton area got together and said this was a problem. The reason they got together was that two diverse groups approached them to outline the difficulty. One was the Hamilton and District Labour Council on behalf of workers in the area which went in to explain the unfairness of the exploitation of workers that was currently taking place in these chains and the difficulty caused by the loss of jobs for workers in the core and community shopping areas. Also the local municipalities were approached by small businessmen who explained the difficulties they were facing in trying to compete with these stores in the outskirts which were able to keep open during these long hours and how they were having to close down and consequently that was affecting consumers in the area. The municipalities in the area then created a gentlemen's agreement by which they brought in local early store-closing hours legislation.

I want to come back to something the parliamentary assistant said because it shows either his foolishness or silliness when he makes statements in the House, or it shows a kind of masquerade attitude on behalf of the government and the ministry. He said that in effect Hamilton-Wentworth is one economic area. If the parliamentary assistant would listen to this explanation it would be appreciated.

He claimed the Hamilton-Wentworth region was an economic area in which it made sense to have legislation that would affect store-closing hours for all of the component municipalities. This goes back to the old phoney analysis this government has put before the assembly on every single question like this since they brought in regional government in the Hamilton-Wentworth area.

They went against all advice at the time and created a Hamilton-Wentworth regional municipality that excluded Burlington, which was clearly a part of the economic community at the lakehead. They went against all that advice. They brought in this fractured form of regional government. Now you get a parliamentary assistant who stands up in the assembly and tries to say Hamilton-Wentworth is somehow an economic region separate from everything that surrounds it and therefore should have its own legislation. [4:45]

I would like the parliamentary assistant to drive down there or take a bus. I will send him a bus ticket to Hamilton so he can come down and see what that area is like. The minister will understand that in Hamilton-Wentworth we don't live in an economic area that is separate from our neighbours in other regional communities. The parliamentary assistant would find that Burlington at least is a part of that economic region.

To go back to the gentlemen's agreement, Burlington was involved in that agreement. They brought in early store-closing hours. I think the question put by the member for Wentworth is a very important one. What is the government going to do if we pass this legislation and if Hamilton-Wentworth brings in this municipal bylaw? What is the government going to do when and if Burlington changes its policy so it can bring in some new mall, and if it doesn't have early store-closing hours any more? I don't know how the government or the parliamentary assistant intends to deal with that. That is the basic foolishness and silliness of the bill before us.

I could characterize the Tories as being on both sides of the issue, but that would be overly kind. I have no intention of being overly kind. They remind me of people who are straddling the fence with both feet firmly in the air and both ears to the ground. It's an awkward position. I expect it is difficult to get good legislation from people who are in such contorted and uncomfortable positions. Maybe that is one of the explanations for the kind of approach they have taken on this issue. On an issue of the fundamental rights of workers and the protection of small businessmen, they can't say, "on the one hand, on the other hand, on the third hand." There has to be some definition to their position.

The one point that really bothers me is that the parliamentary assistant, on behalf of the absent minister who doesn't really seem to be too concerned about this issue, judging from the delays he went through in bringing it before the House, says the reason why the government is doing this is the regional municipality asked it to do it. That is incredible. I can count on the fingers of one hand the times this government has done anything because the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth advised it to do it.

It seems if a good idea is coming forward from the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth, the government is automatically opposed to it. Yet the minister or the parliamentary assistant chooses to put this forward as his one rationale for going ahead with it. I would suggest that when he gets good proposals from that municipality he should adopt them more often and use as his rationale that the municipality asked him to. Instead, we get the incredibly silly solution of dumping it back into the hands of the regional government.

If early store-closing hours are a good idea, which I believe they are for the reasons I have outlined, in that they protect workers' rights and also they protect what is still a viable small business community, then it's a good idea not only for Hamilton-Wentworth but for the entire province. If we are going to protect community shopping areas like Barton Street or Ottawa Street in my riding, then we should protect community shopping areas in the parliamentary assistant's riding and in every other riding across Ontario. If we are going to protect the rights of workers working in shopping malls in Stoney Creek then we should protect the rights of workers working in shopping malls across the province.

I think the solution put forward by my colleague from Wentworth is a perfectly workable solution. It is a good idea. It would be advantageous if the government would consider withdrawing this bill and, before we break for Christmas, introducing province-wide legislation so that we can protect small business and protect workers across the entire province, rather than ignoring that difficulty. I would advise the parliamentary assistant that he consider doing that. If not, if he intends to go ahead with this, when might we expect the government to realize that province-wide legislation is needed and when might we expect the government to go ahead and bring in province-wide legislation, next spring? I look forward to the parliamentary assistant's comments on that particular question.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I rise just to make two or three comments on this bill before us. The first one I want to make is that for the reason given by my colleagues we consider this a rather important bill. This is a matter which has been debated in municipal circles and elsewhere across this province for many, many years, for decades, as the parliamentary assistant well knows. Now we have a bill, a wholly inadequate bill, that deals with the problem in Ontario but at least gives us an opportunity to state the position of this party. I am surprised, quite frankly, that the other member from the Hamilton area, the member for Hamilton West (Mr. S. Smith) is not here also, and doesn't think this bill is important enough to take part in this debate. It would seem to me that on a matter of such great concern to his area he should be in the House and taking part in this debate.

I think most objective people would agree my three colleagues from the Hamilton area have put forward reasonable arguments for a province-wide policy. They have put forward a similar argument and I must point out, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, that these three members represent contrasting constituencies. One is from a rural area where they want to keep the stores open—a partly rural area or a suburb, if you will, of Hamilton. The others are from the areas where they have bylaws which provide that the stores must close earlier, yet they can get up and put forward the same argument here.

I think this demonstrates, Mr. Speaker, how easy it would be, if we had an NDP government, to come to a reasonable solution for this sort of thing. Our colleagues here aren't simply passing the buck, as the government is doing. The government is saying, in effect: "We don't want to make a decision on this. We will pass it over to the regional council in Hamilton and let it pass the by-laws and pass the buck." The people on this side of the House are prepared to make a decision provincially on this. We are willing to stand up and be counted and we say there should be uniform closing hours across this province. We are willing to have the parliamentary assistant bring in that bill, take our stand on it and vote in favour of a bill that does just that.

It's apparent it is nonsense to have a system whereby each local municipality can set the store-closing hours. I am not going to go into the argument put forward by my colleagues in any depth again, but such a system distorts the whole shopping system. You can have shopping centres or other shopping areas, the downtown areas, set up all to close at six o'clock then the council in one area comes in and suddenly decides it is going to open them up. Then the others have to open them up in competition and pretty soon you have far too much floor space. You have, in fact, far greater costs involved with regard to retailing—and in the end it is the consumers who are going to have to pay those additional costs.

It also distorts the whole process of deciding where shopping centres are going to be established, because it was well known, and the parliamentary assistant knows this, that for decades in this province shopping centres were established just outside of the urban areas in rural areas that were anxious to get assessment in those days when it meant so much to them—it doesn't mean quite so much now. These centres were established on the promise that they could stay open and there would be no laws within that municipality to make that shopping centre close at six o'clock. So it has distorted even the growth pattern in major areas.

As my colleagues have pointed out, we are supporting this bill because it's a bit better than the system which exists in that region and in most other areas of this province, but in no way is it the kind of bill we really should be debating and discussing here, one that has uniform application.

I just want to point out, once the government had the nerve to actually take some action on a couple of other items, how well that worked. I remember when it was left to the local municipality to determine whether it would have fireworks sold within its boundaries. There would be one little town, or perhaps big city, that would prohibit the sale of fireworks, or perhaps prohibit them to anybody under 16 years of age, and the next municipality would be wide open to sell the fireworks.

The municipalities and their associations fought for years and years to have the government give some leadership on this matter and the government finally gave it. You hardly hear a whisper about it now, Mr. Speaker. It is working. Of course, the legislation which was passed in this House three or four years ago with regard to Sunday closing is working and working well.

Surely the government can apply the same sort of policy to store hours during the week. It is just that once again it hasn't the courage to do so. There is perhaps no unanimous request from municipalities because, as the parliamentary assistant knows from his experience in municipal government, when you talk to municipal associations on this kind of an issue, where you have rural municipalities and the urban municipalities—some of them have early closing bylaws and some don't—it is impossible to really come to a determination. They are saying, in effect, to the provincial government, "You should take the responsibility to do that."

That is what the New Democratic Party is saying. We think this is an apt expression of the general attitude of the government, but in no ways meets the needs of this province.

Mr. Rotenberg: I wish to thank the members opposite for the support of the bill, despite the fact that the New Democratic Party did some strange contortions in order to support it. And speaking of trying to be on both sides of an issue at the same time, they are masters at it.

We are not legislating store hours; we are not legislating store hours in Hamilton-Wentworth. We are giving—

Mr. Martel: What happens to local autonomy?

Mr. Rotenberg: He's on my side. I am glad to hear it. We are giving the region of Hamilton-Wentworth the right to legislate store hours.

There was some discussion that maybe this matter should have gone to a committee of the House for discussion. Members will recall this bill was originally part of the Regional Municipalities Amendment Act, the omnibus regional act, which we introduced much earlier in the session and it was at the request of the New Democratic Party, which indicated maybe they wanted to send it to committee, that we took it out of the regional act and put it into a separate act. We did it simply because, although we didn't want to, if another party wished to send it to committee, we would be able to do so without interrupting the omnibus bill for all the regional municipality amendments.

We believe in local option, as the member for Sudbury East has indicated—he is sitting maybe where he belongs, in the other caucus—he believes in local autonomy and so do we and we believe this is a local matter. There are different problems in different municipalities and different municipalities require different solutions to these problems.

So, in answer to the question which has really come from the three members opposite, the provincial government at this time is not prepared to bring in province-wide store hours and that is why we are bringing in this legislation.

If there is some dissatisfaction with the form of the bylaw which the Hamilton-Wentworth council is bringing forward, and I gather from the members opposite and from the people in the region there is some dissatisfaction, then really the people in that community should be going to the regional council, hear deputations, have meetings and ask the Hamilton-Wentworth regional council either not to adopt their bill, or to amend their bill, or to deal with the bill. We are giving permissive legislation, transferring it from the municipalities in the regions to the regional council. This is, in effect, province-wide legislation because it is permissive legislation to enable the various municipalities throughout the province to bring in store-closing bylaws, if they so desire.

As I have indicated, for the present we feel that is the proper way to do it and therefore I ask for the support of this bill.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF HAMILTON-WENTWORTH AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 154, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth Act, 1973.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I have a comment to make on whichever section you choose, Mr. Chairman. Section 1 would be fine.

On section 1:

Mr. M. N. Davison: In regard to the parliamentary assistant's response to the suggestion put forward by the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs), would the parliamentary assistant care to explain to us why the government is not prepared to move with province-wide legislation at this time?

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, with respect, I think the member opposite has asked to go into committee of the whole House simply to get another chance to speak on second reading, which is really not the situation. I have indicated that the provincial government at this time feels this is a matter of local autonomy and local option and we are leaving it that way.

Mr. M. N. Davison: On section 1, I have a question on the definition of the word "local." By the word "local," does the parliamentary assistant mean local government or does he mean regional government? I'm not exactly sure of his definition of the word "local" because he seems to be using it whenever he talks about this section or the other sections of the bill.

Mr. Rotenberg: I think it's quite obvious that for the purposes of this bill "local" means the regional government.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Would the parliamentary assistant be so kind as to tell us at what point the government might be prepared to go ahead with provincial-wide legislation?

Mr. Rotenberg: With respect, there are no plans at the present time to bring that forward. I don't know when in the future there may be discussion; at the present time there are no plans.

Mr. M. N. Davison: One final question: Would the parliamentary assistant, on behalf of the minister and the government, undertake to start discussion and to study the possibility of bringing in province-wide legislation so the position put forward by my colleague from Wentworth can be fully aired and explored?

Mr. Rotenberg: I don't want to mislead the member or his party by indicating that this will happen at a specific time in the future. Certainly, all matters which are raised in this Legislature are under review by this ministry. Whether that will be an earlier or later review or priority, I cannot say at this time.

Section 1 agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

Bill 154 reported.

On motion by Hon. Miss Stephenson, the committee reported one bill without amendments.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I believe there has been a modification of the order and that concurrence in supply for the Ministry of Education and Ministry of Colleges and Universities is to occur at this time.

It was also my understanding that we were doing them as a package.

Mr. Speaker: They are separate questions. They can't be considered as one entity.

MINISTRY OF EDUCATION

Mr. Sweeney: As the minister well knows, we have recently concluded 22 hours of estimates debate on this area; therefore, a lot of topics were gone into at some length and depth. I don't intend to go over all those again, but there are a couple of topics which I think need a little more attention than they got in the estimates and there is one in particular which came up today.

I have just sent over to the minister a copy of a press release and a couple of affidavits that were presented to the media today on behalf of a group of parents known as Parents Interested in Education, PIE. I understand the minister has met members of this group before and is familiar with some of their concerns.

I want to use this opportunity to draw to the minister's attention the fact that I share the concerns of some of the parents' groups around this province. As a matter of fact, if we are looking at the funding of education—and in this particular debate the concurrence of that funding—I think it is quite appropriate for us to look at some of the concerns being expressed by various parents' groups. I suggest to the minister as evidence we have some credibility gaps and financial backlash with respect to education in Ontario is that there are a number of parents and a number of groups of parents expressing concerns.

This is a phenomenon which is growing in this province. More and more parents are grouping together because they realize the futility of trying to operate individually. They are grouping together to bring to the attention of individual schools or school boards and of this ministry and this government their concern over what is happening to their children in the schools of this province.

This is not to suggest for one moment that there aren't many groups of parents in the province who are quite satisfied with what is happening. However, there is a sufficient number of parents' groups—and I repeat, the number is growing—to cause concern to anyone in this Legislature and to surely give concern to the Minister of Education as to why we are getting this negative feeling.

The particular group to which I have just referred, PIE, is now a national group; it has only recently begun forming in Ontario.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Do you know where it started? Would you read the note I just sent to you?

Mr. Sweeney: With reference to the note the minister just sent over to me, I think the point still stands. There is a group of parents in the province who are concerned about what is happening to their children. The only reason I am bringing this to the minister's attention today is because it seems appropriate to me that we consider them as one of several groups.

I would draw to the minister's attention a most recent event, right here in the city of Toronto. A group of parents representing French-speaking children have had a long and running discussion with the Toronto Board of Education over the formation of a French-language school and have gone so far as to be concerned about the formation of a French-language school board in this province.

I would draw to the minister's attention the groups of parents that have formed in several of the municipalities around Metro very concerned about the closing of their local schools. The minister is as aware as I am about what has been happening in North York. The minister indicated in her recent statement that she wants the school boards of this province to have more appropriate guidelines with respect to the closing of schools.

The minister is also aware of a very large group of parents in the Simcoe area concerned about a program put into the public schools of that jurisdiction, a program with which they disagree.

The minister is also aware of a very significant growth in enrolment in the independent schools of this province, a growth from approximately 40,000 five or six years ago to something in the neighbourhood of 64,000 today. That's a 50 per cent growth over a relatively short period of time. It is my understanding that the parents who choose this route do so overwhelmingly because they feel they do not have the kind of voice they think they should have with respect to what's happening to their children in the public school they formerly attended.

Finally, it is very obvious there are groups of parents who have not taken these kinds of actions who are expressing in many different ways the fact that they want to get back to some sense of a real community school. They want to get back to some sense of really playing a part, along with the teachers, in the nature and the quality and the type of education their sons and daughters are going to get in the schools.

The entire issue I am trying to draw to the minister's attention—and perhaps it isn't necessary for me to do so, but I think it's appropriate at this time—is that there is outside of this Legislature, in the educational system of this province, a growing and a significant phenomenon of groups of parents who want to have a great deal more say about how their sons and daughters are educated in the schools of this province. They also want to be assured that things will not happen to their sons and daughters in the schools that they don't want to happen.

Very recently a question was raised about those boys and girls in our schools about whom the parents don't seem to be as interested as they should, where in fact we might actually have neglect involved, where we might have a form of mental abuse or emotional abuse involved. I would remind the minister, as I did the questioner, that we do have within the recent Child Welfare Act a provision to take care of that.

I don't think the issue is those children for whom teachers must truly take the place of parents, for whom they must be deeply concerned because their parents are neglecting them in one way or another. That's not the issue. We have provisions in the law of this province to take care of that. The issue is those students whose parents are genuinely and deeply concerned about what happens to their sons and daughters in schools and who have a sense that they are not being allowed to play the kind of role they should have.

Tied along with that particular issue is this whole question of bigness. In this province we've been through a period of big schools, big school districts, big school administrations. I have to wonder whether or not the kind of parental backlash we're getting is not a reflection of this bigness. I have to wonder whether or not the time hasn't come—and we touched on this very briefly in the estimates, too briefly in my judgement—where a serious look needs to be taken at the effects.

We're talking about 10 years after the setting up of the large consolidated school boards: whether we shouldn't take time, 10 years later, and seriously examine what the impact has been; seriously ask whether the quality of education we believed at that time would be improved has been improved; whether the relationship between parents and teachers is better today than it was then; whether the scarce dollars we have available to spend on the education of the boys and girls in Ontario is being spent as wisely as it could be; whether the involvement of the community in true community education in the various jurisdictions around this province is better today because of these larger consolidated school boards than what it was before, or as it could be if there was some modification. Within that same framework, ask about the size of schools that have evolved from it, the very large district high schools and the very large consolidated elementary schools. What do we know about the quality of education in those? What do we know about the degree of community involvement in those schools before and after, or what might be?

I suggest that we've spent a great deal of time talking about a lot of the other details of education, this very central, significant issue needs to be one that more attention be given to. It seems appropriate to me we take the time to look at that.

I want to end up with one comment with respect to my original remarks.

There is a program that is in use in many of the schools of this province called "values clarification." It was a program developed by Sidney Simon from the United States. I'm not going to go into any detail because I'm sure the minister has access to that as well as I do. But I want to ask the minister or her officials to some time relatively soon examine that program and examine some of the exercises the students are asked to participate in.

I have just one I'd like to share at this time. There are, I understand, many like this

This is a situation where relatively young children, in grades six, seven and eight, are asked to put themselves into the position of being a selection committee, a situation where there is, after a nuclear war, space in a shelter for only six people and there are 10 people standing at the door supposedly waiting to get in. These 10 people are described in various ways in terms of their age, in terms of their racial background, personality traits, contributions they might make to a future society. These young children are asked to eliminate four human beings.

I know at some point in their lives they might be faced with that but not when they're 11, 12 or 13 years of age. That's just one example among many with which the Minister of Education and her officials should acquaint themselves and ask whether this might not be one of those situations where we could be doing more harm than good.

Mr. Warner: It is evident to each of us, as the estimates for the Ministry of Education concluded, there was a message of which the government and each one of us is painfully aware. The declining enrolment has been a delightful opportunity for the government to cut back in its funding and it has deliberately chosen to shift the burden of property taxation to the municipalities and to the tenants and home owners. As the minister is well aware, that process of erosion has been going on for several years now in Metropolitan Toronto and, of course, elsewhere, but I speak in terms of Metro Toronto since it's the area I know best.

Our own area of Metro Toronto has seen a decline in the education commitment from this government over the last few years. I expect that as long as this party is in power we'll see a further decline and a shift, of course, to the property tax. That's the wrong way to go. The government may feel that at this time they are able to do that and hide it under the guise of the declining enrolment. Sooner or later it will come to an end of the road, because the taxpayers will no longer tolerate this shift.

I suppose the government would like to reach the stage where 100 per cent of the education dollars come from the property tax instead of the present 80 per cent in Metropolitan Toronto. They've reached that unhappy state in the city of Toronto; the city of Toronto, in fact, is in a negative position, as the minister well knows; they collect more in property tax. Through the distribution mechanism for Metro Toronto, of course, some of the other boroughs and the city of North York were able to obtain some of those dollars.

The shift has occurred to the extent where I believe—I stand to be corrected perhaps within a percentage point—approximately 21 per cent of the education dollars for Metro Toronto come from the provincial government. Yet it was just a couple of years ago when it was around 34 per cent.

That's an absolutely wrong policy, Mr. Speaker. Property tax, to begin with, is basically a regressive tax. It is not linked to income levels in other than a very crude form. It's not sophisticated. I firmly believe, as this party has said on many occasions, that the funding for education should not be based on the property tax and that it should be based on progressive forms of taxation. That, of course, is in complete opposition to the government's policy. I certainly look forward to the day when that policy can be reversed.

I just wanted to take this opportunity on the finalizing of the estimates to lend my voice of complete frustration with the government. I've said it on many occasions and I'll continue to say it every opportunity I get: their funding policy for education is wrong, totally wrong. Instead of using the declining enrolment as an opportunity to improve the quality of education they use it as an opportunity to get out of their obligation to supply the dollars needed. That is a very sad thing indeed.

Mr. Cooke: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the remarks made by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere. I found it interesting that during the estimates the Minister of Education agreed that property taxes should not be covering as much of the expenses for school boards as they are presently covering. She indicated that eventually at some time in the future the government would be reversing the present trend and eventually get it back to 60 per cent. That's on the record and it was an exchange between the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) and the minister.

The minister, as I said, indicated very clearly that she believed that too much of the education funding was coming from property taxes. I suggested to her that if she believed that she should go to the corporations and the individual taxpayers of this province and collect the necessary money to put into education and properly finance it through a progressive tax system rather than the regressive property taxes. School board trustees are very reluctant to increase the mill rate these days because the mill rates have gone up so dramatically in the last few years because of this government's policies.

Because there's a vacuum on the part of this minister and this ministry, all across this province we're seeing schools closing and teachers being fired because of declining enrolment and no policy from this provincial government. In fact, the Jackson report has been out for a very long period of time now. I believe it is approaching a year, or is it over a year now? Ten months; we are close to a year.

Originally the minister indicated there was going to be a response in June or July. Then we were told it was coming in September or October. Here it is December 17 and we still have no response from the Jackson report. That report gave a series of very, very positive recommendations, both on funding and how to cope with declining enrolment.

Mr. Speaker, I think this minister, since taking over as Minister of Education and Minister of Colleges and Universities, has presented the people of Ontario with absolutely nothing in new initiatives of how school boards can cope with declining enrolment. By the time they come out with a response to Jackson, the major decisions by school boards will have been completed and implemented, schools will have been closed, teachers will have been fired and decisions will have been made that will be impossible to reverse.

I just want to state, on behalf of my party, that we are not satisfied with what this minister is doing and with the lack of initiative she has taken as apparently, or supposedly, the person in charge of education for this province.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the member for Kitchener-Wilmot that I was interested to read these documents he provided. As I have confessed to him, I have no idea what the diagnosis sub mucus palate is. I have never heard it before in my life and I doubt that anybody else has either.

Mr. Nixon: The Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) knows what it is and he's not even opted out.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I will consult with him. This is interesting material that has been provided by PIE, with whom I have had at least two meetings in the past, or who have had representatives present at meetings I have attended.

I share the honourable member's concern that parents are now wishing to participate more fully in the educational process. I think that is entirely true and I think there are very good reasons for it.

For a number of generations the teacher in the community was probably an individual of greater educational standing than many other members of the population of the community and enjoyed a degree of status which was not widely enjoyed by other members. Indeed, there was a little apprehension about questioning the teacher. Although one did discuss or talk with the teacher, one tended to take the teacher's advice without too much question.

The educational system in the province has produced a population of generally higher level of educational achievement than has ever been achieved in any jurisdiction before. Parents are now asking questions—and quite rightly; they should do so. They should ask questions about the educational program. They should tend to participate more vigorously in education than perhaps they have done traditionally. I hope we are coming out of the phase where we have been mesmerized by the expertise of one group or another within our society.

It had been my sincere hope over the past 13 months that I would be able to persuade parents to become more actively involved in consideration of educational concerns—to become very much more involved in the election of those representatives who are going to, on their behalf, deliver the educational programs within the community where they have jurisdiction and be responsible for the very large amounts of money they have to expend on behalf of education.

I have been asking parents, as well, to participate through such organizations as parent-teacher associations. I think it is an appropriate channel to ensure that the concerns of parents in groups are directed specifically to the educational system at the local level and at the central level. I think that is a reasonable thing to do.

The member for Kitchener-Wilmot has again reminded me of the growth of independent schools. There isn't any doubt that has happened because we have had an influx in immigration into our province of a number of people with a specific group of religious beliefs which they think must be fostered within their own religious schools. That, of course, is something which Ontario has always understood. That understanding continues and we do attempt to participate by ensuring that the standards in those schools are reasonable and do approach the standards which are required in the public school system.

I should like to assure the member for Kitchener-Wilmot that we really have begun a very careful examination of the quality of the educational program in Ontario through a number of examinations—reviews of a number of aspects of the educational system. We will be moving, as he very well knows, through a further assessment and evaluation process in the assessment instrument pool which will be put into effect, at least in a field-testing mechanism, some time during the next 12 months and which will provide us with the kind of careful look at what the educational system is doing in the elementary-secondary system which I think can provide us all with guidance—not just the Ministry of Education but teachers, school boards, students and parents alike. I am very hopeful that the kinds of initiatives which we are taking and will be taking will give us some direction.

The concern about values clarification is one which I share. I am not really sure how easy it is to integrate a value system that doesn't have some very clear definitions into an educational system. I think all of us within this Legislature realize there really isn't any relative state of what is right and what is wrong in many instances. There are many situations which have to be either black or white, right or wrong. It is difficult to provide in an unstructured way that kind of examination of moral issues which must be undertaken by young children, even those who are just beginning in the educational system. Therefore, we have been looking very carefully at the way in which that can be integrated into the system most appropriately.

I am not at all sure of the route at this point, but I can promise the honourable member I believe this is a problem which we must have solved by the end of this school year. I do not believe we can remain in this state of suspended animation, appearing to some people to be moving in the direction of moral relativism and, in the eyes of others, there appearing to be an absence of anything. I believe we have to make some very positive moves in this direction.

As far as the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere is concerned, I can only suggest to him that, if he had taken the time to participate even briefly in the estimates discussion he probably would have heard a great deal about the increase in the funding of education, a great deal which might have been useful to him.

I would also remind the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) that he, again in his usual fashion, is attempting to misinterpret what I said in the committee. What I said in the committee was that it was indeed the provincial objective to reach the level of sharing of educational funding which was suggested by Dr. Jackson and which was set out as a goal by the province several years ago; that undoubtedly we are going to continue to strive in that direction; but that I couldn't possibly tell him when we were going to meet it, because I don't know at this stage of the game. I am not saying that he is entirely wrong; it is simply that he distorted my words for his own purposes, devious though they may be at this point.

The honourable member also suggested we were closing schools right, left and centre and losing teachers all over the place. I would have to tell the honourable member that there was an increase in the total number of teachers in the elementary and secondary school systems in Ontario in 1979. There has not been a decrease. I would anticipate there may be a slight decrease for the year 1980, but I will get those figures for him.

Mr. Nixon: What was the decrease in student population?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We have a decreasing student population, rapidly decreasing.

Mr. Nixon: By how much?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Between 1976 and 1984, the school population in our secondary schools, on average, will decrease 20 per cent. In urban areas it will be 30 per cent unless there is a massive change in immigration policy.

Mr. Nixon: And there is not going to be any change in teacher numbers?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Apparently there is not going to be any change in teacher numbers, according to the member for Windsor-Sandwich.

According to that honourable member, it would be inappropriate to even decrease the increase in the number of teachers within the educational system in Ontario, in spite of declining enrolment. I understand his concerns and I understand totally the motivation behind his concerns, but I believe the Ministry of Education, the taxpayers of this province and the boards of education of this province recognize that they should be taking the opportunity available to them at this time, with the very marked decline in enrolment which is now occurring and which will continue to occur for at least the next five years, to enhance and improve the educational system in this province.

That is precisely the goal of the Ministry of Education. I know it's shared by a very large number of boards and I am aware there are many taxpayers, many parents, out there who agree with this completely. I am also aware that much of the Ontario Teachers' Federation membership agrees completely with that goal and that principle. I can only assure the honourable members, in spite of the continued malevolent statements made by certain members of the opposition, that indeed that's the goal we have and the one we are striving to reach.

I would move concurrence in supply for the Ministry of Education.

Resolution concurred in.

MINISTRY OF COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, once again, we very recently completed consideration of the minister's budget estimates and I don't intend to go over the same ground again. There were a couple of issues here as well, however, that we didn't spend very much time on. Perhaps we could spend a few minutes on them right now.

The first one I want to touch on is the advisory bodies that report to the ministry. The one reporting on university affairs, the Ontario Council on University Affairs, very recently presented a report entitled System on the Brink. This advisory body is trying to bring to the attention of the minister and the government the fact that if the funding procedures, the funding mechanisms, the funding levels which have been given to the universities of this province continue over the next two or three years—up until 1983, I believe they said—then the universities in this province will have reached such a point of deterioration it will take a very long time, if it is even possible, to recover.

That's a rather stinging indictment, I would suggest, and it is a rather sad one too. It is well known across Canada that Ontario spent a great deal of energy and a great deal of money building up its university system to be one of the best in the country and yet we hear from all sources—not just this advisory body, from the students, from the faculty and from the university administrators—that the funding that's been given to these universities in Ontario over the last six or seven years, I guess it is, they keep referring to has been such that we are, to use their expression, "on the brink."

Now I guess it is really in the minister's front yard, in the government's front yard—and I use the term "front yard" before we get to the "back yard"—right now to pull the system back from the brink rather than to let it topple over. The analogy, quite obviously, is it's going to be easier and less expensive to pull it back from that brink now than to wait for it to topple over and to have to climb down and pick up the pieces and try to put them all back together again. I am only hoping the minister is truly listening to that message.

We did mention during the estimates that the chairmen of the boards of governors of the universities across this province had come to the minister and had come to the Premier (Mr. Davis) and made a very strong petition to the government on behalf of the same principle, that as time went on they would be able to be less and less responsible for what was happening. They felt a great sense of responsibility. In most cases, as near as I know, these are all volunteers. They are businessmen, they are academics of one type or another, they represent labouring professions, they represent student bodies and they are deeply concerned about the institutions they represent. They are not saying it on their own behalf. In many cases it is not just for themselves, it is for the wider society, the wider group of which they are a part. That is the one group.

The other advisory body is that with respect to the community colleges. One of the questions I would have to ask the minister at this time is why it is that the advisory body, the council of regents, reporting to the minister with respect to the community colleges, the colleges of applied arts and technology, don't report with the same kind of openness that the universities do.

I think the minister realizes it is important for the public and for members of this Legislature to be as aware as possible about what those concerns are and I don't mean it from a critical or a negative point of view. I think there have been some very good debates in this Legislature and in the committees, the education committee or the Bill 19 committee and in the budget estimate committee. There have been some good debates as to what the issues are and what the concerns are and what might be done about it. The minister realizes that that is only possible if the kinds of reports that come to her attention from the council of regents are distributed with the same openness as those reports that come from the council on university affairs.

I realize that the relationship between the community colleges and the ministry is somewhat different than the relationship between the ministry and the universities. I recognize the greater autonomy and the greater independence of the universities. That is recognized, but surely that is not enough to deprive the public generally and the members of this Legislature of the kind of information the council of regents is giving to her. I would be very pleased to have the minister indicate the kinds of information she gets and the degree to which it might be available to us, if not in its present form, in some other form.

The second issue I would like to bring up at this time is one that has been brought up over and over again. I only want to bring it up once more because I still think it is so important and that is the role of polytechnics in this province. I am not saying it just because of Ryerson. I happen to have a particular affection for Ryerson, as do many members of this Legislature and as do many people outside this Legislature. But it is the whole concept of the polytechnics I want to address myself to once again.

I know the minister has brought to our attention that there are other institutions in this province that share some of the role of a polytechnic, that share some of the same kinds of programs that are available in a polytechnic like Ryerson. I know that in the University of Waterloo, in Lakehead University, in some of our community colleges there are elements of that kind of composition. That's fine; that's good; that is to be applauded. But surely the key to Ryerson is in its having that duality—that duality of top-notch technological training, that top-notch technical training, that top-notch business training and, at the same time, having the humanities aspect of it.

It seems to me—and this is something I am sure the minister has heard Walter Pitman, of Ryerson, say over and over again—this is almost the time for the type of institution like Ryerson to be enhanced and to be enlarged.

The minister may recall, from previous discussions with her predecessor, that I among others had suggested that maybe a serious look should be made about having other Ryerson-type polytechnics, at least one in northern Ontario and at least one in eastern Ontario. There is a quality and a nature about those parts of the province which in my judgement would lead themselves to be well served by a polytechnical institute in conjunction with the kind of service they are getting at the present time. How the balance would be made, I don't know. I don't have the minister's staff.

I would just like to raise these two issues at the present time and hope that we could get some response from the minister.

Mr. Martel: I want to make a few remarks on Laurentian University. Particularly since I overheard in the halls of this building I would appear before the ministry to discuss Laurentian University with trepidation. I must take this occasion to indicate that I am still here, standing without shaking.

I continue to be amazed by the minister's response to Laurentian University's dire needs. In her latest correspondence with me she says Laurentian University is adequately financed. I find it terribly distressing for a minister to suggest that Laurentian is adequately financed when this year it might have to cut out the geology course, which is somewhat important to the mining engineering course. It might have to cut the modern languages program, there's a possibility of the university having to reduce the philosophy department to nothing and it is having a problem with anthropology. And, as important, it is having trouble providing the number of courses required for the francophone community in northeastern Ontario.

This latter comment isn't my own. It comes from the budget committee at Laurentian University where the number of students who take the bilingual course is decreasing annually because most of them go to Ottawa where the options are more numerous. Something like 70 per cent of francophone students go to Ottawa rather than Laurentian because they can't get the variety of courses they need in order to meet their requirements—the number of options necessary.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: They don't have a medical school at Laurentian.

Mr. Martel: No one is suggesting a medical school. Seventy per cent of the students go there. I've spoken to the students and I have the comments of the budget committee before me. They can't meet the number of options that allow students to stay at the university. They just aren't there.

This is one of the reasons I and a number of other people over the years have argued that Laurentian has a special status in Ontario whether we like it or not. Not only is it an emerging university—it's 15 years old—but it has two official languages. Surely we both agree that it takes more funding for that type of situation.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: They get more funding.

Mr. Martel: I understand they get more funding. But if the funding isn't there to meet the needs of the area then you have to provide even more funding. You don't start to cut back because what's going to happen is the domino effect; the more you cut back the fewer students are going to be there. So it needs additional funding.

I don't care what the Ontario Council on University Affairs recommends with it. In Sudbury we know that students aren't coming. They're going to Ottawa instead and we know the reasons. That's been documented. Regardless of what they say, we have to have some type of formula so we can attract students—offer the options necessary to entice students to come to Laurentian as opposed to Ottawa. That will not occur under the present arrangement. It's as simple as that.

The minister knows that in addition to the francophone options, we are in danger of phasing out philosophy. In her recent letter to me, the minister says, let me quote: "Consequently, Laurentian must adapt its course options to the needs of the region and the wishes of the students of northern Ontario. If it is their decision not to enrol in philosophy at Laurentian, then I for one do not propose to direct tax dollars to finance something for which there is no demand."

Yet the budget committee said to me, "Philosophy is one of the departments that has successfully responded to the needs of off-campus students."

There is only one university in north-eastern Ontario and it has to serve more than Sudbury. The university goes to Timmins, Iron Bridge and a variety of places. Among the courses being taken are the philosophy courses, but they might have to eliminate their philosophy department. They tell me philosophy is one of the departments that has successfully responded to the needs of off-campus students.

The department has also developed a program in law and justice that is receiving good student response from across the province. Isn't it strange that because of a lack of funding they are going to have to cut somewhere? It has reached that point. It doesn't matter whether it is philosophy—they took that as one of the options. They can cut out that course in its entirety almost, simply because there isn't enough money to go around.

It isn't like the University of Toronto. When 26 staff members are cut at Laurentian University, that is 15 per cent of the staff. When 26 faculty at U of T are cut, I guess no one would notice it. The University of Toronto doesn't have to serve all of Metro Toronto, because there is York University. But Laurentian has to serve Timmins, Sault Ste. Marie and North Bay.

The minister can't make those arguments stick, but she tries. She says, "They have enough money." Obviously, they don't have enough money because they are wiping out four courses.

One of the courses being cut out that's of tremendous significance to northern Ontario is geology. We finally established a four-year mining engineering course several years ago, now geology is going to be cut. Does that make sense?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No. But that's not my decision, it's theirs.

Mr. Martel: But it is the minister who holds the purse strings. That is the game she doesn't want to talk about. The minister controls the purse strings.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Come on, they get more BIU than anybody.

Mr. Martel: The minister still controls the purse strings. When she has a university that is not only bilingual but a new university, she can't play that game. Laurentian, unlike the University of Toronto, has not been able to build up its funds. Only 15 years ago we took roughly $8 million out of the Sudbury area to get that university going. The minister can't say it is their choice. If they don't cut there, they will have to cut in another department. So they are taking the one which is less painful.

What could they do? Could they cut their translation courses? What are they going to cut? That is the problem. When one starts the surgery it has to be pretty drastic. It is drastic to cut out a whole course, geology, or it's drastic to cut out the modern-languages course, or philosophy. It is just intolerable.

For the minister to suggest to me that Laurentian is getting adequate funding is obviously not the case, because the needs are different. It isn't a nice, compact university like the U of T. It is widespread. More than half of its students are part-time students, so that's where most of the revenue comes from.

Then we hear from Dr. Ed Monahan, the former president of Laurentian. What does dear old Ed say? "Go out and borrow some money." Isn't that wonderful? If you want to finance the institution, go out Laurentian and borrow some money. That's a real solution to the problem of a small university. And I remind you that this is a small university that serves a region bigger than southern Ontario itself in square mileage.

Ed tells us to borrow some money. Those solutions simply aren't adequate. We have to get from the minister some sort of funding which will not allow this to happen. We met with the Minister of Education and the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) to try to find a way of getting $500,000 for Laurentian, which I guess would resolve the problem. To my knowledge, that has not as yet been accepted by the government. In fact, I guess it has been rejected.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No.

Mr. Martel: All I have is the most recent letter from Dr. H. B. M. Best, president of Laurentian University, to the minister, indicating what Laurentian is trying to do, how it is trying to get a committee going. The minister has to understand that in Sudbury we had major layoffs two years ago and a major strike this year. How do we raise funds in that type of environment, if we're going to go to many of the people in the Sudbury basin to put out the cash? It just doesn't work. Conditions are bad.

It's coming, though. But, until that takes effect, can we allow those cutbacks to occur and then go out and try and raise the money? It's just impossible.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: If you hadn't got any students to teach—

Mr. Martel: We haven't got students because we are cutting back. Why are the students going off?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: You tell me. Why are they voting to go off elsewhere?

Mr. Martel: They're going off to Ottawa because they can get the number of options they need.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Toronto, Queen's, Western, McMaster, Waterloo, Wilfrid Laurier, Windsor.

Mr. Martel: Going down.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Why are they going south?

Mr. Martel: Right. We have nothing in that university that's a drawing card to the university. Even Lakehead University at least has the forestry course which serves as its cornerstone. Laurentian hasn't any real drawing card. Some universities have medicine; some have dentistry.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: They have geology, mining engineering.

Mr. Martel: They're just moving into mining engineering, and we're already forced into the bind where we're going to have to cut the geology course.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Cutting geology at Laurentian is an asinine suggestion.

Mr. Martel: But that's what they're suggesting.

Mr. Warner: You're forcing them to.

Mr. Martel: They haven't got the money, what other course can they cut? What else can they cut?

I hope before this little discussion is over the minister will tell me where they can cut so I can go back to Dr. Best and say: "Look Henry, this is wrong. You should cut here and here and here and things will be better."

In Dr. Best's letter of just a couple of days ago, he does take strong exception with the minister on a number of points. For example, on her point on philosophy, he says: "Where a region is served by more than one university, it is possible to eliminate duplication or to have one university drop low-enrolment programs. In the case of single regional universities, elimination of basic or fundamental university programs can be the beginning of a loss of university status, with the corresponding subsequent decrease in enrolment in related programs and ultimate disintegration. We firmly believe that offerings must be kept up to the base minimum, unless enrolment justifies expansion beyond that."

Philosophy is a good example. The minister, in her letter just previous to this, tells me, "We can't force them into philosophy." No one is suggesting that. But if you don't have the funding to keep a core there at least, it's going to die. It's the domino effect in reverse. And it's going to occur; and the minister knows it.

Dr. Best indicates we are serving a large area with unique situations. My concern has been—and I've expressed it to the minister many times, in correspondence—that if we start to cut, and the cuts continue, we're dead. They might as well close the door, and we don't want that. We can't afford it.

Regardless of the formulae that are used, because of circumstances we simply have to have an opportunity to get over the hurdles we've had in the last two or three years, from 1976. We've got to maintain the courses that are there to ensure we can attract students. Somehow we've got to devise a drawing card. I've been arguing with Laurentian for seven years it should be mining and metallurgical engineering. It would be a natural in view of the research and development that could go on. But what's going on there now will be a disaster, if those four courses are cut.

I've talked to two of the best university people who have just left. They handed in their resignations and will not be back next fall. They're going because they feel the end is in sight for Laurentian.

Surely, there has to be additional funding to get us over this hurdle.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Windsor-Sandwich has the floor but I would ask him to hold his remarks until eight o'clock this evening.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

308. Mr. Breagh: Apart from the information to be contained in the response to question 173, would the Minister of Health table information, based upon the three-month notice of intent to opt-out of OHIP filed with his ministry by any physician who wishes to withdraw from OHIP, specifying the number of opted-out physicians by county in the following medical fields on a quarterly basis from December 31, 1977? Would the minister also state what percentage this number of opted-out physicians represents in terms of the total number of practising physicians in that field in that county? The medical fields include: general practice/family medicine, internal medicine, neurology, psychiatry, paediatrics, dermatology, physical medicine, general surgery, cardiovascular and thoracic surgery, urology, orthopaedic surgery, plastic surgery, neurosurgery, ophthalmology, otolaryngology, obstetrics and gynaecology, anaesthesia, and diagnostic radiology. (Tabled October 16, 1979. Interim answer November 1, 1979. Approximate date information available December 10, 1979.)

FOSTER CARE

371. Mr. McClellan: 1. When did the Ministry of Community and Social Services conduct an investigation into the death of Shawn Lee Mandamin; who conducted the investigation; what are the results of the investigation and specifically will the minister explain how it was possible for an infant ward of the children's aid society to be killed by child abuse by a CAS foster parent in a CAS foster home? 2. What is the current status of the Paquette children in Ottawa; how long were they kept in the admission and assessment home because of the lack of suitable foster care? 3. How many: (a) native foster homes; (b) francophone foster homes are available in Ontario; of these, how many are currently in use? 4. Why has the number of foster homes in Ontario declined by 34.7 per cent between 1966 and 1978? 5. Why has Ontario failed to maintain a 3:1 ratio between available foster homes and foster homes in use. (Tabled November 30, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Norton: 1. The Ministry of Community and Social Services conducted a review into the death of Shawn Lee Mandamin January 15 and 16, 1979. A child welfare consultant went to the society, interviewed staff and reviewed the case file. The results of the investigation are as follows:

A foster home study was completed February 14, 1978 and was supported by three good letters of reference. The family involved stated a preference for a white child on the foster home application. The foster home report indicated that this comment was discussed in detail with the family. The society worker decided the comment was due to a lack of understanding of native people. It is not unusual for potential foster families to identify the type of children they are willing to care for. It is the responsibility of the society to review and determine the reasons behind statements of preference. A native child was placed in the home in March for three months. A CAS worker saw the parents monthly and had several telephone conversations with them. A positive reassessment report on the foster home was completed in June by the CAS.

Shawn Lee Mandamin was placed in the foster home September 19, 1978. At this point, one might take issue with the procedure followed. Technically the provisions of the Child Welfare Act require that, "every child placed in a foster home or other home shall be visited by a social worker within seven days after the child's admission to the home; at least once within 30 days after this visit; and at least once every three months after the 30-day visit except where the local director directs otherwise." In this case visits were made by other community agencies to the family and the family visited the CAS in the office on two occasions. In total, the child and family were seen by the professional community and society staff on six different occasions. The sequence of visits were as follows: October 6, 1978, infant stimulation worker visited the home; October, office visit by family; November 1, infant stimulation worker visited the home; November 29, infant stimulation worker visited the home; November 30, public health nurse visited the home; December 16, family visited the office.

Although our investigation found that the procedures outlined in the regulations had not been strictly followed, it was determined that the family was not isolated in the community and that the society was aware of the involvement of other agencies with the family. There is evidence of planned involvement of other community professionals at the time of the child's placement. The society was found to have adequate procedures for servicing the foster parents, although they were not strictly followed in this case. The society felt that adequate professional contact was being maintained with the family through telephone calls and visits to the society, visits from the infant stimulation worker and the regional public health nurse.

Steps have been taken to ensure that the society adheres to the procedures dictated by the act, while continuing to make use of community agencies where appropriate. The ministry has been stressing, particularly since the formation of the children's services division, this community co-operation.

Our review of this case found no evidence or indication of previous ill-treatment of any children in this foster home nor any indication that warning signs of the foster father's behaviour were given.

A child has died and the tragedy of this event cannot be overstated. We should be particularly concerned when our efforts to help have the opposite effect. I have instructed my area staff to review the activities of this agency on a periodic basis to assure that the adequate procedures which they have in place for the selection and monitoring of foster homes are being followed.

2. With regard to the Paquette children in Ottawa, I am not free at this time to comment on the present status of the children due to the imposition of a court order that information leading to the identification of the children may be injurious to their emotional health.

In response to the question regarding the Paquette children's stay in the CAS assessment home, I wish to emphasize the use of the assessment home was not in any way due to the lack of foster homes for children. I advised the honourable member for Bellwoods of this in response to a question he tabled May 23, 1979. The children were moved from their foster home placement in September 1978 because of adjustment problems. The Ottawa/Carleton CAS felt that the children also required psychological assessment. For these reasons the society was attempting to limit the number of placements and provide a constant stable environment for these children while awaiting the outcome of court proceedings.

3. Each children's aid society across the province keeps track of its own foster home inventory and the number of homes in use as well as the number available. This number can change on a weekly or even daily basis.

Specific information on the number of foster homes suitable for the placement of native and francophone children currently available in Ontario is not readily assessable. Children's aid societies are already required to provide considerable information to the ministry and we have therefore not asked them to report information related to francophone and native foster homes.

With regard to francophone foster homes, we provided $36,000 to the Ottawa/Carleton CAS to carry out a recruitment campaign entitled Creating Links. The campaign began in March 1979 and has been extended to December 1979. The results to date have been: 30 new francophone foster homes; tripled inquiries; quality foster parents attracted; 150 francophone foster parents on file; improved understanding in the community.

In addition to the francophone campaign, the ministry has provided $35,000 to run a multilingual recruitment campaign through CFMT-TV, Channel 47, Toronto. The goals and objective of the projects are: To recruit suitable foster parents from specific ethnic target markets by utilizing professionally produced advertisements and purchasing commercial air time on multilingual television; to increase the number of appropriate foster placements within the identified target markets; to measure the effectiveness of multilingual television as a medium for generating suitable referrals from the specific ethnic groups; to develop, produce, and air three 30 second commercials, and one five minute mini-documentary, each to be dubbed in English, French, Italian and Portuguese; to develop the organizational and administrative procedures required to successfully advertise and promote foster care and recruit foster parents on an interagency basis utilizing a centralized approach.

4. A number of studies have been carried out or are currently being completed that describe current trends in foster care. The studies indicate a general decline in the relative use of foster care in our child-care system. Some of the major reasons for this relative decline are inferred from the statistical and qualitative research that forms the basis of the reports on foster care. They include: Poor recruitment programs; poor orientation training and support services for foster parents; inequitable compensation rates between service groups; absence of a consistent philosophy around the purposes of foster care and the client group it serves.

The ministry is presently identifying problems in the recruitment process and developing market strategies to improve the foster care process. The ministry is attempting to improve and generally enhance foster care in Ontario through the development of foster care standards and implementation of various initiatives. The initiatives are: A review of foster parent rates; a public campaign to improve the image of foster care; staffing increases for societies for foster care services; special foster care projects designed to create networks of specialized homes to care for disturbed teenagers; the development of adequate and equitable support services for foster parents to reduce the present burn-out rate of foster parents.

5. The province of Ontario does not have a policy on number of available homes and the number of foster homes in use. It has been suggested by some society case workers that the total number of foster homes in the system should exceed those in use by a ratio of 3 : 1. A consulting firm has been retained to give us more precise information on the number of foster homes needed in the system.

MINI-SKOOOLS DAY-CARE CENTRES

373. Mr. McClellan: Will the Ministry of Community and Social Services advise the House: (a) What was the enrolment of children at the following Mini-Skool day-care centres; Queensview, Brimorton, Tuxedo Court, Willowdale, Kingsview I, Kingsview II, Bramalea-Kingscross, for each of the months of June, July, August, September, October, 1979? (b) How many times and on what dates were each of these facilities inspected by the ministry during 1979? (c) What were the results of these inspections and specifically what violations, if any, of the Day Nurseries Act and/or regulations were observed? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Norton:

AMBULANCE SERVICE STUDIES

382. Mr. Breagh: Would the Ministry of Health indicate what studies have been conducted in the last three years regarding ambulance services, operations facilities, communications, et cetera? Who conducted the studies, for how long a period, how much was paid, what was the purpose of the study; and what action has been taken following receipt of any of these studies? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: A telecommunications study was undertaken during 1976/77 by the Ministry of Government Services for the ambulance services branch. An experienced radio systems engineering consultant was hired on a personal contract basis. The cost of the external consulting service was $40,000. The study was conducted over a period of ten months.

The purpose of the study was to evaluate the existing telecommunications systems used by the ambulance system and Ministry of Health and make recommendations concerning immediate and long term requirements. Recommendations from the study provide the basis for planning and implementation of central dispatch centres. As well, a radio frequency plan for the province was developed.

AMBULANCE COMPANY AUDITS

383. Mr. Breagh: Would the Ministry of Health indicate which ambulance companies, both private and public, have been audited in the last three years? How often have these companies been audited; and will the minister explain why any ambulance companies are audited more frequently or less frequently than others? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The following table indicates the total audits completed and reports issued in 1977, 1978 and 1979 to December 10:

Operated by	1977	1978	1979	Total
Ministry	—	—	2	2
Privately	5	9	22	36
Hospital	1	1	3	5
Municipal or Volunteer	2	1	—	3
	—	—	—	—
	8	11	27	46
	—	—	—	—

Note: These figures indicate when audit was completed and report issued and do not correspond to the period actually audited, e.g. Welland audits were for years 1975 and 1976.

Ambulance Services Audited in 1977:

Private: C. D. Watson Ambulance Service, Toronto; Greater Welland Ambulance Service, Welland; Jerome Alexander Ambulance Service, Welland; Quenville Ambulance Service, Hawkesbury; District of Halton and Mississauga, Oakville.

Hospital: Sudbury District Ambulance Service, Sudbury.

Municipal: Department of Ambulance Services, Metro Toronto.

Volunteer: Amherstburg, Anderdon and Malden District Volunteer Ambulance Service, Amherstburg.

Ambulance Services Audited in 1978:

Private: Port Colborne Ambulance Service, Port Colborne; Muskoka Ambulance Service, Bracebridge; Provincial Ambulance Service, Gananoque; Bruce District Ambulance Service, Port Elgin; Seaway Valley Ambulance Service, Morrisburg; Beaverton Ambulance Service, Beaverton; Locke Metro Ambulance Service, Toronto; LaSalle Ambulance Service, Belleville; Rushnell Ambulance Service, Trenton.

Hospital: Central Ambulance Dispatch Service, Windsor.

Municipal: Township of Ancaster Ambulance Service, Ancaster.

Ambulance Services Audited in 1979:

Private: Fenelon Ambulance Service, Fenelon Falls; Sun Parlour Emergency Services Incorporated, Leamington; Westlake Ambulance Service, Zurich; Owen Sound and District Ambulance Service, Owen Sound; W.C. Town Ambulance Service, Whitby; Rutherford's Ambulance Service, Colborne; McKechnie Ambulance Service, Collingwood; Verhoeve Ambulance Service, Langton; Murphy Ambulance Service, Delhi; Woodstock Ambulance Service, Woodstock; Chatham and District Ambulance Service, Chatham; Upper Ottawa Valley Ambulance Service, Petawawa; Cobourg and District Ambulance Service, Cobourg; Thames Valley Ambulance Limited, London; Port Colborne Ambulance Limited, Port Colborne; Book Ambulance Service, Smithville; Mount Forest District Ambulance Service, Mount Forest; Stratford Ambulance Service, Stratford; Fawcett Ambulance Service, Geraldton; Charles Brignall Ambulance Service, Port Perry; Georgian Bay and District Ambulance Dispatch, Barrie; Lewis Ambulance Service, Bradford.

Hospital: Sault-Algoma Ambulance Service, Sault Ste. Marie; Stratford General Hospital Ambulance Service, Stratford; North Bay District Hospital Ambulance Service, North Bay.

Ministry: Windsor Provincial Ambulance Service, Windsor; York South Ambulance Service, Concord.

Only two ambulance services were audited a second time in this period, i.e. Greater Welland Ambulance Service and Port Colborne Ambulance Service. Audits are repeated for a number of reasons, some of which are: termination of operation by existing operator; change in funding mechanism; and a review or evaluation of operational levels and existing funding.

WINTARIO FUNDING

384. Mr. G. Taylor: Will the Ministry of Culture and Recreation advise the House: (1) How many municipal recreational studies have in any way been financed by Wintario since the start of the program? (2) Which are the municipalities that have received such funds and in what amounts? (3) What is the average length of time needed to complete this type of study? (4) Is a recreational study compulsory before Wintario funds can be committed to municipal projects for capital expenditure? (5) What are the names of the consultants who have done recreational studies for municipalities for which Wintario funds have been contributed and what was the final cost of each study? (6) How many applications are there pending from municipalities for funds for recreational studies? By what municipalities have these applications been made and for what amounts? (7) Can a municipality qualify for capital funding by using one of its own recreational studies, done by its own staff, prior to the implementation of the policy on study requirements? (8) Will the ministry accept a study done by the municipality's recreation staff as the study required before capital funds can be applied for? (9) Does the ministry have some basic formula which could be applied, as an alternative to a study, to municipalities applying for this type of Wintario capital funding? (10) Is there a policy whereby previous studies done on the recreational needs of a municipality can be compiled and made available to that municipality when applying for Wintario capital funding, thereby eliminating the necessity for a new study and its corresponding cost? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Baetz:

1. How many municipal recreation studies have in any way been financed by Wintario since the start of the program?

The ministry, through the Wintario Planning Grants Program, funds two types of studies. The first type is that of a cultural recreation master plan. These are integrated comprehensive planning policies, goals and objectives which reflect the present and future cultural and recreation program facility and open space needs of the community. At the present time the ministry has approved the terms of reference for 11 such studies.

The second type of study that the ministry supports is that of a feasibility study. A feasibility study is an in-depth examination of the need for a specific facility, its location and economic feasibility. The ministry has given approval in principle for 20 municipal projects.

2. Which are the municipalities that have received such funds and in what amounts?

The following municipalities have been given approval for assistance in developing a cultural and recreation master plan:

Ajax—Wintario grant .....	$25,000.00
Aurora—Wintario grant .....	10,000.00
Barrie—Wintario grant .....	29,584.40
Nepean—Costs not forwarded to ministry
Oakville—Wintario grant .....	50,000.00
Stoney Creek—Wintario grant .....	20,000.00
Timmins—Wintario grant .....	37,950.00
Valley East—Wintario grant .....	25,000.00
Dymond Township—
Wintario grant .....	6,125.00
Cambridge—Wintario grant .....	10,066.00
Flamborough—Wintario grant .....	5,000.00

The following municipalities have been given approval for assistance in developing a feasibility study:

Ameliasburg .....	$ 2,750.00
Huntsville .....	4,173.16
Cobourg .....	2,400.00
Glamorgan .....	3,450.00
Galway/Cavendish .....	2,987.50
Chesley .....	2,000.00
North Hemsforth .....	2,500.00
Kirkland Lake .....	4,750.00
Kingston .....	1,050.00
Walkerton .....	1,022.43
Oakville .....	8,375.00
Ansen, Hinden and Minden—No costs available until tender results available
Thorold .....	1,400.00
Woodstock .....	6,025.00
Thunder Bay .....	11,000.00
Caledon .....	5,857.50
Shelbourne .....	3,060.00
Halton Hills .....	5,000.00
Scarborough .....	5,250.00
Douro .....	1,749.78

3. What is the average length of time needed to complete this type of study?

The average length of time depends on the size of the municipality and the terms of reference for the study. Culture and recreation master plans approved so far are taking from eight months to 12 months to complete. Feasibility studies vary in length from two months to six months to finish.

4. Is a recreational study compulsory before Wintario funds can be committed to municipal projects for capital expenditures?

A cultural and recreational master plan is not compulsory before Wintario funds can be committed to municipal projects for capital expenditures. Cultural and recreational planning studies, at the local and regional level, are being encouraged by the ministry to provide communities with accurate and comprehensive information. This information will then guide them in their own decisions about the provision of cultural and recreational opportunities and facilities in their community.

Before the moratorium on Wintario capital expenditures, this ministry asked all applicants for capital funds to provide information on the need, location and economic feasibility of their project. In some cases where this information was not available or the feasibility of the project was in doubt the ministry assisted municipalities with 50 per cent of the costs of a feasibility study to help provide the municipality with the information.

Studies therefore, are not necessarily a pre-requisite for capital funding; rather the ministry, by providing assistance is encouraging communities to use planning as a tool in their own decision-making.

As the member is no doubt aware, the capital priority review which is currently under way is examining all capital funding issues with respect to the provision of cultural and recreational facilities. Future directions with respect to planning and capital funding will be determined by that review.

5. What are the names of the consultants who have done recreational studies for municipalities for which Wintario funds have been contributed and what was the final cost of each study?

Only one cultural and recreational master plan study has been completed as of this date under the program. At present we have not had final cost figures for any of these studies. However, the ministry does not expect any deviation from the approved cost figures given earlier.

6. How many applications are there pending from municipalities for funds for recreational studies? By what municipalities have these applications been made and for what amounts?

In addition to the 11 municipalities that have been given approval for the assistance in developing cultural and recreational master plans, there are 20 others which have indicated an interest in applying for funding. The amount of money that is being requested cannot be determined at this stage as the communities are still in the formulation stage of their application and are still developing terms of reference. It would be inappropriate to name these 20 municipalities as at present they have not been given approval to proceed with the tendering proposal process. The publication of the names of the municipalities would lead to the tendering/bid proposal process being upset and municipalities being inundated with proposals from the private sector.

The grant program for feasibility studies fund's agencies and organizations as well as municipalities. There are approximately 20 feasibility studies in the negotiation stage of which six are from municipalities.

7. Can a municipality qualify for capital funding by using one of its own recreational studies, done by its own staff, prior to the implementation of the policy on study requirements?

When a municipality applies for capital funding, under the Wintario capital grants program which is at present subject to a moratorium, it was asked for information that justified the need, location and fiscal viability of the facility.

Municipalities have provided the information in any one of three ways. Firstly, the information may be gathered without any study, if it is readily available in that community. Secondly, municipality staff may utilize existing studies or conduct an in-house study to provide the background information. Thirdly, they may have outside consultants to provide them with the necessary information, where existing staff cannot provide the information.

8. Will the ministry accept a study done by the municipality's recreation staff as the study required before capital funds can be applied for?

Studies are not necessarily a prerequisite for capital funding. However, municipalities have utilized existing studies completed by their recreation staff to provide information that supports their application for capital funds.

9. Does the ministry have some basic formulae which could be applied, as an alternative to a study, to municipalities applying for this type of Wintario capital funding?

There is no basic formulae which could be applied, although I have pointed out, it has not been necessary to complete a study to access funds from the capital funding program. If the municipality can support its application with information already available which justifies the need, location and operational viability of the project it would be eligible for consideration for capital funding without a requirement for a study.

10. Is there a policy whereby previous studies done on recreational needs of a municipality can be compiled and made available to that municipality when applying for Wintario capital funding, thereby eliminating the necessity for a new study and its corresponding costs?

There is no policy from the provincial government to insist that the municipalities must utilize existing studies rather than embark upon a new plan. Many studies become outdated in a short time and were completed without addressing major concerns that are now confronting municipalities. However, when staff of the ministry begin to negotiate and develop the terms of reference for community cultural and recreational master plans they insist that the study team of the municipality review existing studies to ensure that there is no duplication. When studies or parts of them are relevant to the questions being asked in that community, the terms of reference of that study will ensure that maximum use of existing studies will be made.

LOTTERY DISTRIBUTORS

385. Mr. G. Taylor: Will the Ministry of Culture and Recreation advise the House: (1) How many Wintario, Lottario and Provincial distributors are there whose territory includes the riding of Simcoe Centre and who are they? (2) Is Ray Bowes a distributor, or Ray Bowes and Associates Incorporated a distributor for the area which includes the riding of Simcoe Centre? (3) Is Ray Bowes and Associates Incorporated the sole distributor of provincial lottery programs for the riding of Simcoe Centre and if that individual or that company, is the sole distributor, what size territory does that distribution area cover? (4) If there are any other distributors, provide the names of same. (5) In terms of payment by the provincial lottery programs by way of salaries or commission or otherwise, what has the provincial lottery program paid to the distributor which includes the riding of Simcoe Centre? (6) In terms of payment by the provincial lottery programs by way of salaries or commission or otherwise, what is the average for all provincial lottery program distributors for areas similar in size to Simcoe Centre? (7) What are the regulations and criteria concerning the granting of distribution contracts for all provincial lottery programs and that of subdistributor? (8) Is there a review mechanism whereby on a regular basis the distributor's contract with the different lotteries is re-evaluated? (9) How many distributors or subagents are there in the area of the riding of Simcoe Centre? (10) What is the amount of payment made to the subdistributors by way of commission, override or other payments of any nature for each of the years for which one of the lotteries carried on by the provincial government was in operation? (11) Is there a review mechanism for the subdistributors' or subagents' contract for the sale of lottery tickets for all provincial lottery programs? (12) What is the amount of over-ride commission or partial commission to a distributor as a result of the sales of a sub-distributor on any of the lotteries for the distributor's territory? (13) Can distributors or subdistributors carry on or participate in the sale of other lotteries as well as provincial lottery programs? (14) What are the criteria for the locating of Lottario machines? (15) Has there ever been any consideration given by the ministry to divide the areas into smaller units when a distributor arrives at a particular income or volume level of sales? (16) Will the Loto Canada operations be integrated with the other provincial lotteries? (17) If so, will there be an increase in the number of distributing contracts? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Because of the volume of information requested, we require additional time for the preparation of the answer. The final answer will be ready on or about mid-March 1980.

BOROUGH OF YORK GRANTS

388. Mr. Grande: Will the minister responsible produce the following information regarding the municipality of the borough of York: (a) Background material with which the ministry has made the decision to grant the municipality $280,000 of assessment related grants; (b) Any and all grants the borough received directly in the years 1976-77-78-79-80? Would the ministry indicate for what specific purpose or purposes the funds were generated? (Tabled December 4, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Wells: Since some of the grants information requested is not yet available, a complete answer is not possible at this time. The information should be available on or about mid-March 1980.

ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM

389. Mr. Grande: (1) Will the Ministry of Culture and Recreation table any or all the plans the ROM has made re: the employees at that institution as a result of the planned shutdown of the museum for 15 months? Will any of the part-time or full-time employees be laid off? If so, state in which categories, how many, and for what period of time. (2) Will the minister provide the following information concerning the ROM: Once the renovations and construction are completed there will be approximately over 50,000 more square feet of empty space. Will the ministry provide plans for the utilisation of that space, particularly in the Terrace Gallery and also provide a timetable as to when the space will be put to use and to what use? (Tabled December 4, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Baetz: 1. Some part-time and full-time security officers will be laid off, for lack of work appropriate to their skills, during periods of gallery closings. The details of how many and for how long are not known at this time by museum management. All such staff will be on a call-back list. (Notices of such layoffs have gone out to eight full-time and two part-time security officers, for a reduction of work of 368 hours per week.)

2. The new museum will have 219,000 square feet of public gallery space. The ROM's planning document Mankind Discovering (August 1978) calls for 68,000 square feet of gallery exhibits to be in place by the time of the museum's reopening in 1982. The museum still expects to at least meet this goal. The remaining gallery areas (151,000 square feet) will be filled with new and refurbished exhibits as rapidly after that date as staff and financial resources allow.

HALF-BACK PROGRAM

390. Mr. Grande: Will the Ministry of Culture and Recreation table any report that is available at this time regarding the success or failure of the Half-Back Program as it relates to movies and records? If the final report is not yet available, will the ministry make the commitment to table it as soon as possible? (Tabled December 4, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Because of the volume of information requested, we require additional time for the preparation of the answer. The final answer will be ready on or about December 21.

ABSENCE OF CROWN ATTORNEY

394. Mr. Warner: Will the Attorney General advise the House why on the morning of November 30, 1979 there was no crown attorney present in the Provincial Court, Newmarket, thus inconveniencing the court, the judge, at least one other lawyer and several witnesses? Why was there not a substitute for the crown attorney when he was not able to attend due to illness to appear in court? When will contingency plans be developed and what will those contingency plans be? (Tabled December 4, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: On the morning of November 30, 1979, at 7 a.m., the assistant crown attorney assigned to the Newmarket court notified the deputy crown attorney that due to sickness, he would not be able to attend in court that day.

Because several assistant crown attorneys were committed on continuing cases, including an inquest, and others had already been assigned to the court at 1000 Finch Avenue West, it was not possible to find a replacement for the Newmarket court at such short notice.

A part-time assistant crown attorney is being appointed for the area and consideration is being given to further part-time appointments for emergency use in the future.

RESPONSE TO PETITION

WASTE SOLVENTS STORAGE

The following response is provided to the petition presented to the Legislative Assembly regarding the proposal by Frontenac Chemical Waste Services Limited, to operate a transfer station on property located at Lincoln and King Streets in the city of Welland, Ontario.

In a recent public announcement, the company has stated that they will not be proceeding with the project. In the light of the company's decision not to proceed with the project, the ministry has requested that they return the certificate issued to them under the Environmental Protection Act.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY MINISTRY OF COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES (concluded)

Mr. Warner: I have two items. Mr. Speaker, I put in the plea again, as I have on several occasions, regarding the overcrowded library facilities at Scarborough College. The minister is painfully aware of the situation there. Her only answer to this point has been that the people of the community should continue to raise funds to pay for the books. Somehow, providing library space is not a responsibility of the government. The students have undertaken to carry out her responsibilities as best they can. Of course, the students who attend that college do not have the resources the government has, but none the less they have done their best.

The minister realizes those facilities are not adequate. They are not adequate now and, as expansion takes place at Scarborough College, they will be even less adequate. I make my plea again for the expanded library facilities, knowing full well the government doesn't intend to do anything.

Second, I understand—and I would appreciate being corrected if I'm wrong—that the facilities for the science laboratory at Brock University remain in an unsuitable condition. I think it was 1976 when I visited there to see the faculty, and I saw the students trying to exist in a building that should have been condemned. It was an old converted dairy and it was not suitable. It was overcrowded. The building was on the verge of disintegrating, it appeared to me. The university had pressed very hard to get the needed funds, but at that time there was a capital freeze on.

They weren't allowed to renovate it because the building wasn't worthy of renovation. The municipal inspection officials indicated they would not allow a renovation because it was too dangerous a situation. They required a new building. I understand that condition still exists.

Shocking as it may be, apparently in three years the government has done nothing.

Absolutely nothing. I don't understand it. I don't understand how the government could tolerate that kind of inadequate facility, but it apparently does. I don't know how long it will take. Are they waiting for a disaster? Are they waiting for the building to collapse? Believe me, if the government waits long enough, it will collapse. And the government will do nothing.

Brock has been here; the president has been here. They came up and made a film. They have done everything they can think of to prod the conscience of the government about this building.

I have visited every college and university in this province, every single one. I have been to every campus. Nowhere have I ever seen a more dilapidated facility than the one at Brock. Yet this government adamantly refuses to do anything about it. I just don't understand it. How can the government accept that?

What that condition at Brock speaks to is the general attitude of this government towards colleges and universities. It talks very nicely about what a great system we have, except when it is put to the test, and part of the test is that facility at Brock. The other part is research and development. If this government were committed to a college and university system, it would ensure that R and D for our industry was done in Ontario in those colleges and universities so that we were guaranteed objective and independent research and Canadian development for our industries.

But the government makes no such commitment. In fact, what we have now in 1979 is a worse situation than we had in 1975 with respect to research and development. We have less of a commitment today than we had four years ago. Research and development is disappearing, and yet the colleges and universities obviously are the place where it should be done, instead of leaving it to private industry or to American companies to do as they see fit. I'm afraid it's a very sad commentary on this government and its commitment to a Canadian economy. There is no spirit of independence where the economy is concerned.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, in this debate I wish to raise a very serious concern, and I hope to get some kind of response from the minister as to what commitment, if any, she is making to the continuance and not only the survival, but also the expansion, of Algoma University College in Sault Ste. Marie. I understand representatives of the administration and of the faculty were to meet with the ministry today to discuss the future of the college. The announcement was made last week that five staff members would be laid off at the end of the year. Those individual teaching staff members designated for nonrenewal of their contracts have until December 29, to appeal that, so there may be some further discussion, but as of now there isn't any indication individual members of that group will have grounds for appeal.

Both the minister, and I, and other members of the House, realize one of the problems we have in assuring the survival of Algoma University College as a separate institution to serve the post-secondary educational needs of the community of Sault Ste. Marie and of Algoma district is in terms of enrolment. The enrolment has not been what was hoped for, and there are a number of reasons for that. Most Ontario universities have experienced drops in enrolment over the last couple of years. Since Algoma University College is one of the smallest of all Ontario institutions, the weaknesses and problems in the system are most likely to show at that institution first.

It is just the tip of the iceberg. What we are seeing at Algoma University College this year, and have seen over the last couple of years, in terms of problems of enrolment and financing is going to show up in other universities in the not-too-distant future unless something is done, unless there is a change by the ministry in how it views post-secondary education in Ontario and the provincial commitment to funding institutions that may not be able to maintain the kind of enrolment anticipated when there was an expansion of the system in the late 1950s and 1960s.

I would like to know what, if anything, the ministry is willing to do in terms of giving Algoma University College greater flexibility in courses it can provide for the community. Unless it can do that, unless it has more flexibility in its agreement with Laurentian, then it is going to have more difficult times in attracting and keeping students. If it can't get more students, then it is going to have to cut even more staff, which will make it even more difficult to provide the kinds of courses it is now giving, much less expanding and giving greater variety of courses.

We have a snowball effect where we will have fewer students coming, so we will have to cut more staff which means less variety of courses and so on until we see the final demise of the university in Sault Ste. Marie. If it doesn't survive, if it doesn't make it now, we are never going to make it in terms of a post-secondary educational institution in the Sault. There is a need, if the college can provide the kinds of courses students want. [8:15]

Because of the demand for things like business and science courses which the university college cannot provide, students from Sault Ste. Marie and the Algoma district, who might choose courses in the college in their own community, are going elsewhere—some are going to other universities in northern Ontario, but most of them are going to southern Ontario or in significant numbers to Lake Superior State College in Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan. The minister knows that particular institution has done a great deal in trying to promote itself and to attract Canadian students. They have been given particular flexibility by the state to make it very attractive, in terms of tuition fees, for Canadian students to attend Lake Superior State, and that institution is doing very well and expanding.

There have been a number of suggestions for the future of Algoma University College involving agreements of some sort, even amalgamation with Lake Superior State, or some sort of University of Northern Ontario which works in all of the post-secondary educational institutions in the north, right from Nipissing College all the way to the small college in Hearst, and involving both the Lakehead University and Laurentian University, in providing the kinds of courses across the north which would attract students and make it less necessary for them to incur the tremendous expense and separation from their families of travelling to universities in southern Ontario.

Before we pass concurrence in these estimates, I'd appreciate it if the minister would give us some idea of what transpired at the meeting today with the college administration and faculty representatives. Would she give us some idea of what kind of flexibility the ministry is willing to provide to allow Algoma University College to give us a more varied program and to enable it to attract more students so that we can have a long-term development of a post-secondary educational institution like the college in Sault Ste. Marie and the Algoma district?

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. After hearing the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) and the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) talk about two of the institutions in the north, I compared that to the opening statement of the goals and objectives presented to the justice committee by the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) just last week.

She stated in her opening statement that it's one of the goals of this ministry—indeed, one of the goals that this ministry has accomplished—that we have equal opportunity and equal access to post-secondary education in this province. She was proud to make that statement in her goals and objectives.

I would say that, by starving Laurentian University and by starving Algoma University College, she is creating more of an inequity than already existed between the north and the south, and between working-class students and students from rich and professional families. Those students have never been equally represented in our post-secondary institutions. This government has demonstrated, both in the estimates that just took place and in the Bill 19 hearings, that it has no idea and no plans and no strategy on how to accomplish equal accessibility for all students in this province.

A good example is the native studies program at Trent University for which that university has been attempting to get funding from this government and from the former Liberal federal government in Ottawa. Both of them keep passing the buck so that program, while it was in place last year, was going to be going out of operation because of a lack of funding. It may not have gone out of operation yet, but they don't have continuing funding and they don't have a long-term future unless one of the governments commits itself to it. That program was an excellent example—one of the few examples—of how a university was working to get certain types of students who are not adequately represented in our institutions into the university system.

The minister talked a while ago and she said the university students from Sudbury do not patronize Laurentian; they go to Windsor, to the University of Toronto, or to various other institutions. The fact of the matter is that the minister, as she usually does, completely forgot about part-time students, who in large measure are adult, working-class students who are attempting to upgrade themselves. If Laurentian University or Algoma University College went out of business, they could not travel on a nightly basis to the University of Toronto.

I think the minister understands that. But she certainly doesn't indicate any commitment at all to part-time studies in this province as a way of creating equal access for adult students.

I am still waiting for a response from the minister to the P. S. Ross report. That was promised in November and, as the minister has said on several occasions, she has great difficulty meeting deadlines. We in the Legislature all know that. I assume if she doesn't make a statement this week—and I hope she will indicate tonight whether she will be—that she will be making another very important statement on universities and colleges when the Legislature is not sitting, which is very typical of this minister. It doesn't give the opposition parties the opportunity to respond immediately in question period and to question the wisdom or lack of wisdom of government policy decisions.

Another thing is Ryerson. We have raised the matter in the House during question period; we have raised it during the estimates that just took place. I hope the minister will also indicate tonight that she will be able to respond to the Ryerson problem before the House rises. We have been waiting for a couple of years now. She has used the excuse that she couldn't respond because she is a new minister and the problem only came to her attention at the beginning of this year. We know the former minister was dealing with it, but this government does not seem to be able to react to even a relatively simple, straightforward problem. Ryerson has presented its case, yet this government does not respond.

Finally, I want the minister to state clearly tonight how she reacts to the advertising programs some of the universities are putting on. I believe the type of funding this government provides and the method of distributing funding result in a waste of money. Look at the University of Guelph advertising program, where they use jingles and disco music and radio ads to sell their university. If the minister created a funding program that recognized basic needs and had some degree of flexibility and reacted to enrolment, then she could take out some of that competition and have universities work cooperatively and design their programs to meet the needs of society rather than just trying to attract bodies.

I hope the minister will respond. I am not particularly hopeful she will. She didn't do so during the estimates.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I did so. You weren't there. You weren't there all the time.

Mr. Cooke: The minister can say she responded.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You don't like competition anywhere, any time, and you know it. That's a matter of principle with you.

Mr. Cooke: At least we have some principles over here. That is more than I can say for the minister and the government.

The only way the minister responded during estimates was to give a 160-page opening statement on Education and a 101-page opening statement on Colleges and Universities. The only reason she gave that kind of an opening statement was that she hadn't familiarized herself with the ministry yet; so her bureaucrats write her this big statement, and she knows what is going on with her ministry, because she hasn't had a chance to read anything.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the member for Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney) made a statement about reports from the Council of Regents regarding the information that was made available. The reports I receive on recommendations from the Council of Regents are made public, and they are made public in exactly the same form that I receive them. There are, to my knowledge at this point, few other studies that have been done which have not been reported, but I shall certainly ensure, when a study is done that relates to the community colleges, that it is made public as soon as we have had an opportunity to look at it.

The other area that has been raised by two or three people is the area of the polytechnics. We have an interesting situation in Ontario where, as the member for Kitchener-Wilmot suggests, there are certain aspects of the polytechnical educational field which are met by certain of our universities, certain aspects which are met by our community colleges, and we have in Ryerson an institution which combines many of those aspects into one institution in a rather interesting way.

Ryerson has been compared to polytechnical institutions in other jurisdictions as part of an argument to modify the funding process for Ryerson. On careful examination one would note that indeed Ryerson does not fit the example of a polytechnical institution, either in Great Britain or in the United States. I think we have to consider Ryerson to be a relatively unique institution; not exactly an international polytechnic but an Ontario polytechnical institution that really can't be compared very readily with many other institutions.

As a result of the request made by Ryerson, as the honourable members know, the Ontario Council on University Affairs has been examining a good deal of information, supplied to the council through me, for examination of the funding mechanism for Ryerson. I'm happy that OCUA has completed its deliberations in this area and has provided me with a report on which I shall be reporting, publicly and to the House, probably by the end of this week, regarding modifications to Ryerson's funding. But in addition, Ryerson's request for additional accommodation for its architectural school has in fact been met within the last several months, and I think that will solve some of the space problems which Ryerson seems to be facing.

Laurentian University was raised by the member for Sudbury East—Walter by name, the goatkeeper.

Mr. Martel: They are your goats, you funded them.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: When the honourable member suggests that the provincial government funded, they were funded on the basis that we thought several rather senior members of that steering committee would have the capacity to ensure that the investment was made appropriately. Perhaps it was, but it was an interesting little development which occurred. The only question I'm asking at the moment is where are the goats? I'm not sure whether anybody has been able to find them at this point.

Mr. Martel: In Minaki; we sent them all up to Minaki.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I think Laurentian University, Algoma, College de Hearst and Nipissing, plus Lakehead, are very important institutions for the province of Ontario. One of the difficulties that has occurred in the past is that we have tended to look at the development of northern universities in the same light as we would universities for southern Ontario.

I'm not at all sure that that should be done. I'm not at all sure that the traditional structure, the traditional makeup of a university which relates to a fairly heavily populated area, is entirely appropriate for northern Ontario. I have asked on several occasions whether we should examine, or whether the university system itself, particularly the institutions themselves, might not examine their structure and roles to ensure their increasing relevance to the area of the province they are designed to serve.

Because of the concern about the need for these institutions in a post-secondary sense in northern Ontario, very specific and deliberate action has been taken to provide funding which is a good deal more significant for the northern universities, particularly for Laurentian and Algoma and College de Hearst. Indeed although Algoma has had a fairly significant decline in enrolment, as have many other institutions—however Algoma's decline between 1972 and 1978 was something of the order of 27 per cent—even so grants to Algoma increased by 68 per cent over the same period of time.

I think that really demonstrates that the provincial government has had very real concern for the continuing existence of those universities.

But existence and viability may be two different things, and the continuing viability of those institutions can be met only if the people within that community have a feeling of security about the quality of the institution and the capability of that institution to meet their needs.

For example, when I looked at the members of this year's graduating classes from Sault Ste. Marie who went to other universities to take courses they could have taken at Algoma, I found that 216 of them came to southern universities at a time when they could have been taking courses at Algoma University College which would have filled the needs as they perceived them, apparently, at least in terms of the choices they made. Given that situation one has just a little bit of concern whether that viability can continue.

Mr. Warner: You're attacking the college.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: There must be a commitment on the part of the local community and the students, and there must be an examination by that institution of its role related to its community and to its region in order to ensure it is meeting the needs of that region appropriately.

The suggestion was raised, as well, about part-time students. There is no doubt in my mind this is an area universities are now beginning to recognize as one of the most important functions they serve. It has taken many years for this realization to dawn, but the significant decrease in numbers of students at the immediate post-secondary level has borne the message home rather more vigorously than it has ever been borne before.

It is particularly important that those universities away from very large urban areas have the capability to provide part-time courses in order to meet the needs of local people. They must have, however, a base on which to provide that part-time capability, and it is in that light I have asked both Laurentian and Algoma, as well as others, to examine their roles and their structures and to come up with modifications which would ensure they continue to be vigorous, viable institutions.

There was a question raised about Scarborough College library. If the honourable member had bothered to come to the estimates, he would have found that the ministry has made a proposal to the University of Toronto, which the university is considering, in terms of improving the library facilities at Scarborough. I am awaiting response to that suggestion.

Mr. Martel: You never told us.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I didn't tell members the details of it because it is a proposal made to the university. Since it is the university's decision about the priority list it establishes for capital construction, we really must abide by the decision it makes.

The science capacity at Brock University is another matter under consideration at this point. Modifications to a plan which was submitted are in the process of being done for resubmission to the ministry.

The capacity of universities to do research is recognized in the basic funding mechanism established within Ontario. One third of the funding is provided for the purpose of basic research at the universities. That one third is specifically directed, one would hope, towards research capacity at the universities; but the universities are autonomous and they do make the decisions about the ways they spend the money made available to them.

Accessibility to university is a matter on which the members of the social policy committee spent a good deal of time. It is a matter we have discussed at some length with the Ontario Federation of Students. At present the federation and the ministry staff are attempting to develop a protocol which would allow us to do the kind of research study the federation feels would be appropriate in determining that our accessibility rate is not in any way negated within Ontario.

I would be delighted to tell the honourable members who were not in the estimates committee, however, that the constant cry by the members of the third party that we should eliminate all university fees as a method of increasing accessibility is not borne out by statistics which the members for Kitchener-Wilmot and Windsor-Riverside have looked at—

Mr. Wildman: Those statistics were developed for your own purposes.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I would like the honourable member to withdraw that remark. Those statistics were drawn from an international journal of great repute. They were not in any way modified.

What these statistics demonstrate is that the participation rate of students from the lower socio-economic stratum of society in Great Britain and Sweden is less than it is in Ontario where there are fees. In Sweden there are no fees and in Great Britain there are very minimal fees.

Accessibility to universities is certainly one of the goals and objectives of this government. We are attempting, through the Ontario Student Assistance Program, to ensure that that accessibility, particularly for students from the lower income groups, will be maintained.

I never cease to be amazed at the concept of the members of the third party that they have some monopoly on concern for the people of this province. I would like them to be aware of the fact that members of my caucus and the members of this government are at least as concerned, if not more concerned because we have no ideological axe to grind in proposing that we increase the accessibility and provide support for our universities, it is simply that we know that those institutions are vital to the future of this province.

Resolution concurred in.

MINISTRY OF COMMUNITY AND SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to speak in this concurrence debate. A great deal of what I will be saying has already been covered earlier in these estimates in a more full and detailed way, but I would like to bring up the one thing I am hearing more frequently than anything else these days, and that is the insufficient amount of family benefits.

The level of family benefits is proving to be absolutely inadequate in today's inflated society. I don't know how these people are managing. If the amount was a justified amount last year, it certainly must be totally inadequate for their needs today. They must be living very close to the poverty line. I believe this is an area where the ministry should be looking at some increase for these people at this time.

Another matter that has been brought to my attention is that a number of single mothers on mothers' allowance apparently are often not paying their rent. I have been approached by a landlord in the Sarnia-Lambton area who tells me that about 70 landlords have tenants of this type in their apartment buildings. I have a meeting set up with these people to hear their problems during the Christmas recess.

As I understand it, when a person stops paying her rent the Ministry of Community and Social Services deducts that amount or holds back the rental portion of her allowance, but the landlord gets nothing. If he has to go ahead and take action to have the person evicted, this is a very costly matter, and of course is very poor public relations for him.

I believe there should be some way in which that portion of their income which is attributable to rent, which is usually not as high as the actual rent is anyway, could be in some way paid to the landlord.

The next problem I am hearing about is the municipal welfare budget. A number of municipal welfare departments are indicating they are overspent, or will be substantially overspent by the end of the year. I believe this is the case in my own particular municipality.

It is difficult for these people. The municipal council has budgeted and now is finding itself, in some cases with substantial deficits because of the proportion of the welfare budget having to be paid by the municipalities.

The next item I would like to speak on is children's services in Ontario. Over the past two years children's services have been seriously affected by the reduction in budgets caused by the ministry. The ministry says it hasn't reduced the budgets and that they actually increased them. However, the increases are nowhere sufficient to meet the increased costs as well as, and this is the important part, the increased demands for their services.

Another problem I have seen in this is the closing of beds in institutions, such as correctional schools, training schools and so forth. What happens when these beds are closed? These children come back into the community. Some of them to live with their parents, some to live with foster parents and so forth, but they go into the school system and there they are proving to be a problem and a disruption in the classes and to other people. The minister must have known this would happen, yet there doesn't seem to be any provision made for looking after this type of child coming back to live in the community and having to go through the school system.

We have seen many children with emotional problems who have had to wait months to get into an institution where those emotional problems could be assessed and hopefully corrected.

These are some of the things we have seen happen in our children's services in Ontario.

I would also point out that this year has been somewhat of a horror story for children's aid societies. This is occurring throughout the province. Of the 51 children's aid societies I believe about 30 are asking for a review of their budgets, have had a review or have a review under way. About a dozen municipalities have asked for a review from another viewpoint, of course.

Obviously, the handling of the children's aid societies in Ontario over this past year has really been a bad scene. It is no wonder that we are seeing the problems arising in many CASs in Ontario. I'm not just speaking about Algoma and the Niagara group; every children's aid society we have had the opportunity to speak to has found it has had less money to operate with, greater demand for its services, increased work load because of child abuse legislation and so forth.

The minister will say, and he's correct of course, that there have been the increases which he has pointed out. But obviously these increases have not been sufficient to handle the work load that is now apparent in the various children's aid societies in Ontario.

What is going to happen next year? I hate to think about it, because all the problems and difficulties with which these people have been faced in 1979 are going to be there in 1980, and probably in greater amounts with the continuing breakdown of the family unit within the province, with the number of single-parent families, and of course with the increasing unemployment and inflation in the province. I would say the minister is going to have to look at this very closely. Hopefully there will be a more supportive assistance in the provincial contribution to the children's aid societies of Ontario.

The final thing I want to mention is the support for the elderly in Ontario. I was reading last week's papers this weekend and saw an article which stated that the North Lambton Rest Home was having great difficulty. They have a deficit of $60,000 according to the administrator, and if this isn't looked at and attended to, if they do not receive money from the ministry to assist them, they are going to have to cut back very substantially in services.

This home, which is not in my riding but in my neighbouring riding, is a home for aged, handicapped and seriously impaired people. The Twilight Haven Home in Petrolia, partly used by Sarnia, is having the same problem. This is all at a time when there are more and more elderly in our area and when there are more and more cutbacks. There are no more nursing home beds in our area of late, and there have been the cutbacks in hospitals.

This is really a problem that has to be addressed. The minister will say we have to cut back and we have to do this and so forth; but we do have some responsibility to the elderly and the chronically ill. These are just two outstanding instances.

I would like to say a few words about the recent series in the Toronto Star on the single elderly woman living alone in Toronto in what appears to be almost abject poverty. The minister will say that was just a lot of journalism drawing on sympathetic readers, but there are a lot of people living like that and it can't be discounted.

The minister must know, even better than I, the problems of single elderly people living in the community. In my own community I am sure there are many.

I recently had a lady who was living in a basement on Penrose Street in Sarnia. There was a sink in the basement, but there was no bath, no toilet—nothing. She had to walk to the second floor. This is living in a basement. It had brick walls, just like an old brick basement.

Finally, I recently got her into a senior citizen's apartment. My wife and I dropped around to see her and she ran to the door and threw her arms around both of us. My wife said, "My gosh, what is this?" The woman said she was almost living a new life again.

There is a case in my own riding where a woman was living in conditions none of us would condone. This was highlighted in the recent series in the Toronto Star. I know the minister will say it was exaggerated and it was presented as worse than it is; but it is obviously there and it is a problem that will have to be addressed by this government.

With those few comments, I hope the minister will be able to address some of those matters, but particularly that his ministry will be making plans to alleviate these problems we see in our communities today.

Mr. McClellan: When we started the concurrence debate earlier in the week, and I am not sure whether it was you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, or Mr. Speaker himself, one of you incorrectly introduced the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations as the Minister of Community and Social Services. The incumbent Minister of Community and Social Services concurred with the designation and submitted to me his letter of resignation. I just want to assure the minister that I don't intend to accept his letter of resignation. I think it is only appropriate that he continue to stew in the problems he himself has created with his so-called reforms over the past number of years. I can't think of a more appropriate punishment for him than having to remain in his present position to watch the gradual unravelling of his rhetorical promises and unfulfilled commitments which have been coming forth since 1976, but which have yet to be achieved or implemented.

I don't intend to cover ground that was covered during the estimates debates, but there are some, if you will, cleanup items I would like some response to, at least to let the minister know I don't intend to allow these matters we raised in estimates to vanish into the air. We are still enormously concerned.

The first and foremost of these has to be the disposition of the case illustrations of disturbed children who have been unable to get treatment, whose plight was documented in the report of the five children's aid societies from the central Ontario region. In late October, I asked the minister to give his personal commitment to treatment for each and every one of the children whose plight had been identified. The cases were anonymous, but they were real cases; they were real children who had been denied the appropriate treatment. I asked the minister to indicate it to us as quickly as a treatment program had been found for each and every one of those children, and I still haven't had word back from the ministry as to whether that has been done. I would like some indication tonight from the ministry as to what progress has been made in meeting the treatment needs of those children whose situations were identified in the report.

Secondly, of course, we want a progress report with respect to the problems that were identified in the five society reports. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, one of the most pressing problems was simply the fact that this ministry, for reasons known only to itself, decided to close some 150 residential treatment beds in the central region at a time when it was also closing training schools. It had not put into place alternative points of treatment to meet the needs of children who were no longer being directed to training schools and, in fact, it reduced the availability of residential treatment beds in the central region so that it created a worse problem than existed before its so-called reforms were initiated.

The minister continues to express the most benign kind of optimism about the direction he is taking and about the success of his reforms, but it is an optimism that seems to be peculiar to him. It is not an optimism shared by people who are trying to provide service, whether they are in the children's aid society or in the network of children's mental health centres or in the juvenile correction system or, indeed, in any part of the social service delivery system. There is no sense of optimism. There is no sense of creative reform in this province in children's services. There is a sense of great despair. There is a sense of profound apprehension. There is a sense that this ministry is incapable of fulfilling its promises and incapable of implementing reform. The priority is not reform; the priority is cutbacks.

I use the word "cutback" in the sense that the minister is squeezing the blood out of the treatment system by holding budgets below the level of inflation. He can play nice little word games, saying a five per cent increase isn't a cutback. It is a cutback when inflation is at nine per cent; it is a cutback in the purchasing power of the social service dollar.

Why doesn't he just say that his objective is a cutback? His objective is to constrain the purchasing power of the social service delivery system, to hold it below the level of inflation and to erode its purchasing power; because that is what he is doing and that is what he has done. There is no nice way of describing it. He likes the word constraint, he likes all kinds of words. He doesn't like the word cutback, but the word is cutback.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The word I like best is the one you don't say.

Mr. McClellan: The word is cutback, and everybody who is struggling with the needs of disturbed children understands what he is doing.

I have another piece of unfinished business from the estimates. The minister has indicated he intends to redirect money out of residential treatment beds and put it into something else. We don't know what the something else is, because that has never been clearly defined. He uses the word prevention. Again it sounds nice, but we don't know what he is talking about. More to the point, we don't know where he intends to extract something in the order of a total of $5.5 million.

My notes from the estimates debate indicate that the minister intended, and he can correct me if I have misunderstood, but he had intended to take $2.2 million out of children's mental health centres and redirect the money into other parts of the service program, presumably into what he calls preventive programs.

I had asked the minister which programs and how many beds would be affected by that $2.2 million extraction. I am still waiting for that information. I suspect he doesn't know; I suspect he still doesn't know.

That is not the only redirection this minister is talking about. There is also a proposal for a $3.3 million contraction. The minister doesn't like to use the word "cutback." I guess one of the buzzwords in the ministry is "contraction." It's not a cutback, it's a contraction or a redirection, or a constraint; it's anything but a cutback. At any rate I will use the minister's cute phrase for the $3.3 million contraction for training schools in schedule one facilities.

I asked for a breakdown. I asked where that money would be coming from and which programs would be contracted. I asked particularly on schedule one programs which programs for the mentally retarded are going to be contracted under this proposal to redirect $3.3 million? I haven't had an answer on that, so I want to ask again for detailed, specific answers on which programs will be affected when he takes money from residential institutional programs and puts it into something else. I want to know where he is taking it. First of all, I want to know how many people are affected—and I want also to know who sent me this note.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Did they ask you to contract?

Mr. McClellan: You might say that. At any rate, I will accept the spirit of the note, accept its direction and move on to one other topic; but I expect the minister's staff to go through Hansard and to respond to critics' questions when they ask for specific pieces of information, particularly around issues that are so important as the question of his so-called contractions.

I won't dwell on things that were covered during the estimates. Let me just make an allusion to the latest publication of the National Council of Welfare, entitled, In the Best Interests of the Child. I hope the minister has read it; I suspect that he hasn't.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You are very suspicious, aren't you?

Mr. McClellan: Yes, I am. I am almost paranoid. I am probably paranoid, I concede it. After four years as social service critic, I am paranoid.

I don't think I have read a more succinct description of the fundamental flaw in our child-care delivery system than is contained on page 32 of the National Council of Welfare's most recent publication. Let me just read a couple of sentences:

"There is a terrible illogic in the way our society supports its children in need. If their parents are unable to work, or can only get a job that pays an inadequate wage, our income security system offers little economic security; yet if the family situation deteriorates to the point where the children must be placed in substitute care, the state must pay far more in the long run than what it would cost to ensure a sufficient income and the necessary preventative social services in the first place.

"The cost differences are startling. In 1979, an Ontario single parent mother and one child together received $4,860 from provincial social assistance. However, if that same child lived in a foster home, it cost the Toronto Children's Aid Society $6,877, $2,017 more than the family's social assistance income. If he or she lived in a group home, the cost would be on average $12,866, two and half times what they would receive on social assistance."

Where is the logic in that? Where is the sense in that? The report talks about the fact that much of the pressure for child-care services and for child welfare services comes from the basic reality of poverty, family poverty and child poverty in this province, and they suggest:

"If income programs were more effective in dealing with income problems, much of the pressure on the child welfare system would be relieved. Instead of a beleaguered system reserved largely for kids from low-income homes, children's social services could become a comprehensive first-class system of support available to all Canadian families."

I hope the minister will look at it, and I hope he will take its central thesis seriously. We talk about children's services, and most of the time what we are talking about is poverty and the effects of poverty, and we try to pretend that we are not. We try to pretend you can patch up families that are stressed and then broken by poverty through a patchwork of institutional or custodial services, and you can't.

You can only deal with poverty on the basis of justice and equity, on the basis of adequate income security programs, on the basis of governments committed to full employment programs and equal opportunity programs for the employment of disadvantaged groups. This is so far from where this government is that it is simply a Utopian vision even to talk about it.

The final matter I want to talk to remains, for me, this government's single most outstanding failure. That has to do with the provision of day-care services in this province. We know something of the need for day care from the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto Project Child Care study.

There are something in the order of 54,000 licensed day-care spaces in all of Ontario. We know from the social planning council's study that in Metropolitan Toronto alone there are 100,000 pre-school children whose parents work, whether they are single parent families or families where both parents work. The number of children who require child care and who are in unsupervised substitute child care, that is to say they are not in licensed day care but group day care or private-home day care, is 100,000 children under the age of seven. This ministry and this government cannot tell us how many pre-school children there are in the province as a whole who require some form of child care because parents are in the work place. They simply don't know, that basic research has never been done. We can try to extrapolate from the Metro Toronto figures but I won't even attempt that. I don't have the capacity to do that. The need in comparison with the number of spaces is mind boggling.

The ministry continues to pretend that somehow their day-care policies approach adequacy and have some tangential relationship with reality. At a time when 52 per cent of women with children are in the work force—this government clings to the obsolete notion that day care is a welfare service which should be provided only for disadvantaged segments of the population. That is absolute folly.

I want to make a couple of suggestions to the government, because they are, at long last, inching towards a day-care policy. We remain one of the last countries in the western industrial world to develop a rational day-care policy. Our policy is still based, as I said, on an obsolete notion that day care is some kind of welfare service which should be provided for needy and disadvantaged people and not as a service that ought to be generally available to provide for the child-care needs of children whose parents have work responsibility.

I'm never quite sure what this minister's attitude is towards day care. I listened to him very carefully at the family policy conference earlier this fall and he spoke at length about the "me" generation. I thought he seemed to be saying that women with children should stay home. I thought that message was rather diffusely coming through, in an oblique way.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I thought he would use the illustration that I thought they ought to be bare foot and in the kitchen.

Mr. McClellan: No, I don't know what the minister really thinks or feels, and I may have been inaccurate; if I have been, I would welcome having the minister put me in my place and chastise me. I thought he was saying, in a roundabout way, that the "me" generation notion somehow had an application to women who were trying to combine a career with raising children.

I just point out that if all of the women from two-income families who are currently in the labour force were to leave the labour force, the number of families in this province whose income is below the poverty line would increase by 65 per cent.

Mr. Wildman: The economy would collapse.

Mr. McClellan: The economy would be seriously disadvantaged and the number of people in poverty would increase astronomically. The reality in our society is that two-income wage earners are a necessity for many families to avoid a sub-poverty income.

The minister continues to pretend that somehow we live in a different world in which day care is not an essential social service available to all families who need it; he's dead wrong. The minister's continued refusal to enter the latter part of the 20th century and to acknowledge reality is doing damage.

Again we have learned from the social planning council's Project Child Care study of the inadequacy of a substantial proportion of unsupervised substitute child care arrangements in this province. We know there are real problems. We know that in too many private, unregulated homes substitute day care consists of child care by the television set, of unnutritional meals; of day care provided by those who have their own problems, of day care provided by those who are themselves ill; of situations where children are not receiving any kind of stimulation at all, where their developmental needs are not even being acknowledged and where children are not getting outside of the house to play.

Those are all matters of empirical observation. It doesn't serve anybody for the minister to get up again and make his rhetorical speech about freedom of choice. That is precisely what we are talking about. We are talking about the right of parents to have the choice of quality day care, either group day care or private-home day care at a price they can afford; not at $10 a day per child but on the basis of quality, affordability and universal access, and I stress the word "access."

Day care should be available as a matter of right to all who need it in this province. There should be a sufficient range of options and sufficient quantity of day care that parents have a real choice.

That doesn't exist now. For all but low-income parents the subsidy is unavailable because the subsidy is available on a welfare basis under the Canada Assistance Plan. One must meet the criteria, one must go to the welfare office and fill out the means test. The minister has got to move day care out of the welfare context and put it into an early-childhood education perspective where it will be possible to use vacant space in our schools and to develop group day care on an adequate basis so there will be enough day care in this province that every family that needs it will have a choice of quality day care, affordable and accessible.

Let me suggest once again that the minister adopt the recommendation of the Ontario Status of Women Council and establish an interministerial committee to look at the possibility of expanding day care through the use of vacant school space. While he is doing that, let me suggest that he look at a reform of the present subsidy provision. If that means Ontario taking some initiative for a change, for once in its history, so be it. Let the government give some leadership, just this once on this most important issue, and develop a way of providing subsidy that doesn't exclude all but the very poor, which will include low- and middle-income families in Ontario as well as those who are impoverished.

Let me suggest to the minister that he go back to his policy of 1974-75 and put sufficient funds into the day-care program to achieve a real expansion of day-care spaces instead of this 100, 200 or 300 spaces a year.

Finally, let me suggest that the minister look at the British experience in the use of private-home day care and move to the development of an optional registration or licensing system which would permit private-home day-care providers to become registered on the condition they meet certain laid-down standards; and that in return for registration and the meeting of standards of quality, families who use registered private-home day care become eligible for the reformed subsidization program.

The ministry doesn't have to meet all its day-care needs through an expansion of group care; that is not what I am suggesting, although we have to do an awful lot better than we are doing now. We could also use private-home day care through a system of optional voluntary registration, combined with eligibility for reformed subsidization and an encouragement to private-home day-care providers to affiliate themselves with group-home day care for support.

With those measures we could go a long way in a relatively short period of time towards meeting the objective of universally accessible, quality, affordable day care in this province. We are now far behind because of the freeze. We are now in the fourth year of the day-care freeze in this province. The longer the ministry waits, the more costly it will be to redress the damage it is doing. It is classic penny-wise and pound-foolish. The longer the ministry waits the more the costs will be—the capital costs, the costs to the subsidization program—and the more damage that is done to families whose children are at risk.

I remind the minister, finally, that the social planning council has identified the fact that as a result of inadequate day care there are "children at risk"; I'm quoting directly from the report.

The minister can refute it rhetorically and do his usual response with studied ambiguity around day care. That serves nobody, least of all the families and children who require quality day care in Ontario. It remains our most effective preventive social service. On those grounds alone it deserves priority from a ministry which has a so-called priority on reform of children's services. Further, it is the essential means of achieving a policy of equal participation by women in the work force, in the economy of this province and of this country. On that ground as well day care deserves priority from the government.

The ministry has a double rationale for top priority, yet it continues to allow day care to languish at the bottom of the heap—frozen, unacknowledged, ignored.

I'm sure this is all new to the minister. This is my 400th day care speech since I have had the misfortune to serve as social service critic. Each time I make—

Mr. Nixon: Do you remember those great Indian affairs days; those great triumphs?

Mr. McClellan: Yes. It's really been uphill since then, hasn't it?

I hope when the ministry's policy comes out it will have something new to say, other than welfarization, welfarism. It's absolutely essential that day care be taken out of the Ministry of Community and Social Services so we can escape the blight of the welfare mentality. I'm not sure anything can be done with the service to get it out of that kind of mean-spirited, stigmatization and ghettoization that seems to be associated with selective welfare services, except to take it out and perhaps put it in the Ministry of Education, protecting the standards of quality with the same kind of tough legislation.

If the minister can't do any better than the kind of welfare-ghetto service he seemingly intends to perpetuate in perpetuity—

Mr. Nixon: Perpetuate in perpetuity?

Mr. McClellan: Right.

Mr. Warner: That's for a long time.

Mr. McClellan: It should be taken away from the ministry.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this concurrence debate, largely because of and in reaction to the statement made—

Mr. Kerrio: You missed the estimates.

Mr. Wildman: No, I did not miss the estimates. Since there is a situation much like I'm going to discuss in Niagara I'm surprised the member is not taking part in the debate.

I am rising to take part in this debate as a reaction to and because of the statement the minister made in the House today in my absence.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I didn't just make it because you were absent. I thought you were absent because I was going to make it.

Mr. Wildman: Before getting to that, I would like to mention a couple of other things that have come to my attention, one of which I raised during my discussion of the estimates, and the other which has just come to my attention. I hope the minister will respond.

The first is the one I raised during the discussion in the estimates, and that was the health and residential care unit, the funding for the continuation, rehabilitation and eventual replacement of that unit on a shared-cost basis with the Ministry of Health.

When I raised it during the debate on the estimates, I was under the impression—perhaps incorrectly—that the minister's staff, from the deputy minister on down, didn't know about it; at least if they did, they hadn't done much thinking about it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: This is where?

Mr. Wildman: Hornepayne.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We're aware of it.

Mr. Wildman: At any rate, they didn't seem to be aware that the Minister of Health has said—and I have to take what he said at face value; I don't think he was obfuscating—that he is interested in providing the funds; that he has accepted the recommendations of the Algoma District Health Council that the unit and the project be made a permanent project; that the prefab building should be rehabilitated or replaced; and that it should be redesigned to serve its function better.

I raise it again to find out what, if anything, has happened with the interministerial discussions on that proposal. I know this ministry has a freeze on capital expenditures, so maybe it's very convenient for the Minister of Health to say he's in favour of it and just waiting for the Minister of Community and Social Services to give his commitment.

I'd like to know what has happened in those discussions because this particular type of unit really could serve as a model for small, isolated communities in northern Ontario and provide a flexible type of service to the disabled and the elderly without their having to travel hundreds of miles to some sort of institutional care in a larger centre. We must get it going on a permanent basis in Hornepayne and then look to expanding it to other areas.

The other matter I wanted to raise has just come to my attention as the result of a letter I received; that is the need for the provision of a development assessment team for the mentally retarded for the Algoma district.

I understand that the Rockhaven School at Serpent River did obtain, through the ministry's offices, the services of a developmental assessment team from Gravenhurst last year. That isn't going on this year and they cannot use the services that might be available in Sault Ste. Marie because they're overworked already. They're too busy in the Sault.

It seems to me that it's very difficult for us to give any kind of meaningful service in terms of designing programs to stimulate and help develop the mentally retarded, if we can't first get them properly assessed and have assessments done on an ongoing basis. I realize, as I said earlier, there is a freeze on capital expenditures in the ministry, but this would hardly be a capital expense. I hope the minister will look very carefully at providing this kind of needed service in order to have a meaningful program for the mentally retarded in the Algoma district.

As I said, the main purpose of my participation in the debate is to comment on and to ask for some further clarification of the minister's statement made in the House today with regard to the very serious situation we have in children's services in the Algoma district with the children's aid society strike which has gone on for five months. I intend to remain restrained and try to deal with this on a very serious and reasonable level; however, I must say something in reaction to a comment I read in Instant Hansard made by the minister in response to a question from my leader about his statement. He said: "The member is suggesting I inject myself into the middle of that dispute and come down squarely on the side of one party or the other. I am not going to do that."

Let me say, in all sincerity, that right from the beginning the minister has been injected into this dispute. He has been involved in it right from the day the members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, local 1880, walked out. For that matter he was involved directly prior to that, during the period of negotiations prior to the breakdown and the calling of the strike.

Let's just review for a moment how the minister and his ministry is directly involved in this dispute. To give you an example of a direct involvement—without question involvement of the type the minister was referring to today in his statement as if it were the first time—is the case where one weekend somebody from the regional office in Sudbury—I believe it was Val Gibbons—was in the Sault on call on an emergency basis for the children's aid society in Sault Ste. Marie. In other words, she provided a service very similar to the service the minister is now proposing members of his staff will provide during the Christmas season.

This is a case where the ministry staff is carrying out functions which would normally be carried out by the members of local 1880 who are on a legal strike—I remind the minister, a legal strike—and they have been without a contract for many, many months.

I also want to remind the House that this is a situation which involves not just salaries or wages. It involves a very serious concern about work load, caseload, and how social workers who are overburdened and overworked can provide a decent level of care—not just what is needed by children at risk, but the level of care they are required to provide by law.

The minister has made a great deal of the fact that since this strike began it is his responsibility, according to the law, to provide emergency service and to ensure that children at risk are provided with service. I don't debate that. It is the minister's responsibility, according to the law, to provide for that. But right from the beginning I have said that the most responsible way for the minister to carry out his obligation would be to provide the kind of funding required to bring about a settlement, so that the social workers who are responsible for doing the job and who wish to do the job could be back on the job providing the services they want to provide for the kids in our area.

It doesn't make sense to have social workers bored to death with nothing to do when there are kids who could use their help or to have a social worker coming into my constituency office on a volunteer basis to answer the phone because she doesn't have anything else to do—at a time when the agency says that it cannot be sure it is providing adequate care.

The minister now admits, and has admitted, that he can't be sure that they can provide adequate care either.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I cannot give an absolute assurance even if all the staff were working.

Mr. Wildman: All right, I'm not talking about the ideal. Perhaps it is debatable whether the minister knows whether they are providing care. I would think that prior to making the kind of decision he announced today he would have decided that in his opinion they could not provide that care.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Read the statement, that's what I said. Some workers were leaving for Christmas and they needed help.

Mr. Wildman: Exactly, so why is the minister debating it now?

To return to my point about the minister being involved right from the beginning: prior to this strike, of course, the minister was directly involved, as he is in every negotiation between an organized bargaining unit working for the children's aid society and the society by the fact that he or his ministry provide 80 per cent of the funding. I believe that 31 out of the 50 children's aid societies in this province have indicated to the minister that they do not have adequate funding to meet their obligations under the new Child Welfare Act. This is not an isolated situation. It is one where we have had a long strike, but in terms of the minister's involvement in regard to adequate funding, or inadequate funding, this year is not unusual.

The minister had been directly involved in terms of funding. Once the strike started, he was directly involved in that he had members of his staff, his ministry, going to the children's aid society operation in Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma to monitor the situation and to observe whether or not they were providing adequate care. When they determined they did not believe they were providing adequate care, the minister asked the children's aid society board to bring in outside workers. To me, that is a direct involvement.

When the agency had some difficulty in obtaining the required number of outside workers, this ministry actively recruited outside workers. I know the minister doesn't like to say "recruited." He doesn't like to use that word. What they did was they looked for names of people who might be qualified and willing to go to the Sault and they turned over those names to the board and to the administration of the board and said: "These are people who might be interested in going. You can get in touch with them."

Mr. McClellan: They trained them in the ministry's office.

Mr. Wildman: Yes. When they couldn't get enough trained people, I believe this ministry brought four people in the Toronto area into the Toronto office to train them and talk about the Child Welfare Act, their obligations under the act, what was going on in the Sault and so on. Maybe it wasn't ministry staff who were directly training them, they just used ministry offices. It might have been people from the Sault who came down to train them.

Mr. McClellan: John Adams was training them.

Mr. Wildman: If that isn't direct involvement, what is? Ministry staff has been actively involved in this strike from the beginning. The minister has been actively involved in requesting the agency to bring in outside workers and in providing, on at least one occasion, a member of his staff.

I remind you, Mr. Speaker, I do not debate the minister's obligation under the act. His obligation would be best fulfilled if he were to provide the funds necessary to bring this unfortunate dispute to an end immediately.

Before the House votes on concurrence, I would like the minister to answer a number of questions. How much has the ministry spent so far in monitoring the situation in Sault Ste. Marie, in terms of staff time and travel? How much has the ministry spent in terms of trying to find people who might go to the Sault for the agency? How much has the ministry spent in terms of training people to go to the Sault? I am talking about staff time, travel expenses, accommodation expenses and so on, for ministry staff involved in this process.

I would also like to know how much the minister estimates this so-called new approach announced today over the Christmas season is going to cost. How much have the taxpayers paid to try and keep the minister on top and involved in this dispute? How much have we paid the minister to become involved and remain involved in this dispute directly, in the ways I mentioned?

I also want to know, if he can give me that figure or figures, how that compares with the $20,000 back in June that would have settled this dispute. If it is $20,000 or more, which I suspect it is, how does he justify spending that kind of money to monitor a strike rather than to bring it to an end?

I would also like to ask the minister where these people, these outside workers who are now working in the Sault and Algoma for the agency, are coming from?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Do you mean the present ones?

Mr. Wildman: Yes. Are they coming from other agencies? If they are coming from other agencies, what assurance does this ministry have that those other agencies are adequately staffed when these people are in Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma?

I think it is very unfortunate that the minister has decided to take the approach he has taken over the last five months in this dispute. Anyone who understands the labour movement, the collective bargaining process, realizes that the use of outside workers to do the work of people who are legally on strike does not usually bring an end to a dispute or shorten it. In fact, what it usually does is prolong the dispute. It makes it less necessary for the employer to settle, which is why the employer uses those outside employees. It also produces a kind of bitterness and frustration on behalf of the striking employees that makes it very difficult for amicable relations to result from the bargaining process.

In this dispute in Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma, we haven't just had a situation where organized employees have been out. We have had a situation where two of the management staff have quit in frustration since this strike started. One of those two is a very well respected member of the profession in this province who had some real responsibility in the drafting of the new Child Welfare Act and who is very well respected by the employees of the bargaining unit and is respected across the province, in North America and even in Europe. He quit because he said he was afraid he might be brought to court because he wasn't providing or able to provide the services he was required to provide under the act.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Who was that? That wasn't the deputy director, was it? If so it is my understanding there were other reasons.

Mr. Wildman: Ross Dawson made that statement to the press.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have reason to think there were other reasons.

Mr. Wildman: I know of other reasons in which he was involved, but that was the statement he made to the press. Perhaps he had other reasons. I think he probably did. One of the reasons he mentioned was he was afraid that at some time he might be brought to court because he hadn't been able to meet some obligation he was supposed to under the act.

I know, Mr. Speaker, you would like me to bring this to an end, but I would like to have this strike brought to an end. It has gone on for five months.

Mr. Ashe: Throw your salary into the pot.

Mr. Wildman: I suppose other members of the House who aren't directly involved can treat this with frivolity and don't realize the seriousness of the situation. I think the minister does and that is why he has become involved. I just wish his involvement had been of a more positive nature, rather than the kind of involvement which can only produce a situation which, in my view, will prolong the strike.

I urge the minister to change his approach, to use the money that has been spent on monitoring this situation and in helping to bring in outside people to do the job of the striking employees, to resolve the dispute and get the social workers who can help the foster parents who haven't seen counsellors for months, who can help the children who are at risk, who can get the assistance going the children's aid society is supposed to provide for Sault Ste. Marie and our area, back on the job in doing what they want to do, what the minister, the agency, and the whole community wants them to do. Let's get the strike over with.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, as usual, in dealing with any matters relating to my ministry, with the breadth of the scope of the ministry one can find any number of things to talk about at great length. Many of the items raised in the discussions tonight are matters touched upon during the estimates debates. There are some, though, that have arisen for the first time.

I say to the member for Bellwoods I don't know whether he heard my comment at the time he was quoting from the note I had jocularly sent to him when one of my colleagues was introduced as the Minister of Community and Social Services; I sent a note saying, "I concur." However, he spoke of the punishment I ought to receive in my ministry. I can say for the last three years I have been subjected to the punishment of having him as the critic and I can't think of anyone who could possibly have done a more effective job of being punishing in his punitive approach—there, Bob, I am doing almost as well as he did—his role as critic.

Perhaps I could respond initially to the last matter raised, since it is particularly timely and one which is foremost in the minds of those of us who have some involvement and sense of knowledge with what has transpired and is continuing to transpire in Algoma.

As I said in the House this afternoon, I regret very much the dispute in Algoma has not been resolved. The honourable member, himself, would concur it has been because of great effort primarily on the part of the Ministry of Labour that negotiations have been on again and off again and efforts have been made to conciliate in that situation.

It is a more complex situation than is portrayed by the honourable member. It may be that if I were to inject myself into the situation with a bagful of money and say, "Here, please resolve the matter with this money," it might be resolved. I would point out to him that he will discover in the very near future—it is my understanding there are some statements that will be made in the next few days, not by me, but by the parties concerned—that as of last week the circumstances changed again rather substantially in terms of what was being requested within the negotiations. A very disturbing event at this late stage in a prolonged strike. That raises some question as to what the issues really are.

I don't wish to speculate in public. That is not my business. I can be concerned about it privately and express some concern publicly, but I really don't think I should delve into specific speculation as to what other agendas may exist in this particular strike. But in understanding the role I have, I urge the honourable member to recall a few things. We are not dealing here with an industrial dispute; we are not dealing with the manufacture of automobiles.

We are dealing with the safety and the welfare of children. It is precisely because of the legislation under which I and my ministry have a mandate with respect to child welfare in this province, that I have placed upon me the obligation to take steps to ensure, whether or not there are labour disputes in Ontario, that children are not unnecessarily at risk. It is precisely in the discharge of that responsibility that I have attempted to play the role I have in relationship to this strike.

I think that the allegations of strike-breaking which have arisen from time to time and did again in the House this afternoon, lose sight of the fact that we are not talking about an industrial strike in this situation. As long as the parties are unable to resolve their differences, I and my ministry have a special responsibility—one that the members of this Legislature have given to me on behalf of the people of this province—to ensure that those children are not at risk. I'm discharging that to the best of my ability at this point.

The honourable member suggests that the way I ought to do that is to inject myself into the negotiations by saying, "Here's the money, resolve the strike." If you look at history, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure the member for Algoma has, if you look at what has happened in terms of the funding of that society over the last few years, I do not believe that the critical issue in this particular case is what the specific dollar figure of that society's budget is.

I do not believe that and yet that is the issue that is being prolonged and where the parties even very recently, as recently as last week, have appeared to change their positions. As I say, that is a disturbing fact. I suspect there are other agendas.

I would be delighted to discuss or answer the honourable member's questions if I could. He asked how much we have spent, for example, on monitoring the levels of service in Sault Ste. Marie. I don't know that. I can't tell him. I could try to find out.

I can tell him this: the monitoring that has taken place has been done by staff who are full-time employees of my ministry for that purpose, so there are no additional salaries involved in that, to the best of my knowledge. These people, generally speaking, are management people who I don't believe are paid overtime. They are on a salary basis. There has been no additional money in terms of salary time for the monitoring function that has gone on.

How much has been spent on recruiting? Again, I don't think there has been any significant amount of money spent in providing the society with names of persons—whom we have heard of, or know, or whom other employees of the ministry may know—whom they might call upon to hire to assist in maintaining a minimum level of service. We haven't been advertising in newspapers or anything of that nature where there was any specific expenditure.

How much time is spent on travelling? I'm not sure what the honourable member means by that. The ministry staff who work in Sault Ste. Marie do from time to time travel to Toronto or Sudbury or various other locations in any event.

Mr. Wildman: The minister had some people from Toronto go up there.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The member means our ministry staff? As far as I'm aware there have been, perhaps, a couple of times that I know of where two or three of my ministry staff have been up there. More often, there have been staff from Sault Ste. Marie down in Toronto to discuss this, among other things. It has never been specifically and only for that.

I don't think any significant additional amount of money has been spent for travel—there may have been one or two trips where somebody specifically went up to a meeting. For example, I recall one occasion when my associate deputy minister and the executive director of the children's services division—I believe those were the two persons involved—flew up to meet with the board of the children's aid society. That would be one specific incident where money was expended on travel; there may have been other occasions, but it has not been a major expense.

How much money has been spent on keeping me involved? I'm not even sure what the honourable member meant by that.

Mr. Wildman: All the involvements I listed.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The member means the five questions he's raised? I'm sure I don't fully understand the question.

I haven't been paid any overtime for what I have been doing. It's part of my regular job. I must say I fail to understand—maybe I should just come to the conclusion that it really hasn't cost the honourable member anything for the service he's received from me other than my regular salary.

Mr. Breaugh: That's what you call equal pay for work of equal value.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It's charity.

The next question the member raised is where are the people coming from? If the member is referring to the people to whom I was referring in the statement today—

Mr. Wildman: The people who are there now.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Those five people I referred to today are employees of my ministry. I can't tell the member specifically where they come from. I don't even know all the names. As I recall, two or three of the five are from ministry offices in northern Ontario and the others are from southern Ontario. They are people who have had fairly extensive experience in child welfare. Two of them—and I stand to be corrected on this if I am wrong—have at one time or another been local directors of children's aid societies.

The reason for their being there, as I explained, is to ensure that through the Christmas period, starting today and probably getting a little worse next week with contract employees leaving to be with their families over Christmas, the society would have additional support to provide only the minimum level of service to ensure children are not unnecessarily at risk.

Mr. Wildman: Where are the contract employees from?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I couldn't tell the member. They are from all over the province.

Mr. Wildman: Are they from other agencies?

Hon. Mr. Norton: There may be one or two who are management people. I recall hearing of one management-level person in an agency in northern Ontario who had offered to assist. I don't know of any others who are currently employees of children's aid societies. Most of them have had some child welfare experience, but would be retired or have moved on to other things. I think it is safe to say that is generally not the case. There may be one or two from other societies.

I would urge the member to keep in perspective the role I have played, rather than suggesting I have injected myself into the strike. I have come down firmly on the side of the welfare of the children. I will continue to do everything I can to ensure, not that the optimum levels of service are provided in Sault Ste. Marie—goodness only knows they have not had service there at the usual levels for going on six months now—but that the children are not unnecessarily at risk.

With respect to the member's comment about the residential-care unit in Hornepayne, we have reviewed the position with the Ministry of Health on the basis of the member's interpretation of the minister's letter. I think the ministries are substantially in agreement on that. I understood the member in his earlier remarks during the estimates debate was suggesting the Ministry of Health had committed itself to a replacement unit.

Mr. Wildman: The Minister of Health said he had accepted the recommendations of the Algoma District Health Council. One of them was a replacement of the unit.

Hon. Mr. Norton: My understanding is that we are essentially in agreement that at some point replacement will be necessary for the present facility. That may be an area of misunderstanding. Given current capital restraints, we feel the present facility can be modified so as to be serviceable for some time before replacement will be necessary. I stand to be corrected if the member is not talking about a new one. I understood that he was and my response was based on that understanding.

I was not aware that there was any request before us for a developmental assessment team for the mentally retarded in Algoma district. I would suggest that if there is such a request forthcoming the appropriate way to proceed would be through the district working group as a proposal.

Mr. Wildman: It has already gone through.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Has it already gone through them? Personally I was not aware of it. It might have been received as a request by the ministry. I can follow up on that and see.

Perhaps I could revert to the remarks of the member for Sarnia (Mr. Blundy) at this point. Once again I agree that the level of income maintenance payments is not optimum—perhaps that's a way that one can express it. I realize that people who are in receipt of family benefits, who are solely dependent on them, do have a difficult time in terms of making ends meet. But I do think, in talking about the increases that have taken place this year, one has to look at total income.

If the members look at the increase that was available through my ministry and the increase that was available through family allowances, the increase this year was approximately 12 per cent. That was 12 per cent—I'm sure the member will say—on a base that was too small. Nevertheless, the member said they have fallen behind.

I don't know what the complete figures are for year over year inflation. I suspect that 12 per cent could substantially meet those inflationary increases. If one looks at the total income of family-benefit recipients, those persons with children who are in receipt of family allowances, 12 per cent is a more realistic increase for this year than six per cent if one looks at them as separate entities.

On the question of the difficulties that some landlords have or claim to have in collecting rent from persons on income-maintenance programs, I think it's important we remember that the income these people are receiving ought to be treated as that—as their income. We ought not to be viewed by landlords in this province as either rent collectors or as big brother watching over the shoulder of everyone who is in receipt of income-maintenance assistance.

I know the request comes frequently and fairly often from people saying, "Someone who is in receipt of benefits from your ministry failed to pay their rent to me. I think you ought to pay it directly." My response generally and consistently is no.

Who is Bill?

Mr. Cunningham: Bill Davis. The boss.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I see. I shouldn't have asked who Bill is. That's like asking, "Who is Joe?"

I'm assuming that when these honourable members raised these serious issues they anticipated a serious response. That's what I am proceeding to do.

I don't think it is appropriate for my ministry. In some instances where there seem to be some ongoing difficulties in budget management, sometimes a person in the community for a period of time is made a trustee to assist the recipients in the management of their budgets, to ensure that they are able to meet those kinds of expenses. That is a possibility where there is a chronic situation. Generally speaking we're not rent collectors. Landlords have to take risks wherever their tenants come from. Sometimes it's a risk I would say they have to calculate.

The member mentioned general welfare assistance budgets being overspent. It's very difficult to project what the trends are going to be in any given fiscal year. In fact, some GWA budgets in municipalities are declining. There is no province-wide uniform pattern. But I can assure the members we will meet our commitments under that act.

I know it may be a little more difficult for some municipalities in terms of their share, but it being an open-ended program, we will meet whatever our share is of whatever they have to spend. They may have to recoup some of that in their own budget next year.

The members raised a number of other items. Maybe I can touch very briefly on a few of them.

Again, children's services budgets: The member focused particularly upon the closing of training schools and the impact that has had. I have tried to emphasize, time and time again, that we have not really closed occupied beds in training schools. We have closed empty beds.

The population in the training schools has not dramatically declined since we began closing training schools. We had far more beds in the training schools than were occupied. That continues to be the case. We still have an excess of beds. We could probably close the equivalent of another training school or two without having to return to the community any child who is not ready. Because people have heard that we're closing training schools and because there's been a difference in the pattern that has developed recently in the courts in terms of the numbers who are sent to training schools, especially since the changes in the act back in the early part of this decade—

Mr. McClellan: What changes were they?

Hon. Mr. Norton: In the early part of this decade, with the deletion of section 9 from the Training Schools Act.

Mr. McClellan: You mean section 8. That was only two years ago.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Section 8, right. Sorry. There is some impact from that but I don't think it's as serious an impact as is generally perceived.

Basically, what happens to the children who are truant, for example, is they are not necessarily any longer sent to training school. Children whose parents find them difficult to manage are not sent to training school any more. Not every ill-behaved child is a former ward of the training school. That seems to be a misconception. People have focused upon that. I don't believe that is what is happening.

We talked about children's services budgets this year until I was blue in the face. The member for Bellwoods raised another concern tonight after we took a full day in estimates.

Mr. McClellan: I still didn't get an answer. I am just asking the question again.

Hon. Mr. Norton: With respect to the specific concerns, I must say I apologize for those two things which the member raised where he said he had not yet had a specific response. I did undertake that he would get one. He will get one. I did not realize he had not yet received one. I apologize for that.

Perhaps I can move on to the member for Bellwoods and just touch on a couple of things.

Mr. Nixon: You're just skimming over the surface. You're going much too fast.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Does the member want me to slow down a little? I will, if the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk would rather get more of the meat.

One of the most interesting things, one of the most debatable things that the member for Bellwoods raised, is he talks about this ministry's bad record in day care.

There is greater demand than supply. There is no question about that.

Mr. McClellan: The minister used to dispute that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I've never disputed that. What I do dispute though, and I will dispute it again, is the results of some of the studies that he quotes and which have surfaced from time to time. They are questionable. They're based on certain assumptions with which I don't agree. For example, it seems that many of those are based upon—and I don't mean to be provocative—the assumption the parents are inherently incompetent to make decisions with respect to the care of their own children by making private arrangements and so on. There is a perception on the part of some of the people in the child-care sector in this province that every care situation a child is in ought to be licensed and supervised.

I don't necessarily agree with that. I would be willing to agree there are children who are in situations which ought to be licensed and supervised, but I think some people would carry that to the extreme and would end up licensing and supervising the parents' supervision in their homes. One can carry that to an extreme. When the member starts quoting figures in the hundreds of thousands in terms of the need for day care in Ontario that is when I have to say, "Whoa, you're getting carried away with your figures." I don't believe that degree of demand exists. There are still parents in the province who would choose, as a matter of their own values and their own wishes, to provide care in their own home for their children.

Mr. McClellan: Of course. Nobody is disputing that. You raise straw men and then you knock them down.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The member is the one who raised the figure of 100,000 in need in Metropolitan Toronto. I question that. I'm not saying it's absolutely wrong, but I question it. I don't think it can be substantiated.

Mr. McClellan: That is the number of children who have substitute child care.

Hon. Mr. Norton: All right. I think many of the parents of those children are quite competent to make substitute child care arrangements if that is their decision. I don't happen to believe that every parent who places a child in substitute care, in some cases with relatives or friends or a trusted neighbour, needs a social worker to tell her where her child ought to be placed.

Mr. McClellan: Nobody is suggesting that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: When you start talking about those children who are in substitute care and the need for supervision and the need for licensing, then you are treading very close to that direction.

Mr. McClellan: I am talking about an adequate range of choices. Don't distort what I'm saying.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Most of those people have a better opportunity for choice in Ontario than they have anywhere else in Canada. We are continuing to increase the number of supervised and subsidized day-care spaces in Ontario at a time when there is a general decline in the country. This year, for example, we will have increased them by 730, approximately, at a time when, according to Statistics Canada, there has been a decline of 1,500 or more across the country. We are doing a much better job, I suggest, than is generally being done in Canada.

That doesn't mean that we can't do better and that we won't try to do better, but let's just keep things in perspective. I realize that when the member criticizes us he realizes he is criticizing the best government in the best province in this country. That's why he has to sound so harsh. I realize it doesn't really come from the heart.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, it does. That's where you're wrong.

Mr. Breagh: Somewhere in the vicinity.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The spleen, I think. Is that near the heart?

There are other concurrences to be dealt with tonight, but may I just conclude with what the honourable members opposite will consider to be provocative? It is in response to the member for Bellwoods who said that Ontario hasn't taken any initiative. May I just say this? The government of Ontario has taken many initiatives in the area of social services in this province. It has set precedents that are envied by other jurisdictions in Canada, in North America and around the world.

All the member has to do is look at those areas where we have taken initiatives that were not subsidized by the federal government. We have more 100 per cent provincially-funded programs than probably any other government in Canada—and he can't deny that—and that's because we have taken initiatives even if we didn't have federal cost sharing. We have been very progressive in doing that.

Mr. McClellan: You are so smug and complacent you don't even know what is going on in other parts of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Talking about not knowing what is going on—

Mr. McClellan: Don't read anything the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) gives you.

Hon. Mr. Norton: He's just telling me to shut up, the same as you are.

May I just conclude by saying this to the member for Bellwoods? He says I don't know what is going on elsewhere and he starts talking about day care in Britain. I happen to have seen some examples of that. I happen to have been there in January of this year.

Mr. McClellan: Wasting the taxpayers' money.

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, I don't think so. I don't think it was a waste of money at all. If the honourable member were to look at the programs being provided in many parts of Britain he would condemn them immediately because of what he would regard as a substandard level of care, low standards and a lack of professional qualifications. Some of these things may not be a bad idea, but I can see him jumping straight up and down in this Legislature and damning them from here to Bellwoods if he really saw them. He should make sure he knows what he is talking about before he starts suggesting what great things are happening in Britain or in Sweden. I know some of the things that are going on there and I have visited them recently.

Resolution concurred in.

MINISTRY OF CULTURE AND RECREATION

Mr. O'Neil: I will try to be as brief as I possibly can. There is one matter I wish to speak on upon reflection since the estimates were debated and that is there appears to be a particular component of cultural life seeking the ministry's direction. That is our museum system. It is not apparent to me that the ministry has made known its policy towards the two distinct aspects of our museum on one hand and, on the other, the smaller museums.

I question the guidelines under which our smaller museums operate, the responsibility of the ROM and, above all, the role of the ROM as it relates to its interactions with all other museums in Ontario.

When one compares the total budget of hundreds of smaller museums, at $1,731,800, with that of the ROM, at $9 million, the question arises as to the accountability and responsibility of these two components of our museum sector. When he considers that after the $9 million ROM budget the next largest grant to a museum is $77,000, one realizes how diverse these two components of the museum sector are.

I must express a grave concern towards the operation of the ROM. It is run at arm's length from the government through an appointed board and therefore may not be subject to the close scrutiny that other government bodies are. Although its financial statements are examined by the provincial auditor, are we assured of the accountability for the operations of the ROM? Who guarantees the ROM is responsibly carrying out its mandate in the best interest of the Ontario public?

The ROM has been functioning since its 1968 split with the University of Toronto under an act which reads somewhat like a university act. In view of the 10-year transition period, isn't it time a group representing the ministry, the museum and the public sat down and shaped the act to better reflect the place of this great institution for the future?

In reading the ROM's annual report I am unable to discern much information about what goals are being addressed, how funds are used on those projects and the measure of evaluating management successes. I am sure these meet cursory legal requirements but I suggest better financial data is in order.

Throughout the public accounts committee hearings and in various press accounts we have seen discrepancies and glaring internal problems at the ROM. I would like strong measures undertaken which will look at the practices of this institution internally, its management, its communications problems, the stresses of change, its seeming inability to consider the public as evidenced by its internal decision to close, the problems of morale, staff needs, expertise to handle $9 million in public funds, the questions of pure research and what directions the institute should be taking to better serve the people of Ontario.

The inward approach, unfortunately termed the professional outlook of the ROM, has meant that instead of analysing what the ROM can do for the public, it undertook the renovation scheme that was the easiest or most economical for ROM staff. This suggests to me the professionals either don't care or are really unaware of what the museum's role is within the province.

These questions have surfaced because we now face the closing of these institutions at the expense of the public. It appears no alternatives are being considered to allow the public to have access to the treasures of the ROM during this renovation period.

Maybe I should correct that a bit. In question period this afternoon I did ask the minister about sending some of these displays out. He mentioned the travelling van and a few other smaller displays. We have his commitment that he and his ministry staff will be in touch with the ROM to see if a lot more displays can be shipped out across the province. Once it is closed, not only the general public but a lot of the children who were used to going there to look at these displays will have lost that unless we do put the displays out to the province. I am also hoping the minister will consider giving Wintario funds to some of these groups that may apply for it.

I wonder if we know enough about the ROM's plans to let it go ahead in this fashion. After all, is this closing being responsible to the public it serves?

I hope the minister will take some of these comments under consideration, especially the internal problems I feel he and his ministry have with the ROM. I think there has to be some really new thinking to come up with some of the solutions.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very, very brief indeed, because I know that the members opposite and on this side wish to move on with other concurrences.

In response to some of the difficulties and the problems that exist internally at ROM, I can only say that our ministry is certainly aware of some of the difficulties, some of the tensions, and I would like to emphasize some of the healthy tensions that exist at the ROM.

I think we all have to recognize that the Royal Ontario Museum is indeed a unique organization, a very unique operation. It is really impossible to take a blueprint from any other operation in the world and simply apply it to ROM because ROM is unique; there is nothing like it in the entire world.

We are aware of some of these tensions that exist there. We are working away at them along with the board of directors of ROM, with the management there, with the director and with the professional staff. I really feel that if all of us on both sides of the House continue to work constructively along with the board at ROM it will continue to be a world-class museum—and in fact will be an even better and a greater museum once they have concluded their substantial renovation and expansion program.

I also think we should keep in mind there are many advantages to be gained in having the ROM at an arm's-length relationship to government. It protects it from undue politicization. I think we should always be aware of the fact that the men and women who serve on the ROM board of directors are outstanding citizens. They have a great deal to offer as volunteers and are making a substantial contribution to that great museum.

In closing I do want to be very, very brief, although I could speak at great length here on this, to say I think that the record of ROM—what it is, what it has done, what it will be—speaks far more eloquently than my going on here for many, many more minutes or hours to pay tribute to the people who are volunteering their time, effort and talent in directing that museum.

Certainly as far as the smaller museums are concerned in Ontario, it is true that ROM stands out. But the ROM is a world museum. We have some 400 museums in Ontario now and we do have a policy for them. The growth has been phenomenal and we have supported that growth. I would think that if members were to go to any small community across the province they would find the people there very, very proud of their museum, even though it does not have a budget of $9 million a year.

I would go out and ask the people in the smaller communities across the province whether they have a worthwhile local museum and it will be found universally the answer is yes, and proudly so.

So, Mr. Speaker, the record speaks for itself. With that very, very brief response and I know that the comments are worthy of far greater response than this, but in the interests of time I wish to terminate my comments at this point.

Resolution concurred in.

MINISTRY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Nixon: I just have one matter I want to deal with, Mr. Speaker, which I felt was not fully explored in the estimates.

Almost exactly two weeks from today, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) will be announcing to the night editor of the Globe and Mail those to whom he is giving the designation Queen's Counsel, those learned in the law. I want to express again my deep concern that since this matter does not involve the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea)—and I believe it should involve him since there is some misleading advertising associated with this—that the Attorney General, who has really the full responsibility for this, should before he continues his present procedures give it some further consideration.

As the minister knows, I am somewhat interested in some aspects pertaining to the legal profession. The designation "learned in the law" is one that has interested me particularly, since so many of my capable friends have received this designation.

In the United Kingdom, as the minister knows, it is not distributed with quite the generosity and, let's say, indiscrimination as it is in other jurisdictions. It is interesting to note, without spending a lot of time on the elaborate research I have undertaken, that in 1978 in the United Kingdom 30 QCs were awarded; in 1977, 40; in 1976, 32; and in 1975, 34. Without going back too far, I simply want to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that in this year, 1979, the Attorney General, in his generosity, was moved to recommend 133 appointments.

Really, the thing that concerns me is that the value of the award is becoming significantly diluted in this regard. I want to quote just a comment from Mr. Justice Sydney Robins, written in 1974, when he had a slightly different series of responsibilities. I quote him:

"No recognized or discernible criteria by which it is granted is significantly understood. This imprecision has led to a widespread belief that the award is a meaningless one, since it is not learning in law that is being assessed, but rather party allegiance or public service. QCs are frequently given to people no longer practising law, who are solicitors and never appear in court, or who are both barristers and solicitors and sometimes appear in court.

"It has been pointed out by Stephen Borins, now a county court judge, in 1969, that even the name 'New Year's honours list of the Attorney General' suggests that the award is being used as something other than an indication of the eminence of a courtroom lawyer."

We know in this jurisdiction that the Attorney General very wisely wants to have a request in writing. A couple of times he has awarded a QC and it has not been accepted. I think the last time this happened was when the Honourable Donald Macdonald, a very well-known lawyer in town and we read about him frequently, turned down a federal QC. There seemed to be some indication in his mind that the designation would only lead to confusion in the minds of his clients as to his qualifications. No one in this House would ever question his eminence and ability, but he felt that he was not interested in accepting that award. I suppose he would agree with the description I referred to by another now eminent jurist that it is meaningless.

I believe the Attorney General asks for and requires 12 years' experience without disbarment in order that the award continue, and he does look for community service. We, as politicians, are very sensitive about that. We admire people who serve the community, but in all respects it has nothing whatsoever to do with being learned in the law.

It would be nice perhaps if this were a cross to be hung around the neck of the recipients; in other words, an award for involvement. Perhaps Her Honour could do this personally. Since there are many people in the province who feel that QC behind the name of the lawyer concerned is a designation of special prowess or ability or outstanding academic achievement or even special achievements in the court, I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that in that degree it does represent what I consider to be quite a serious misrepresentation.

I was pleased to know that the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada expressed their own concern about this, particularly when they looked at the numbers of QCs awarded as compared to those called to the bar who are eligible for designation as QCs. About 46 per cent of eligible lawyers in 1975 did have QC appended to their name.

Just in passing, I've always been very impressed that the lawyers insist that the QC designation follow them whenever their name is put down and even when it is spoken orally. It seems to be a part of the name. In the case of my former colleague and good friend, Vernon Singer, for many years I thought his surname was QC. There was a certain degree of confusion in this connection.

For 1975, the last year for which figures are available, 46 per cent of the eligible lawyers were QCs. I'm not prepared to say that only 46 per cent of the eligible lawyers were Conservative. I feel that probably not all the Conservative lawyers have written the right letters or perhaps asked me, as the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, to add my recommendation to the voluminous recommendations they arrange to be sent to the Attorney General.

I have tried very diligently to get the figures for more recent years. While it is possible by looking at newspaper notices to find out how many QCs have been awarded, it is not possible to compare those numbers with the actual numbers of practising lawyers who have the appropriate requirement of 12 years' experience. In 1979, 133 were appointed; in 1978, 119; in 1977, only 99—was that the year the present Attorney General assumed office perhaps?—in 1976, 122; and in 1975, 105. Try as I might, I've not been able to get the statistics that would allow me or someone else to calculate the percentage of eligible lawyers who hold QC status.

We've asked the law society and others, but in every place we have attempted to find out we have been told this information may be released only under the authority of the Attorney General. For some reason, he doesn't seem to be proud of it. Although I have put on the Order Paper a question which may or may not be answered by the time we prorogue, I am looking forward to getting that information.

One of the former residents of my constituency, a man in whom we have great pride, former Chief Justice of the Ontario High Court, J. C. McRuer, is reported to have called the QC something of a fraud on the public. The only fraud, I say again, is that I suppose it has become too common. Those lawyers who continually make use of the QC obviously think it is either a procedure whereby they can attract additional clients, which is obviously something that most of them would want to do, or it is an honour they simply want to be sure that their colleagues, particularly, are aware of. Knowing this, the benchers of the law society dealt with the following resolution, passed in 1975: "That the law society recommend to the governments of Canada and Ontario that the title Queen's Counsel be abolished; and that if this be done, the law society amend its rules of conduct to prohibit the use of the words Queen's Counsel or the letters QC in any firm name, letterhead, calling card or sign of a member of the society; and that the society direct its professional conduct committee to review the professional conduct handbook and all other society documents regulating the conduct of members and to make all necessary changes in these documents to implement this motion."

I feel they are very well-directed in this connection. As the time runs out in my part of this debate I want to urge the Attorney General, if he doesn't choose to eliminate the designation, at least to use some of the alternatives that have been put before the public and which may in fact be put before this House if we return to this debate. This could bring some order and some additional value to the designation QC.

I believe this in the mind of the Attorney General and I would heartily recommend it to him.

On motion by Mr. Warner the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 10:31 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

FOOD PRICES

Mr. Swart: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, in a delayed reply to a question of mine, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations gave incorrect information to this House, inadvertently I am sure, and in so doing attacked, I suggest, my integrity.

I will supply him with the simple corrected math and he would then perhaps like to correct his statement. He said one litre of US Miracle Whip at $1.31 should have been $1.13. I will send this over to him.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I will stand by what I said yesterday.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

REVISED BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, today I am making available for comment a proposed revision of the Business Corporations Act.

The act originally came into force on January 1, 1971, and introduced for the first time anywhere in Canada the concepts of the one-man business corporation and incorporation as a right. Last May we amended the act to facilitate over-the-counter incorporation and to provide a means of speedy incorporation for the business community. Apart from housekeeping amendments, no further significant changes have been made.

Specifically, the act must be amended to make it uniform, where practical, with the Canada Business Corporations Act, which came in force in December 1975. That act, though modelled on our own, introduced new concepts and reflected growing public interest in the rights of minority shareholders.

In addition, the select committee on company law, in its 1973 report on mergers, amalgamations and certain related matters, recommended substantial changes to the act. Members of the legal profession, businessmen and the Trust Companies Association of Canada have also requested amendments which would overcome problems and correct deficiencies encountered in working with the act.

In March, the staff of my ministry drafted a proposed revision which was sent for comment to certain interested parties. A committee of the commercial, consumer and corporate law section of the Ontario branch of the Canadian Bar Association was appointed to review and comment on the proposed legislation. It was also reviewed by the corporation legislation committee of the Board of Trade, the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, by the Trust Companies Association of Canada and the law schools in Ontario. Revisions were made on the basis of comments received during the summer, resulting in the proposed draft I bring to the members' attention today.

We are circulating this draft because we feel it is essential that a revised Business Corporations Act for Ontario be acceptable to the business community and its legal and accounting advisers, be workable and reflect the latest concepts in corporate law. Following this review, we will be in a position to introduce a bill incorporating the necessary changes.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ONTARIO HYDRO EXPORTS

Mr. S. Smith: A question to the Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister confirm if it is correct Ontario Hydro is selling surplus electricity to American utilities for as much as one cent per kilowatt hour less than Ontario consumers are paying? Is it also correct that some of this surplus power is being sold below Hydro's production costs?

In this connection, is it also not true that American utilities buying this power are retailing it to their consumers at profit mark-ups of as much as 50 per cent of their cost?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I have been awaiting a more detailed response from Ontario Hydro which has not arrived as yet. But certainly when it does arrive I will be glad to share additional information with the honourable member.

I am told, by way of a preliminary examination of the story which appears today in the Toronto Star, there is a comparison between the wholesale price of exports and the Ontario retail price, which makes the comparison more marked. Under the circumstances, if the Leader of the Opposition wouldn't mind, I will wait until I get some further information from Hydro, which had not arrived at the beginning of question period.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: On a matter as important as this, while I realize it is not responsible for the minister to have at his fingertips all information, I would have thought the minister would know. Is it the minister's contention that it is justifiable to ship to American profit-making corporations at the same price charged to utilities here, if it is a question of wholesale versus retail?

Does the minister recognize the rural consumer who buys directly from Hydro is paying much, much more than these American utilities are paying by buying directly from Hydro? Why should it be that American utilities can buy the power more cheaply than our own consumers?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier there is an unfortunate comparison between wholesale export and Ontario retail prices. The information I have, and I want it to be accurate and I'm sure the Leader of the Opposition would want that, is, first, that Ontario Hydro does not sell power below production costs. In fact, the policy is not to sell below cost plus 10 per cent.

Second, the Star comments that, "Last year, Ontario consumers bought 88 billion kilowatt hours of electricity . . . worth $1.8 billion." Any pocket calculator shows that is 2.04 cents per kilowatt hour. The Star also notes that last year 10 billion kilowatt hours of electricity worth $290 million were exported. That averages to 2.9 cents per kilowatt hour. The Star's own figures show Ontario consumers paid less than foreign customers.

Third, average production cost at Nanticoke is 1.6 cents per kilowatt hour, not 2.38 cents, as is claimed by the Interested Citizens Group.

Fourth, the sales to the United States are on a bulk basis, delivered at either 230,000 or 115,000 volts.

Fifth, sales to municipal utility customers include facilities to transform the electricity downwards to household levels and Hydro's share of this is reflected in the cost to utilities.

Sixth, the rural rate includes all the facilities to transform the power down to household levels and distribute that power to each household. These costs are reflected in the rate.

Seventh, the power exported is surplus to Ontario's needs at that time and the sales, which are on an interruptible basis, are cancelled immediately if the power is needed in the province.

In the first 10 months of 1979, Ontario Hydro exported 10.4 billion kilowatt hours, worth more than $300 million, with a net return or profit of about $136 million so far this year. This margin affects rates to all Hydro customers. Without the export sales margin rates would be higher in the province.

Finally, Ontario Hydro must obtain a licence to export power from the National Energy Board. It must satisfy the National Energy Board that among other things the cost of energy to be exported must be recovered fully and, second, it must not be less than the price to Canadians for comparable service.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I don't think what I'd like to ask is really a supplementary. It may be in the way of asking your advice. When the further information comes to the minister, will he be making a statement? Can we ask supplementaries then?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, just to comment: The information which I've just shared in point form is the information which arrived between the main question and now. I'd be quite prepared to respond, or to attempt to respond, to any questions based on the information I've just shared with the House.

Ms. Gigantes: On a point of order: as the information which the minister has just given us almost amounts to a new statement of information from the minister, because this question has already been raised recently in the ministry estimates, I wonder if we could ask him to provide a copy of this statement to us.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I'd be very happy to see whether we could get some run off now. It was actually just a matter of point form in response to the story which appeared today in one of the Toronto papers, but I'd be glad to get the honourable member those points.

Mr. Blundy: I have a supplementary of the Minister of Energy. Given the fact it is commonly said in Sarnia-Lambton that 100 per cent of the production of the Lambton generating station is sold to Detroit-Edison, is the minister willing to categorically assure the users of Sarnia and Lambton that they are not paying more for hydro than is being charged to the Detroit-Edison Company?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I thought I handled that particular question, in so far as the story was concerned, in the comparisons. I would point out to the honourable member that as far as any comparison of monthly residential electric bills is concerned, if one were to look at the July 1979 figures it's $28 in Toronto compared with $46 in Detroit. Certainly there's a very remarkable difference as far as rates are concerned.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Could I ask the minister, Mr. Speaker, why it is that if Ontario Hydro is involved in a sale which involves selling bulk hydro on an interruptible basis to another utility which then sells it to yet another utility, Ontario Hydro doesn't seek to get the middleman profits out of the deal by contracting directly with the final user?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Does the honourable member mean the residential user in the foreign jurisdiction? It obviously deals with the utility in the foreign jurisdiction which in turn deals with its own utilities.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary, the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister has answered point by point an article which appeared in the Star. Actually, I did not ask him to do that. I asked him a specific question.

In particular, one aspect he has not addressed himself to is the question, not of what the users of Detroit-Edison pay, or what the users of Niagara-Mohawk Power pay, but of whether those utilities are retailing Ontario Hydro power to their consumers at a 50 per cent markup. What I'm asking the minister is whether he has information to confirm or to deny that particular possibility.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I have no information that would confirm that the assumption which the Leader of the Opposition has made is correct.

Mr. S. Smith: The member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) would have asked a very important question on behalf of his constituents, Mr. Speaker, about the lack of transmission to the Ottawa area. I will ask a different question now there is no chance to get that on record.

OHIP PHYSICIANS' DEBTS

Mr. S. Smith: A question to the Minister of Health: Since it has become apparent that of the $1.2 million still owed by physicians and practitioners to OHIP, $208,000 of that is unrecoverable because these doctors no longer reside in Ontario, is the minister giving any consideration to how to deal with that problem? Is he prepared, when doctors give notice of opting out of OHIP, for instance, to make sure that any debts they may have in this regard have been recovered? Is there any way he and other provinces could get together so a doctor can't simply leave the province and leave behind a debt without any possibility of any attempt being made to collect that debt?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, once the MRC or the practitioner review committee has made a finding, the physician or the practitioner in question has the right to appeal. That, you will understand, not unlike legal matters involving the courts, can be a lengthy procedure, in which case we are not, as I understand it, in a position where we can legally begin to institute recovery. I suspect that that has contributed in many of the cases in which we are all interested.

I am advised by my officials in OHIP that in most cases involving a recommended recovery from the MRC or a practitioner review committee, once either an appeal has been foregone or the appeal process has been concluded, the recoveries are made, in the main, within a month.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, I address a question to the Minister of Government Services. The manager of the central collection services in his ministry has indicated that they do not pursue individuals who have left the province, other than by writing such individuals and advising them of their outstanding obligation. Is it the policy of the province of Ontario that when people owe money to the people of Ontario we have a collection agency in his ministry that basically just writes them to remind them of their debt, but makes no real effort to pursue them and to obtain recovery in the courts of other provinces or by any other means?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Mr. Speaker, we do try to recover, but I think when the manager within my department was asked he mentioned that we didn't have a very good rate of recovery when the doctors in question go outside of the province. I don't believe he said we wouldn't try to recover, only that we didn't have a very good record of recovery in those cases.

Mr. Braugh: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister, now that he has admitted that the provincial auditor was right, what is he going to do to recover that better than $1 million?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: The figure I have is approximately $202,000 and, as I said, we will try to recover that. But as the manager said, we don't have a very good rate of recovery when they leave the province. That is not to say we won't try and put forth all the effort we can to collect those funds.

Mr. S. Smith: I guess this is by way of supplementary, but I really want to correct what the minister has said. I have a quote here attributed to the manager of the collection services. It is possible he has been misquoted, but it is in the provincial auditor's report and it says, "They do not pursue individuals who have left the province, other than by writing such individuals and advising them of their outstanding obligation."

Why would that be a policy? If it is not the minister's policy, would he please state what his policy is? Does he hire lawyers in the jurisdictions to which these people have moved? Does he try to take them into court in those areas as most businesses would try to do? Why doesn't he try to collect debts, both on behalf of other ministries and on behalf of the crown generally in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the honourable Leader of the Opposition and all the other members that we will try and do our best to collect these debts. I would think, as you look around to some of the other debts that we collect, we do have a pretty good rating.

Mr. Foulds: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Conway: Does organized labour really want Bob Rae?

Ms. Gigantes: Do the Liberals really want Pierre Trudeau?

Mr. Foulds: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could at least ask the government members to join with me in a moment's silence for our colleagues in the Liberal Party.

Mr. Speaker: Now that your privilege has been taken care of, will you ask your question?

Mr. Peterson: Why have you got Michael Cassidy tied up in the basement?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Now you will be running around the province saying that you believe in the resurrection and the life. That is going to be tough for you, really tough for you, Stuart. It is a conversion.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Community and Social Services says that we must believe in the resurrection and the life, or something of that kind, in keeping with the season and all that. The real problem we have is we are among the very few people in Ontario who actually believed his leader when he said that Joe Clark was raiding the province of Ontario. We will be working against Mr. Clark.

Mr. Speaker: Now back to the question period.

Mr. Foulds: The spirit is indeed upon us.

Mr. Pope: What is the oil price policy in this election? Have you decided yet? Tell Bob Andras.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The real election is out there. This is the question period.

URANIUM MINING BUFFER ZONES

Mr. Foulds: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment, who I am sure is waiting in eager anticipation.

In view of the very strong recommendation made by the Environmental Assessment Board in its final report in May of this year on the expansion of the uranium mines in the Elliot Lake area—the recommendation that further development of residences within two kilometres of tailing areas not be permitted—and in view of the minister's own communication to the Steelworkers' representatives in Elliot Lake that "it might be prudent to bear in mind the Environmental Assessment Board's categorical recommendation on this issue," doesn't the minister think it is prudent at this time to step in directly and declare a clear policy implementing that EAB recommendation in view of Rio Algom's reapplication to the Elliot Lake town council for rezoning in order to build bunkhouses in the two-kilometre zone?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think I was more intrigued with the point of privilege than I am with the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: Maybe you should be more intrigued with the question, as a minister.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Well, it didn't get the same response.

We will, as the member knows, prepare a draft response to the report and if he is asking me to take another look at that particular section we are prepared to do so.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The minister does understand, does he not, that he did not reply to that recommendation in his response at all? There is no reply from the government. Surely the minister must be aware that during the course of the hearings and subsequent to the hearings construction of bunkhouses was going on in that two-kilometre zone, construction that is now being objected to by the Steelworkers. Doesn't the minister think it is about time he made a firm stand on that matter?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, I simply said that is a very large report with a great number of recommendations. If he wishes me to take another look at that specific item, we will.

Mr. Wildman: Wouldn't the minister agree that while he is looking at it again, as he suggested he would, and until such time as his ministry is ready to make a response to that recommendation as well as others, Rio Algom should cease and desist from further construction within the zones prohibited, or recommended for prohibition by the Environmental Assessment Board?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am afraid the member is making the assumption that second look would take a long time. Not necessarily. I'll get back to the member in due course and give him some indication.

Mr. Foulds: Is the minister not aware that in the health and safety estimates of the Ministry of Labour last night, spokesmen in that ministry considered the two-kilometre buffer zone inadequate? Isn't it about time the minister had a program for monitoring the present bunkhouse facilities in that zone, for establishing a firm buffer zone and for an orderly phase-out of the construction that is already in that zone? Isn't it about time he had a program?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No. It is reasonable to tell the member I was not aware of the comments of last night in that committee. I am sure, in due course, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) will make me aware of it. Now that notice has been served I will accept it and will check that out. There is very little more I can say than what I have already said in answer to that question.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you. By the way, that was a too-conservative buffer zone the Ministry of Labour people were talking about.

EMPLOYMENT IN FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr. Foulds: I would like to ask a question of the Treasurer. In view of the slowdown in housing starts because of the high mortgage and interest rates and the adverse effect that is having on the woods industry in northern Ontario, can the minister tell us what steps, if any, the government is planning to avoid the 30 to 35 per cent layoffs predicted in the woods industry by Mel Soucie, the northern economics officer of the federal Ministry of Employment and Immigration, and Tulio Mior, the Lumber and Sawmill Workers Union president?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the honourable member knows the great slump in the market is basically in the US. The great percentage of the lumber produced is going to the US, therefore any action taken in Ontario would not affect the eventual consumption at all.

The slump in Ontario housing is more related to demand for starts than to any other single factor. I suggest that the figures I have seen recently from the real estate boards have shown that sales of housing in Canada have stayed amazingly buoyant. I even saw figures for Windsor that were high.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: In view of the absence of a federal government, does the minister not think some initiative could be taken by the provincial government at this time, particularly in terms of improving Ontario's building code in energy-efficient standards so that some crash winter works program could take place in construction over the winter months to take up at least some of the slack?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I assume the member is talking about amendments or adjustments to existing housing rather than brand-new starts, is he? Those kinds of things do need to be looked at. An expansion of the CHIP program was promised and perhaps even its jurisdiction changed when the federal budget was being discussed.

Mr. Roy: There was nothing in the federal budget about that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: They said they would be putting money into that kind of a program—expanding the CHIP type of program. I am almost sure it is in the basic text. There was some discussion whether it should remain federal or become a provincial jurisdiction.

It is the kind of thing I have to consider as I am going through my warm-up to my own budget. It is going to be even more difficult, I am sure members will appreciate, this year. No matter how I liked or disliked the government's budget, I now don't have any budget to guide me while I do my own.

Mr. Foulds: It will always be difficult. But doesn't the minister realize the problem is immediate, over the next few months? Does he not realize the waferboard plants at MacMillan Bloedel and at Great Lakes have already given notices for two- or three-week layoffs starting December 23 that affect 300 workers. There are projected layoffs in Geraldton. Is there nothing that the Treasurer or the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Crossman) plan to do over the next three months?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I cannot say there's nothing. A great deal of the export of those products is to the States. I recall the company in Atikokan—I don't know how it's doing—Pluswood Manufacturing, which told me that something in excess of 80 per cent of its production at one time was going to the States. It's awfully hard to replace that kind of a share of your market. Virtually all of the material I have seen coming from our new mills in northeastern Ontario has been bound for the northeastern United States.

One of the things I am happy to see is the comparison in the cost of western plywood with eastern chipboard and flakeboard and particleboard; our product is coming out on the good side. While there is a declining market it is interesting to note that one or two companies even at this moment are considering installation of extra capacity because they do see the long-term market as being good.

SOYBEAN PRICES

Mr. Ruston: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Has the minister taken any action yet to resolve the problem of the soybean industry in Ontario as to the subsidy being paid on rape-seed coming into Ontario by the three prairie provinces? It comes into Ontario for $30 a ton and soybean oil goes out at $73 a ton.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Earlier this year when the soybean processors and growers got together they recognized that the subsidy on the rape-seed was making it very difficult for them to compete on the local market. At this time the soybean pricing people got together with the federal Minister of Agriculture. In turn, the minister appointed a committee and this committee went into it in detail. The effect is that it doesn't leave any room for the soybean producers to keep up with the prices.

This committee suggested to the federal Minister of Agriculture several weeks ago that consideration be given to give the same subsidy to the oil produced for export by our soybean producers. The federal minister went into this in detail and has concluded that if he starts subsidizing our soybean oil, he would be getting into difficulty with the American soybean industry. It would appear that we are hooked with this problem for an additional three years because of a program initiated by the government of a few years ago.

Mr. Kerrio: That's pretty weak.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Maybe it's pretty weak, Mr. Speaker, but it's factual.

Mr. Ruston: Supplementary: Since the program is also in co-operation with three Conservative governments and one NDP government, surely the Minister of Agriculture and Food, acting for the farmers of Ontario, should have a little power to go to Ottawa and tell them to start changing something.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, the member knows full well what the agreement is. He knows full well the restraint programs that our federal colleagues have been carrying out and he knows full well that there is just not the money for the subsidy that we think the soybean producers should get.

AID TO CHRYSLER

Mr. Cooke: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In view of the fact that yesterday's Financial Post carried an article indicating that according to Ontario government estimates, a Chrysler bankruptcy would push unemployment in Windsor to 40 per cent; that 15,000 direct jobs would be lost and about 30,000 jobs indirectly lost; that UIC payments as well as lost revenue would cost governments $1 billion; in view of the fact that there is a great deal of uncertainty in Windsor right now as to whether or not the payroll of the workers will be met after January 15, would the minister clearly get that information and present it in a statement to the Legislature before we adjourn Friday for Christmas so he can assure and reassure the people of Windsor and the retailers in Windsor who are very much afraid of what's going to happen over the next few weeks, especially during the Christmas season and with the uncertainty that's affecting the retail industry even more? Would the minister make a statement?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would be happy to rewrite and present the statement for this House. I can tell the member that the statement would roughly confirm the figures he read into the record a moment ago. The information he indicated a moment ago is basically accurate. The estimates made by the federal government and by ourselves indicate that would be the impact of Chrysler of Canada going down. Anything I might add by way of a statement would only confirm those figures and the member may take this answer as a statement as to the impact of Chrysler going down.

I can tell the member that it is because of the impact he has just stated, in terms of unemployment and the cost to the taxpayers in the event Chrysler went down, that we have—just to clarify the record—strongly supported proper and carefully considered assistance for Chrysler, in the event Chrysler Corporation in the United States is saved by the Congress of the United States.

I should add that my information is that Congress is scheduled to finish this Friday and take its customary one-month break. Lord knows why it is such a short period of time, but they take only one month off. I am informed that if the Chrysler legislation does not pass the Congress by December 21, it is likely that Congress will be reconvened in the first week of January solely to consider the Chrysler situation. So if there is assistance by the American government it will be in place before the date the member referred to, which would be the date when Chrysler may run out of money.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: Could the minister make a statement and specifically give us the details on the financial situation and the payroll, in view of the fact that when we contacted Chrysler Canada this morning, the public relations people had no idea what was going on and referred us to UAW local 444 and said they would have more up-to-date information?

Secondly, would the minister make a statement as to what the Ontario government position is on the bottom line, on what conditions he wants to see to protect the auto workers of this province in any federal government assistance to Chrysler in Canada? We have not heard that kind of information from this government and its role in the negotiations is fuzzy, to say the least.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With respect, we went over the matter of Chrysler in my estimates; we have gone over Chrysler here on several occasions in the House. I know it is easy for the member to say our role is fuzzy. I have made it quite clear that no government could have had more input into the national government discussions than we have. No government could have given them more specifics as to what we will require in the event any Ontario taxpayers' funds are required.

There have been no direct negotiations between ourselves and Chrysler because those negotiations would not be very useful unless the main negotiations between the national governments are in place.

If the member would be happy to have me take the time tomorrow or on Thursday to give a statement to the House reconfirming the statistics and the position we would like to see develop and the position we have been taking, I will be happy to accommodate him.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: we would certainly look forward to such a statement from the minister. May I ask the minister whether he has informed the people in Ottawa that any participation by Ontario—a participation which we support, by the way—would be accompanied by the placing on the board of directors representatives of the government of Ontario, to be sure that the money being utilized is utilized basically in the long-term interest of the people of Windsor, as well as the people of Ontario generally; that none of the funds find their way across the border; that parts are sourced properly in this province and in this country, to be more specific?

In general terms, is the minister prepared to make that demand as one of the contingencies upon which any assistance would be based, that is representation on the board of directors?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We haven't given consideration to that particular item at this time. I should say, ultimately, if we were to consider that it would only be something we would require in the event that we had any reason to believe there was an opportunity for the funds to slip away to the United States or that they not be applied for the purposes for which we have given the money.

Mr. S. Smith: Look what happened in England.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, but I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that he didn't make that request at the time we gave a grant to the Ford Motor Company.

Mr. S. Smith: It's a totally different situation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not a bit different in terms of the participation of the government of Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: Totally different; it's the same people who took money and left England.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have made it quite clear that before we would commit any grant dollars from this province we would have to ensure that Chrysler had received enough financial assistance for it to be viable for the next period of time.

Given a healthy company or a company that had a reasonable prospect of being healthy I have made it quite clear that we would approach it on basically the same grounds as we approached the Ford situation which was, given a company which is looking at some new investments in this province, what kind of direct grant or other assistance might we give in order to get specific new investment in this province?

I've made it quite clear that we were not looking to assist in any prop-up mechanism. We were not there to stuff money into

Chrysler in order to make sure it gets over its short-term financial crunch. The role of this province would be direct investment to ensure new plants, overhauling of old plants and ensuring that those jobs would remain in those modernized plants. Given that situation—

Mr. S. Smith: Watch them like a hawk.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I say to the Leader of the Opposition, at the time of the Ford situation, which was the equivalent because we were giving money for a new plant equally, he didn't raise that situation.

Mr. S. Smith: Come on, all you have to do is make sure they build the plant.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Leader of the Opposition didn't say we needed a position on the board to make sure the Ford Motor Company used the money for the reasons we set out.

I should also remind him—before he runs out to the TV cameras—that what we did in the Ford Motor Company situation was simply have them draw down the money as the work commenced on the factory. I know if he's been to Windsor he's seen it under way. As they prove to us they're doing the work, we hand over the money. It would be the same sort of situation with Chrysler.

If the member perceives that the NDP position—having our people on the board—is receiving any sort of public acceptance then I know he will adopt that position, so I'm not surprised. He didn't take it at the time of the Ford grant. He shouldn't adopt it now just because the NDP position seems to be carrying some favour with the public.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of the Environment has an answer to a question asked previously.

CANADA METAL COMPANY LIMITED

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In response to a question asked yesterday by the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) regarding the Canada Metal Company, the first deadline on the Canada Metal control order was December 15, 1979. The member is aware of that.

The company was to submit complete results of stack emission tests on the Roto-Cast operations, which is the brass foundry segment of their plant. They submitted some preliminary data for the test results last week. The final completed report and test results were delivered to the central region on Monday—that is two days after date. Ministry staff is now assessing this report to check its accuracy and to see if the lead emissions from the brass foundry are significant.

If the test results indicate that the total lead emissions do not comply with the Environmental Protection Act then a bag house or equivalent control mechanism must be installed on the Roto-Cast section by March 31, 1981. The control order was issued on November 15 and the final completion date of all aspects required in the order is June 30, 1981.

In summary, they did comply with the first date save for two days and, of course, we were quite prepared to accept that two-day delay.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: When would the minister's staff be in a position to report to the minister, and through him to the House, on their findings as a result of the study of the data supplied?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, if the member would accept it it will be certainly after the House adjourns for this session and before we reconvene for the next. Therefore, I'll be quite prepared within the month of January to supply that information to the member in a personal way by letter.

ALLEGATIONS RE BRANT COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General relating to the allegations made by the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) about improprieties in the spending of the Brant Board of Education.

Since, according to the member for Brantford, the basis of the charges was in information provided for him from the local crown attorney, can the Attorney General make a statement to the House about any such information? Since the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) said yesterday that anyone who has information about this matter should bring it forward, would he not think the same advice should apply to him and his officers?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am not aware of the member's allegations in detail with respect to the alleged financial impropriety. I thought from the member's question yesterday to the Minister of Education that there had been some suggestion of an investigation of a criminal nature being conducted into the affairs of this particular board of education. I have confirmed overnight that at no time has there been any such investigation and at no time has the local crown attorney suggested such an investigation. He assures my office that at this point he has absolutely no reason to believe such an investigation is warranted.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Will the Attorney General then explain the basis of the statement made by the member for Brantford that the information came to him from the crown attorney?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Again I am a little handicapped, not knowing precisely what the member for Brantford said. I do know there was a conversation on some social occasion between the member for Brantford and the local crown attorney about the overall administration of the affairs of the board of education.

I have not spoken directly to the crown attorney involved but our director of crown attorneys has spoken to him and has been assured that at no time did the local crown attorney suggest any impropriety that would involve any degree of criminality.

Mr. Nixon: An additional supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister not think he should consult with the Minister of Education since this is an important matter brought forward publicly as an allegation, without any foundation that I am aware of, by the member for Brantford? Would he not think the air should be cleared in this respect, particularly since one of his employees, the crown attorney, has been involved in almost every press report?

Mr. Breithaupt: Is the conversation denied?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No. There was a conversation in general about the board of education, but there was no suggestion that there was a criminal investigation or that any would be warranted. It was the suggestion that the local crown attorney may have made such a statement that gave me great concern.

The Minister of Education did bring this matter to my attention towards the end of last week. I am just not sure in what manner the member wants me to clear the air. My concern was and is whether or not the local crown attorney had suggested a criminal investigation should be undertaken, or was in fact in place. I have been assured that at no time did he suggest any such investigation had taken place or should take place.

Beyond that, I just don't think what the local views might be as to the effectiveness of the local board of education really falls within my purview.

AUTO INDUSTRY LAYOFFS

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. Is the minister aware that as of today we have about 1,500 auto workers on layoff in the Oshawa area, 210 on indefinite layoff at Houdaille Industries in Oshawa and another 300 indefinite and 1,000 temporary layoffs at the Chrysler trim plant in Ajax? If he is aware of those layoffs, would he share with us what contingency plans he has for these two major parts plants in the Oshawa area?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Ministry of Industry and Tourism doesn't have programs to supplement wages, if that is what the member is looking at. He may direct that sort of question to a reference under either the union contract or to the federal government Department of Labour.

We have no programs which are tilted towards supplementing income when there is a layoff period.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister then saying that he has made no recommendations about a transitional assistance benefits program for the area, or that he has not attempted to get new contracts from the parts sector for either one of these two plants, or that he probably doesn't give a damn at all?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm not saying either two or three. In the case of two, of course we tried very hard to continue to get new parts programs for those plants. I would remind the member—and I think I'm correct in saying this—the last time I looked at the figures General Motors had been the best of the big three in terms of giving Canada a fair deal in auto parts. In fact, I think GM is in rough balance in terms of auto parts, under the auto pact. GM is looking after their Canadian responsibilities pretty well, more or less, in terms of auto parts and such things as might help in those plants.

In terms of item three, I can assure the member I do give a damn and we've spent a lot of time looking into the situation and talking to everyone involved.

In the case of the first item, which was a TAB program, as the member knows that was a federal program which was instituted several years ago—I think it was either 1974 or 1975. In those cases, the situation, in terms of sheer numbers, was a lot more critical than the situation is at the present time.

As the member has acknowledged, some of those layoffs—1,000 of them, I think—are temporary and they will depend, literally, on how sales go from week to week in North America. There is little we can do about the sales of GM throughout North America.

LAKE SIMCOE-COUCHICHING REPORT

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Will the minister advise the House as to the status of the Lake Simcoe-Couchiching report, which was completed last April, after two years of meetings? Has it been presented to cabinet? If not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, it hasn't been presented to cabinet as yet. I guess the only defence I can offer as to why not is because so many other things have been at cabinet. Hopefully, that will get to cabinet and a decision will be made in the month of January.

There was some work required of our ministry prior to submitting that report. I had a visit with the appropriate staff some time last week. It is in hand and it should be going forward to cabinet in the month of January.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Why, during the preparation of the strategy report, did officials of the Ministry of the Environment push for the target of 103 metric tonnes as the maximum phosphorus loading limit for Lake Simcoe when the report itself makes it clear that this target is self-defeating?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: As I recall discussions both with the committee and among ourselves, I don't think it is quite appropriate to say we pushed for that 103 metric tonne limit. I think we were aware of the tremendous difficulty of getting below that figure.

As a matter of policy, we would like to be below that figure. There was a great number of people who could certainly support a lower number than 103 metric tonnes. As a matter of policy, so would we. It's easy to accept that position. We also have to recognize the tremendous costs that go along with it.

Before the member asks me I will also say we recognize the tremendous cost if we don't. I don't deny that.

Consequently, because of an excellent presentation by the local committees to a cabinet committee and with the help of the other ministries we're going to try to respond to that report in detail in the near future. I don't want the honourable member to take it as read that we're supporting the 103 metric tonnes as a ministry position, even though logic could assume that from the initial discussions. It is my personal belief that we should do better than that.

MEDICAL SERVICES IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Wildman: I have a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs. Is he aware that the Lakehead Social Planning Council has just published the findings of its health transportation survey showing that in 1977 750 Thunder Bay district residents had to travel to Toronto and/or Manitoba hospitals and 183 to Minnesota hospitals for care, and that it has recommended that OHIP pay for round trips for patients and escorts?

Is the minister also aware that his colleague, the Minister of Health, in a letter to me has again refused to even consider having OHIP cover these costs? If so, what measures is he, as the minister responsible for co-ordinating government policy for northern Ontario, prepared to take to assure equal access to specialized medical care for residents of the north?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, let me point out to the honourable member that I have not seen the report to which he refers. I would say to him that it's not necessary for the people of northern Ontario to go to Minnesota—to other parts of Canada, yes. I do realize there is a great attraction there with the facilities at Rochester, Minnesota. I think there is a need for the facilities and the expertise there.

What we can do with the excessive costs is something we have been looking at for considerable time within my ministry. We have not had any direct contact with the Ministry of Health but I can assure the honourable member we will be discussing it with them.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: In contacting the Ministry of Health the minister may find that his colleague believes non-emergency trips are a social problem rather than a medical problem and thus should come under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Community and Social Services. If that is the case, if that's the government's position, what action is he prepared to take in getting these two ministries together to implement the report's recommendation that either the government establish a regularly scheduled monthly or bimonthly air or land shuttle service to transport non-emergency cases, or that a budget be provided to the Thunder Bay transportation officer for transportation costs for non-emergency cases?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think the honourable member is very much aware that there is excellent air transportation services throughout all of northern Ontario. There is no necessity for the special type of service to which he refers. We will be looking at the whole aspect of the needs of northern Ontario as they relate to the very special cases and when there are emergencies.

CALAND ORE COMPANY LIMITED

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. Has he, the Minister of Northern Affairs, the Treasurer, or the Premier (Mr. Davis) been in touch with Inland Steel Company in Chicago in relation to Caland Ore Company Limited's premature closing down in Atikokan? Has he been in touch with that company to ask them to continue mining until that ore body at Atikokan is completely mined out? Has there been any discussions at all with them?

Hon. Mr. Auld: There have been discussions with the local manager—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Nat Scott.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, Mr. Nat Scott. I believe some of my officials have been or are in touch with Inland Steel in the States. I haven't any results to report, other than the fact that originally they indicated that because of the softening of their market to the US automotive industry the operation of the pellet plant was going to be shortened, as the honourable member is aware, and will probably close at the end of April or early May, rather than later in the summer as had been anticipated several years ago. I will be delighted to report to the House any further news as it comes along.

[3:00]

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: I trust the minister will pursue this as aggressively as he can. Can he report, as I asked in a letter to him, on exactly how much mineable or economic ore is left in the ore body and will not be mined at all by Caland and will be left there and become completely uneconomic for any other mining company to move in and mine?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have that information. I think I can give it in a general way to the honourable member and the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds), who has asked a similar question.

The indication that was given of some 16 million tons of ore is incorrect. The studies done both by our own ministry and by Caland indicate that it was something in the order of 5,000 to 10,000 tons, without an incredible amount of stripping, because of safety reasons, because of the shape of the pit.

I think perhaps I would be wiser to make a statement on this than attempt to give a full answer when I haven't got all the details in front of me. I am hoping to be able to do that before the close of the session.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable minister said he would be making a statement about it. If the member has a brief supplementary I will allow it.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain when he makes his statement why his ministry officials have tamely and so easily accepted the suggestion of Caland that there are only 5,000 to 10,000 tons of ore there, when Steep Rock Iron Mines, which owns the whole body and is leasing to Caland, as early as 1973 in their annual report to shareholders was claiming—and I quote from memory but having read the report just yesterday—that there would be 16.3 million tons of ore left when Caland terminated its operations in 1973?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I anticipate making reference to that question in my statement, as the honourable member may recall when we discussed this matter with Mr. Cook of the Steelworkers and others last week.

CLASS STRUGGLE GAME

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, as a working class member of the Legislative Assembly I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Considering his well known and cosy relationship with the corporate elite of our society, has the minister been in consultation with, or did he indeed advise, the president of Eaton's on that company's banning of the game Class Struggle? Does the minister not find it ironic and peculiar that there are still big business games on the shelves that encourage people to lie, steal and cheat their way to the top, when this most excellent game has been banned?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I will give that question the consideration and the intelligence it requires.

PUBLIC HOUSING

Mrs. Campbell: My question is to the Minister of Housing. In view of the fact persons belonging to the third party have been organizing meetings across Metro, addressing Ontario Housing tenants and advising them, presumably as a result of the minister's negotiations with Metro and a report prepared by Metro staff in conjunction with the minister's staff, that the sale of Ontario Housing properties in Metro is contemplated which will necessitate the relocation of the tenants in such housing, would the minister make a clear and unequivocal statement in this House to calm the very real fears in the minds of people in this Metro area?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I had many discussions with the Metro chairman, the mayor of this municipality and with individuals representing other types of housing in the area of Metropolitan Toronto. It doesn't stop at the borders of Metropolitan Toronto, it continues across Ontario as it relates to the 93,000 units the people of Ontario happen to own which house people less fortunate than some sitting in this Legislature.

It has been very clear that both provincial and federal policies on where we are going in public or publicly-supported housing over the next number of years is being analysed carefully. As I said at the time of the estimates of the Ministry of Housing, one thing we had been able to do over the last 20 years in Ontario, without the greatest foresight but with the assistance of federal, provincial and municipal governments, was to develop large housing projects which do not bring a great deal of credit to either the community they are in nor to the government that supplied them, nor ultimately to the tenants who reside therein.

With the non-profit housing corporations we have established in Ontario, through the municipalities and other organizations, we are looking at some way of reducing the number of public tenants we have in the various projects across Ontario, more specifically in the major cities.

It was not our intention, except where there might be some single-family ownership units provided by the province or through Ontario Housing Corporation which we could dispose of in the free market system, we might sell those units—and I add the words “we might sell them.” However, we are looking very seriously at trying to achieve this goal, in conjunction with the federal government and in programs implemented recently in allowing people of higher incomes to remain within the public housing portfolio. We will get a better blend and a better cross-section of the community, and as a result we could find it will have rewarding experiences both socially and from a protection point of view.

We have indicated, federally, provincially and municipally, that if some of our units should be used for people of higher income factors within the public ownership portfolio at the moment, that a similar if not a greater number will be secured under contract arrangements with the private sector under rent-supplement programs, further dispersing people currently supported through the public purse into more projects and more areas of our community.

We hope to reduce some problems we have experienced in these large projects in Metro Toronto, Ottawa and other communities in the province. If we succeed in doing that we will have great rewards, first for the tenants who reside in the major housing portfolios and second to the coffers of the provincial and federal governments.

REPORT

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Villeneuve from the standing resources development committee presented the committee's report on the annual report of the Ontario Highway Transport Board for 1977, and moved its adoption.

On motion by Mr. Villeneuve the debate was adjourned.

MOTION

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the House meet Wednesday, December 19, in the chamber at 10 a.m., with a luncheon interval from 1 p.m. until 2 p.m., with the routine proceedings to be called at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF YORK AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 206, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of York Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This bill is for first reading only at this time. It represents an amendment to the Regional Municipality of York Act requested by the region.

The proposed legislation would transfer the responsibility for solid waste disposal within the York region to the regional council. The legislation would grant an area municipality the right to an appeal to the Ontario Municipal Board if it objected to the acquisition of a particular solid waste disposal site within the area municipality. We have included this appeal in the legislation so that the area municipalities in York region would have rights similar to those enjoyed by area municipalities wherever regional councils are responsible for solid waste disposal.

However, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) and the government have stated their wishes to streamline the hearing process regarding solid waste disposal site hearings. It may be that in the future policy and legislation will be introduced where there would be only one hearing under either the Planning Act or the Environmental Assessment Act.

HOME BUYERS' PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Isaacs moved first reading of Bill 207, An Act to provide Protection for the Buyers of Homes.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Isaacs: The Home Buyers' Protection Act would require vendors and realtors involved with the sale of new and previously owned homes to provide buyers with a signed statement of facts about various aspects of the homes.

The bill provides that the seller of the home or the realtor acting on behalf of the seller shall provide to the buyer of the home a document which sets out the following facts: the zoning of the land; the official plan designation of the land; the type and quality of the water supply provided to the home; the type and condition of the sewage disposal facilities available to the home; any record of flooding which has affected the home; the storm drainage facilities provided to the home; the location of existing and planned schools in the area of the home—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Surely the honourable member knows that all that is required and all that is permitted is a very brief explanation as to what the bill is attempting to achieve. We don't want you to read the bill.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, there are just two more provisions that the bill contains, and they are distinct provisions.

Mr. Speaker: If you can capsulize it in one sentence I'll allow it.

Mr. Isaacs: If the information required by the bill is not provided to the buyer of the home the bill provides conditions whereby the buyer may cancel the agreement to purchase the home.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the answers to questions 374, 378, 379, 380, 391, 392 and 393; and the interim answers to questions 375, 376, 377 and 381 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 5679.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House I would like to suggest a slight change in the business of the House today from that which is printed on the Order Paper.

I thought we would proceed with some third readings and then second and third readings of some private bills, followed by Bill 204; and then go to Bill 127, An Act to revise The Pits and Quarries Control Act for this afternoon, followed then by Bills 202 and 203, either this afternoon or this evening as required. Then we would go to the budget debate.

[3:15]

Mr. Speaker: While I am wishing the first clerk assistant a happy birthday, maybe he could call the first order.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 77, An Act to amend the Crown Timber Act.

Bill 154, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth Act, 1973.

Bill 173, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Bill 174, An Act respecting the Composition of the Council of the Town of Midland.

Bill 176, An Act to amend the Architects Act.

Bill 180, An Act to amend the Unified Family Court Act, 1976.

Bill 194, An Act to amend the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act, 1975.

Bill 195, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Peel Act, 1973.

Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the City of Toronto.

CITY OF SARNIA ACT

Mr. Blundy moved second reading of Bill Pr18, An Act respecting the City of Sarnia.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

CITY OF HAMILTON ACT

Mr. Mackenzie moved second reading of Bill Pr21, An Act respecting the City of Hamilton.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

CITY OF NORTH BAY ACT

Mr. Nixon, on behalf of Mr. Bolan, moved second reading of Bill Pr28, An Act respecting the City of North Bay.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

SARNIA PORTABLE EQUIPMENT RENTALS LIMITED ACT

Mr. Blundy moved second reading of Bill Pr31, An Act to revive Sarnia Portable Equipment Rentals Limited.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

TOWN OF COBOURG ACT

Mr. Rowe moved second reading of Bill Pr33, An Act respecting the Town of Cobourg.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Elgie moved second reading of Bill 204, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: These are amendments to the provisions of the Labour Relations Act which require province-wide bargaining by trade in the industrial, commercial and institutional sector of the construction industry, not in residential construction.

These provisions passed in 1977 resulted in a compulsory massive restructuring of collective bargaining in construction. Some 250 bargaining sessions were reduced to 25 bargaining sessions, with the consequence that those bargaining were able to more rationally approach that difficult task.

As a result of the experience with the first round of provincial bargaining, and in view of the rapidly approaching 1980 round of bargaining, certain changes in the province-wide bargaining scheme have been proposed. I should point out that these recommendations result from proposals put to me by the construction industry review panel.

This review panel is advisory to me and is a joint labour-management advisory body. As such, it represents the positions of both labour and management, in an attempt to continue to improve labour relations in the construction industry. I am advised by the panel and by members in industry that these recommendations have broad-based industry support.

There are three basic provisions in these amendments, and they reflect a balanced tradeoff between labour and management. The first provision extends the bargaining rights of the various unions to which the provincial bargaining applies. Currently, there are a number of employers who have only recognized a union in particular areas of the province. By this amendment, such employers would be deemed to have recognized the other locals of the same craft union throughout the province.

It must be emphasized that this only affects employers who are bound by an agreement with the union, and only in the industrial, commercial and institutional sector of the construction industry.

The second provision in the bill prohibits selective strikes and lockouts. These occurred in 1978, as you are all aware, and proved to be very disruptive to good faith bargaining. By this provision, if a provincial agency calls or authorizes a strike then all the locals comprising the provincial agency will be required to call a strike.

The remaining provision imposes a 30-day time limit on the ratification of memoranda of settlement. By this provision, the settlement must be either accepted or rejected within 30 days. It is felt that this period of time is ample time to explain and rule on any proposed settlement. It will, in our view, thus lead to increased certainty as to the status of the bargaining relationship following the completion of negotiations.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address some comments to this bill. I think we all recognize that the most important aspect of the bill is the requirement that an employer who recognizes a union in one part of Ontario will be deemed to recognize that union throughout the province. This recognizes the mobile nature of the construction industry and appears to be complementary to, if it was not in fact envisioned by, Bill 22 which brought about province-wide bargaining on a single trade basis within the construction industry.

We note the bill has the support of the construction industry review panel, as mentioned by the minister, and it also seems to be favoured by the many representatives of employees and employers in the construction industry with whom I and members of our caucus have spoken in the past several weeks. I would make brief reference to the Christian Labour Association of Canada, with which we have spoken; the Mechanical Contractors Association of Ontario and the members of the construction industry review panel, to whom we have also spoken. Without exception there is general support for this, even though there have been some concerns which I will bring to the attention of the minister, and to you, Mr. Speaker, in these next few moments.

I would point out that my colleagues from the Kitchener area—the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt), Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney) and Waterloo North (Mr. Epp); and also the member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton)—all four have been spoken to by small contractors who have concerns. I would like to expand on that just briefly and point out that in one instance the member for Kitchener was in receipt of a copy of a letter signed by Mr. Frank H. Sheppard, which was forwarded to the minister and which reflected concerns of the general contractors in the Grand Valley Construction Association and that general area.

I think it fair to ask the minister in his concluding remarks, if indeed he intends to respond, how he intends to respond to the concerns raised by the members of the Grand Valley Construction Association and those other members in the Kitchener area who have also expressed concern to my colleagues.

Let me just say next that we do see three contentious issues with respect to bargaining in the construction industry which are not addressed by this bill. We would ask the minister's indulgence in considering them and also in responding to us as soon as possible about these concerns.

The first concern we have is the question of the legality and desirability from a public policy point of view of subcontracting and affiliation clauses in agreements between unions and employers in this industry. There are agreements whereby a group of employers agree they will employ only members of a particular union and they will employ only contractors who employ members of a particular union or a particular group of unions.

I do not believe the Labour Relations Act or any other legislation addresses this problem specifically, although I believe there has been a decision of the Ontario Labour Relations Board which touches on this matter. I believe these types of agreements could have wide-ranging consequences in the construction industry affecting the rights of both organized and unorganized workers.

I would suggest the minister establish an industrial inquiry commission under section 34 of the Labour Relations Act to examine all aspects of these clauses, not just their legality but their overall effects. Again, Mr.

Speaker, I would ask the minister's indulgence and urge him to do this as soon as possible.

The secondary item of concern which requires further examination is that of secondary picketing. As I understand it, the Labour Relations Act neither sanctions nor forbids this practice. I believe the time has come to see whether the provisions of the Labour Relations Act and the interpretations of the act by the labour relations board deals with this problem in a clear and satisfactory manner. I would ask that the minister also take a look at that problem of secondary picketing.

The third issue which is touched on by section 1 of Bill 204, concerns the application of the bill only to the industrial, commercial, and institutional sector to the exclusion of the electrical power system sector. When we were debating Bill 22 the Liberals proposed that the power systems be included in the bill as most of the contractors and employees involved in that sector also worked in the industrial, commercial or institutional sector. Our proposal was defeated by the government and members of the third party.

However, the government did appoint an inquiry headed by Dr. S. Ronald Ellis of the York University law school to examine the problem. The study done by him was known as the Ontario Electrical Power Systems Sector Inquiry Commission report, or the Ellis report. Dr. Ellis did a thorough report on the matter, but the government has seen fit not to act on the report, at least as far as we know at this point. We believe the government should have moved on this problem back when we were discussing Bill 22, and we certainly feel that, not having done it then, it should have done it between that time and now.

In summary, we feel Bill 204 is important enough to be dealt with as expeditiously as possible, even though I have listed some concerns we have, particularly when one is aware of the problems of dealing with the negotiating process in the year 1980. We understand no non-union workers will as a direct result of the action of this bill be immediately unionized. We understand it will not affect residential contractors. Even though we have brought to the minister's attention the concerns about subcontracting, picket lines and the lack of progress on the Ellis report, we will support this bill because we feel it is in the best interests of the greatest number in our province.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, I see the bill as a continuation of what I guess could be called a new era in collective bargaining in the construction industry. While I have some unease at giving up any tools the workers may have, including the localized strike, I think it is a further attempt at a useful rationalization. I think the trade-off is probably as effective or more effective for the construction workers as it is for the construction industry. I think the bill should be given a chance. We support the bill.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, the member for London North raised several concerns, and I will try briefly to deal with some of them. In particular he asked about the concerns expressed by a number of small contractors making up the Grand Valley Construction Association, who are also members of the Ontario General Contractors Association.

I tried to make it clear in my opening remarks the panel has confirmed that the recommendations I have put forward have broad general support. That is not to say they have universal support. This group from Grand Valley, which I met this morning in my office, does have concerns about the impact of this legislation on it. These are contractors who operate union in some board areas and non-union in others.

I have to be frank. As I have told the member before, it will have some impact on them; but I don't believe it will have the impact they are concerned about. Frankly, in the collective bargaining process the employees will have the same concerns as the employers about retaining work in all areas. I think the collective bargaining process, as it has done in other areas, will establish wage differentials depending upon the board area involved.

Mr. Haggerty: Non-union?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I am talking about the organized sector, where there are differential wage rates for different board areas. I think common sense and a bit of self-interest will prod those negotiating to recognize the realities of certain areas. It is my belief in that regard that these particular contractors will not have their business impeded in any significant way. One member of the panel who knows the industry particularly well advised me there would be something less than a dozen companies that might have serious concerns. To date, that has, indeed, been the case.

To further substantiate the feeling that has been made clear to me, the labour relations bureau of the Ontario General Contractors Association has written a letter to me clearly supporting the contents of this legislation, speaking on behalf of general contractors throughout the province. I have to assume that labour relations bureau is speaking on behalf of the majority of contractors in this province and are seeking to act in the best interests of all parties in the province.

The member for London North raised three other issues that he referred to as contentious issues. The first has to do with subcontracting clauses and non-affiliation clauses. As I'm sure the member knows, they are not quite the same thing. In any event, both subcontracting clauses and non-affiliation clauses have, in this jurisdiction, been declared legal. By that I mean that the Ontario Labour Relations Board commented on a case before it and that decision was taken to the divisional court for appeal. At appeal the position that it was legal to have such contracts was declared.

At the present time, many of the trades in provincial bargaining do have subcontracting clauses, but there is no provincial non-affiliation clause. Therefore, I think it would be inappropriate at this time to comment on the appropriateness of a clause which the court has held to be legal and which is not yet part of any provincial agreement.

The member did, however, suggest I should consider an industrial inquiry into these. Without giving any commitment or any suggestion that something like that might be forthcoming, I have no hesitation in saying I will be glad to review it and I will be happy to let the member know the results of that deliberation.

The member referred to secondary picketing. It is my belief that secondary picketing is not a problem in this province. Picketing in this province is not dealt with under the Labour Relations Act because we have established over the years a body of jurisprudence in common law which has fairly well categorized the limits of picketing. To my knowledge, secondary picketing has not been a problem in this province, because in common law it is not permissible.

If the member has other information I would be pleased to hear about it. I do know there are some groups in the community that feel there should be a code of picketing. But frankly, advice given to me is that there is indeed now a code of picketing; even though it's not codified and not in the Labour Relations Act there is a common law code of picketing practice.

The member for London North further made reference to the Electrical Power Systems Construction Association and the Ellis inquiry into the electrical bargaining sector. Following that report, as I'm sure the member is well aware, there was considerable voluntary restructuring with Hydro, which had previously had a majority interest in the EPSCA bargaining group, giving up that majority and appointing Dr. Ellis as the new chairman of the EPSCA bargaining group to hold the deciding vote.

I like to feel that for the time being there has been considerable voluntary effort to restructure that sector. I'm satisfied that good progress has been made to date.

We will continue to meet and to discuss it, as I have been doing over the past year, but at the moment I want to assure the member that in my opinion, and in the opinion of advisers in my ministry, there has been considerable satisfactory restructuring. Dr. Ellis, who wrote the Ellis report, is now the chairman of that new EPSCA bargaining committee, and I am satisfied that there is no need to intervene at this time.

Mr. Van Horne: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is your point of order?

Mr. Van Horne: The minister was questioning one of my comments, and I would like to respond. If it is not a point of order, I would seek the Speaker's direction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the bill going to committee?

Mr. Breithaupt: It probably won't have to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for London North, briefly.

Mr. Van Horne: Yes, very briefly. The minister asked if I had any information I could give him with regard to picketing. I would simply submit that this bill came down the line in rather short order and some of the people in the industrial sector are only aware of it now. As a result of that recent awareness, this morning I received a call with the suggestion that further information is on its way to me. I simply cannot give him the detail now, but I want him to know that when I get it I will share it with him.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: On picketing?

Mr. Van Horne: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I would be pleased to receive that information, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, is it appropriate for me to introduce two minor amendments at the time of third reading?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No.

House in committee of the whole.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 204, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Elgie moves that section 131a(1) of the Labour Relations Act, as set out in section 2 of the bill, be amended by striking out the word "an" in the fourth line and inserting in lieu thereof, "a designated or certified."

Hon. Mr. Elgie further moves that section 131a(2) of the Labour Relations Act, as set out in section 2 of the bill, be amended similarly by striking out "an" in the fourth line and inserting in lieu thereof, "a designated or certified."

Hon. Mr. Elgie further moves that section 131a(3) of the Labour Relations Act, as set out in section 2 of the bill, be amended by striking out "an" where it appears the first time in the second line and inserting in lieu thereof, "a designated or certified."

Hon. Mr. Elgie: If members want that clarified, it is simply to clarify with certainty that we're talking about the central bargaining agency and not one of the local bargaining agents.

Motion agreed to.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Elgie moves that section 134a(3) of the Labour Relations Act, as set out in section 4 of the bill, be struck out.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, the reason for striking out this section is that I've had some legal advice that it might be interpreted that that remedy section apply to other sections; and indeed that section 79 of the Labour Relations Act would apply in any event, therefore it's unnecessary.

Motion agreed to.

Sections 5 and 6 agreed to.

Bill 204, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Elgie, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendments.

AGGREGATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Auld moved second reading of Bill 127, An Act to revise the Pits and Quarries Control Act, 1971.

Hon. Mr. Auld: By popular demand, Mr. Speaker, having learned my lesson, I have a brief statement; a little of the past history and comments on the principle of Bill 127.

Aggregate is like all our other mineral resources: it is nonrenewable and we have to mine it where we can find it. Nature was generous in Ontario, however, as most of the resources in this province, probably nearly three quarters of the total of aggregate resources, are located within 75 miles of our major demand points.

While the resource was deposited in abundant quantities, it became clear over 10 years ago the province faced shortages due to loss of resources through pre-emptive land usage. In addition, it was clear that regulation of the industry was required if aggregate extraction was to remain an acceptable land use.

As a result, the Pits and Quarries Control Act, 1971 was proclaimed on November 3, 1971. That act has been in force for eight years. It has solved many of the environmental and rehabilitation problems associated with the aggregate industry; however, it has not accomplished all the results it was intended to achieve.

For example, the ambiguous and ineffective language of a number of sections in the act make it difficult to administer and enforce; the rehabilitation security deposit is inadequate and does not promote rehabilitation; the act does not provide for adequate liaison with municipalities; it does not provide for the industry to carry all the costs incurred as a result of pit and quarry operations; there is no effective provision for suspension of licences in order to alleviate problems; there is no provision to deal with the rehabilitation of abandoned pits and quarries; and finally, the act does not cover crown land pits and quarries in designated areas.

As a result, as the honourable members are aware, my ministry appointed the Ontario mineral aggregate working party in December, 1975 to examine those concerns. The working party examined the full range of economic, social, environmental, legal and technical aspects related to mineral aggregates. From the beginning, the working party solicited wide-ranging public input to ensure that all points of view were considered.

Accordingly, a public participation program was established, briefs requested and six open houses held in the areas of high aggregate production. Over 600 written comments were received and there were more than 800 participants in the open house.

The working party handed down its report in December, 1976. The report recommended new legislation be drafted to replace the Pits and Quarries Control Act and set out 64 recommendations to be taken into account.

Over 100 submissions were received from municipalities, both local and regional or county, special interest groups, industries and associations, and from other provincial ministries with regard to the report of the working party.

This bill, the Aggregates Act, flows from the report of the working party and the experience gained over the years by various interest groups concerned with the Pits and Quarries Control Act, 1971.

The new act has three purposes: (1) To provide for the management of the aggregate and crown aggregate resources of Ontario; (2) to control and regulate pits and quarries, wayside pits and quarries and crown aggregate pits and quarries; (3) to require the rehabilitation of lands from which aggregate or crown aggregate had been excavated.

The Aggregates Act provides for: (1) Wording which will result in better administration and enforcement; (2) increased rehabilitation security which should generate better and more rehabilitation; (3) more liaison with municipalities; (4) remuneration to municipalities to compensate them for costs resulting from the operation of pits and quarries; (5) the immediate suspension of licences and more detailed site plans resulting in stricter control over the industry; (6) the rehabilitation of abandoned pits and quarries; (7) crown land pits and quarries in designated areas to be administered under the act.

The rehabilitation security deposit is increased from two cents per imperial ton to eight cents per metric tonne to adequately cover the cost of rehabilitation. Detailed site plans are required, and progressive and final rehabilitation standards are established. Funds will be available to rehabilitate abandoned pits and quarries. New provision is made for extensive liaison with both the local and county or regional municipal governments.

The annual licence fee is six cents per tonne of material removed from the site and the money will be dispersed as follows: four cents per tonne to local municipalities, one half cent per tonne to counties or regional municipalities, one half cent per tonne to an abandoned pit or quarry fund and one cent per tonne to the province.

In concluding these opening remarks, I would just mention to the House I have several amendments to introduce at the committee stage of this bill and will forward copies to the opposition critics and so on prior to that stage, in fact as soon as I have them all together.

I am hopeful the standing committee on resources development will be able to deal with this bill during the winter recess, and I am also hopeful we might, with the co-operation of all members present, be able to complete second reading by six o'clock.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the minister has indicated his willingness to have a standing committee examine the bill. There is no doubt a number of interested citizens as individuals, and others as members of groups, want to express views pertaining to sections of the bill.

I can recall very well when the original bill was debated in the House in 1971. All of us, as members of the Legislature, had received a good many complaints from citizens who felt the development of the aggregate industry was haphazard and willy-nilly. The pits were opened without any responsibility in the long term under law or regulation requiring the pits to be operated safely and cleanly. At the time there was no control as far as dust and noise were concerned, and the wear and tear on sometimes very small, in fact inadequate county and township roads, was such that it was felt definitely that a control measure should be introduced.

In many constituencies, including my own of Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, there are very large deposits of high quality gravel. I have been informed locally that for especially important concrete construction such as the Pickering nuclear plant, and even the CN tower, the aggregate near Paris, Ontario is considered to be the best and I believe a premium is paid for it. Many truckloads have come down into this area to the profit of the owners, and I have no objection to that.

I was particularly interested, however, that many people feel the 1971 bill has been a failure. Most of the reason for the failure has been directed at the ministry, and I believe the ministry in turn has indicated their staff is inadequate to enforce the law and the regulations applying to it in an effective way.

While the intentions are expressed in the bill and the regulations, and there are many of them, have been promulgated in an effort to bring adequate controls to the aggregate industry, still both sides, those who feel that the aggregate industry is too restricted and those who feel it is given much too much leeway in its development, are dissatisfied.

The thing that must concern us is one of the pieces of important information that came from the Ontario aggregate working party. It is suggested that based on recent estimates of demand, sand and gravel reserves in the central region of Ontario should be sufficient to the year 2005 and crushed stone to the year 2025. With respect to Ontario as a whole, total supplies of aggregate were considered adequate to the year 3000, which is a bit beyond the area of concern of most of the members here.

The concern does apply however, when we are informed that because of zoning policies, official plans, regulations and other restrictions, the amount of available sand and gravel in the central Ontario region is really reduced by about two thirds, and the amount of stone available for crushing in the central region is reduced to about a tenth. These are rounded figures, but they indicate that although the resources are there the plans and restrictions that have been put on, particularly over the last decade, have reduced the availability of those resources so that naturally costs have been forced up.

The government has had to deal with that. On the one hand, naturally, they have to respond to citizens who are very concerned at the depredations worked on the community and the landscape and the roads and the air by the removal and the utilization of the aggregate; and on the other hand, those same people who are complaining about it naturally want to have an adequate supply of high quality aggregate at reasonable price so that our building industry and the basis of our economy is not going to be hindered.

In this respect I have a certain degree of sympathy with the minister, his colleagues and his predecessors. It is very difficult to bring those two opposing views into some kind of reconciliation where justice is done for both sides.

One area that is of substantial concern is that maybe even this bill, elaborate though it is in some respects, is not going to fulfil the needs, that the same seeds of failure that were sown in the original bill in 1971 remain in the present legislation before us, Bill 127.

Many responsibilities are given to the minister—I won't list them, they are listed in the bill—but one of the problems is that perhaps this minister has too many responsibilities. He is seen not to be a controller of the aggregate industry but really the developer himself. It is his responsibility to search out the resources and see that the amounts are properly scaled so they are made available to industry in a fair and equitable way. It almost seems that the Minister of Natural Resources and his advisers become really the operators of the overall provincial industry. Of course at the same time they have the responsibility to control it. There is no procedure whereby the Ministry of the Environment can under its regulations come in with any of their specific and special responsibilities to protect the environment.

No sanctions of the new act will allow assessment of site locations or enforcements by the Ministry of the Environment. The same ministry, in this case the Ministry of Natural Resources, is empowered with the responsibility to find the aggregate, to do the resource research and to administer and promote its removal in an orderly way; and at the same time to exert control over the operation.

The second substantial objection comes to us from municipalities. In this area, the township of Mono has taken the lead, as well it might since it has had considerable experience in this regard. Several municipalities have indicated they are offended that this bill would give the ministry the power to overcome and supersede the planning restrictions that the townships have put on. In fact as I understand it the aim is that the minister, through his powers, can distribute responsibility for the extraction of aggregate so no one area has to bear the brunt of the depredations, the excavations and so on; but this responsibility, and I suppose to some extent assessment benefit, is distributed over the municipalities that have the aggregate to contribute to the economy.

There is a very substantial objection to the removal of this basic planning power, which has always been associated with the municipalities and has been theirs under the Planning Act and its various amendments, and to some extent under the Municipal Act itself.

The resolutions put forward by the township of Mono have been reviewed and supported by a long list of municipalities which are directly involved. Their main objection is that they feel local control in this matter is being removed from them by active legislation; and while they are not commenting on the ability of any individual minister, they are concerned that this power should not be centralized in a way which in the long run might not be to the benefit of the individual municipality. I have to put forward that concern since in many respects it is the main one, and certainly one of the very important ones.

The third point that I believe merits comment on second reading, is our support for the concept of providing funds to do a clean-up job on worked-out pits or abandoned pits where the owner cannot be held responsible. We feel, of course, the owner, who had the benefit of the removal of the aggregate in the first instance, should be required to pay, if not the full cost to bring it up to government standards, at least a part of it. We can see, however, the problems in either locating the person who benefited financially from it or finally enforcing the cleanup, particularly when the aggregate was removed before regulation amounted to anything, essentially before 1971 but in some respects even earlier. For this reason, we agree with the concept of setting aside—what is it, five cents per ton?—never mind, don't look it up—a few cents from each ton extracted so that the money can be applied for that purpose.

A large number of organizations, very reputable ones dealing with the environment particularly, have brought to public attention, or to anyone who would read their report, the fact that these moneys are going to be inadequate. One of them even projects that with the budget that would be based on the removal of aggregate now it would take more than a century to clean up the abandoned pits that already pockmark many parts of the province.

There are mitigating factors in this connection, however, and many townships, several in my own constituency, have taken an initiative not to spend tax funds to clean up those abandoned pits but to approve building permits on those pits and allow them to be sold for building lots. In these instances it's obvious that the property, if it is left the way it is, is not going to be good for anything except short-term evening parking and things like that, but if it is clearly made known that the property would have the benefit of a building permit if sold under those circumstances—the smaller municipalities in the rural areas are having great success in adding in many instances to their own revenues by selling these small properties—the owner then can spend his own money to change the profile of the property in any way he wants. I know of several instances where very fine homes have been built on the properties and the private sector has taken the responsibility for a cleanup.

The argument, however, is that although the concept and principle of cleaning up abandoned properties is an excellent one and one which we support, there is some indication that the financing of it is going to be inadequate. It is, as politicians often say, a step in the right direction.

The planning authorities of the province, in May 1979, issued a white paper dealing with the Planning Act. In its terms it deals with the pits and quarries problem. I quote from three areas from the white paper, issued in May of this year, that have some application.

The first is as follows: "The province would be concerned with examining an official plan in the context of provincial interests and policies." I now say, in my own terms, that of course that is an indication the white paper envisages the centralization of the responsibility of circumventing or overriding local planning authorities in the context of overall provincial policy.

The second deals with housing: "The Minister of Housing, either independently or jointly with other ministries, will publish policy circulars. Municipalities will have to take the policy circulars into account in formulating any planning policy." I say now, in my own terms, that inherent in that is the fact it would not lie with any municipality to forbid the extraction of aggregate by zoning procedures where government policy, clearly stated, indicates those areas should allow the extraction of aggregate. Once again, local autonomy is removed, is completely removed in this particular instance.

The third point extracted from the white paper is as follows: "The minister will have the power to request any municipality to incorporate into its official plan any matter specified by the minister. Where the municipality fails to amend its plan the minister may cause the plan to be amended." That specifically reiterates the position that local autonomy is completely obliterated in this regard and the policy of the government, as expressed in the statement of the minister, in fact the will of the minister, will prevail in each and every case.

There is no doubt then, and no reason not to clearly understand the objections put forward by many of the municipalities in this connection; and I know other speakers, in response to resolutions passed in their own areas, will want to bring that forward.

It is clear, as well, that the powers of the minister have been greatly reinforced by the provisions of the bill. Under the 1971 enactment it was quite possible for individuals not directly concerned to express public objection, and of course that always remains, but also to require hearings before the board if they felt the minister had not acted responsibly, or at least in conjunction with their views in regard to approvals or control of a pit.

This power is now largely removed. The minister may, by his own judgement, indicate that a person does not have the power to require a hearing. It is quite possible then that those people who object to the decisions taken by the minister do not have recourse, because the very minister whose decisions are objected to has the power to indicate whether or not a hearing may be held on the basis of the objections.

I find this procedure unacceptable. It seems the minister, in his efforts to reduce the time consumed in hearing objections and having an impartial judgement made, is to a degree greater than necessary arrogating to himself the powers to decide where the pits will be located, how they will be operated, when they will be closed, and in some detail the procedures associated with those decisions.

As we supported the principle of the bill in 1971 we support the principle now. There are so many individual areas which should be discussed, and could be discussed on second reading because they are far from superficial, that this debate could go on for a good long time.

At one time I attempted to make a list of interested organizations and didn't bother completing it. The number of organizations which have spent many hours and many dollars researching the concepts of control of aggregate and pits and quarries, in this jurisdiction and in other jurisdictions, is very impressive. The Foundation for Aggregate Studies has presented an extremely useful paper, and naturally the aggregate producers have put forward their views. Most of the organizations dealing with the environment have reviewed it. At least one of the municipal organizations has put forward a remarkably useful review of the bill, going through it by section and expressing what it considers to be objections, also approvals in many instances, and proposed amendments.

I'm sure all of that material will be put to good use by the members of the House who are members of the committee reviewing this during January and February, or whenever the committee hearings are held. The information is there. I believe the objections are particularly well founded and that the bill can be improved by the kind of committee review the minister has now agreed should take place and should occur.

We hope the bill can receive second reading this afternoon. We look forward to the kind of committee review involving testimony from those individuals and groups directly concerned that have already put their views before us as individual members of the House.

Mr. Swart: In rising first to speak for my party, I want to say that the critic of the Ministry of Natural Resources is not abdicating his responsibilities nor am I usurping them. I have another commitment rather shortly, so he permitted me to speak first on this bill.

I speak on this bill in a mood of some frustration, anger and disgust, because I have been involved with the matter of pits and quarries, the management of them and their rehabilitation with the municipal associations and in other ways for many years. After many reports, the situation today is very little better than it was 10, 15 or 20 years ago. If anything, it's probably true to say it is worse than it was back in those days. As many people were, I was very pleased when the Pits and Quarries Control Act was brought into being in 1971. Although we didn't think it was the panacea for all the problems, we thought it would go a long way to resolve some of the difficulties. In fact it has done very little to improve the situation.

As everyone knows and as was mentioned by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, the municipalities are unhappy. The quarry operators in many respects are unhappy. Most of all, the citizens of many municipalities are extremely unhappy because of the numbers of pits and quarries, and the conditions which prevail in them.

I admit, as did the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, that it is a difficult problem. There are conflicting views on this matter and there are conflicting interests; as a result it's extremely difficult to resolve them. I recognize that most municipalities, if it were permitted, would like to have no pits or quarries within their boundaries. We have to have aggregate, so there have to be rules and regulations.

What makes me most annoyed and angry about this bill before us is that it is largely a façade. Anybody who has looked at it realizes there are only the bare bones, and maybe not even the bare bones. There is no life to it and there is no flesh to it. Flesh could be put on it by regulations and life could be given to it, it has possibilities; but with the record of the ministry and the government to this date it's fair to conclude, as most people have, that this bill is not going to resolve the very real problems that exist.

It would seem to me in a bill like this, when so much of it is left to the discretion of the minister, there would have been some principles stated in the bill, which in fact simply refers to three purposes:

"(1) To provide for the management of the aggregate and crown aggregate resources of Ontario"—management is left totally to the minister, there are no principles established; "(2) to control and regulate pits and quarries, wayside pits and quarries and crown aggregate pits and quarries"—there are no details of how this is going to be done, that is going to be left to the minister; "(3) to require the rehabilitation of land from which aggregate or crown aggregate has been excavated"—again all of those decisions are really left to the Minister of Natural Resources.

I want to point out a number of areas where this discretion is left to the minister. First of all, it is left to the minister to determine to what part of the province this shall apply. It is true the part to which the Pits and Quarries Control Act applies at present will automatically be included, but the minister has the power to make the final determination where this shall apply.

Section 11 says, "The minister in considering an application for a licence shall have regard to . . ."—but it only sets out the guidelines he shall have with regard thereto, no firm policy statements are made there.

Under section 12(7), which deals with the issue of the notices and appeals: "The minister may, upon receipt of a notice under subsection 6"—when somebody wants to be heard before the Ontario Municipal Board—"that in the opinion of the minister discloses an interest in the matter that is sufficiently substantial to warrant a hearing . . ." The minister makes a determination whether anybody affected by this will even get a hearing before the Ontario Municipal Board. When we recognize there is no compulsory notice to be sent even to abutting property, we can see what little control the public is going to have over assuring there will be a hearing before the OMB.

Section 13(1), regarding the issuing of licences, simply says, "The minister may in his discretion issue a licence subject to such conditions as he considers necessary."

Section 13(2): "The minister may at any time add a condition to a licence or rescind or vary a condition of a licence."

Total and absolute control over the conditions under which a licence will be issued, and whether or not it will be given to the applicant, is at the discretion of the minister.

Section 14 refers to the licence fees and the distribution of those licence fees; again it is left entirely to the minister. It would seem to me the minister could readily have provided in this bill that a certain minimum percentage would have to go to the municipality to cover the extra cost created; but that is not provided in this bill, it is left totally to the discretion of the Minister of Natural Resources.

Section 22 provides that the Ontario Municipal Board assumes a role it hasn't had to date, which in effect makes its decisions much weaker than all of the other decisions it makes. In this case, unlike planning and all the other matters that come before the board where its decision may be appealed to cabinet, here it provides only for a recommendation to the minister. So the power the board has as an independent body, to which many citizens look for their protection, will be weakened and less meaningful than it is at present.

In section 27 dealing with wayside pits and quarries, again the minister may in his discretion issue a wayside pit or quarry permit. Subsection 2 says, "Where the location of a wayside pit or quarry, for which a wayside pit and quarry permit has been issued, contravenes any relevant restricted area bylaw, the permit prevails and the bylaw does not apply to the wayside pit and quarry."

Anybody who has discussed the problem that municipalities now have with regard to quarrying will realize there is as much objection to the situation with regard to wayside pits and quarries as there is with regard to quarrying generally; yet they have practically no regulation whatsoever, only that the minister may issue this permit as he sees fit.

In section 33 of the act, dealing with abandoned pits and quarries, once again the discretion as to whether it is to be an abandoned pit and quarry and whether funds are to be dispersed is left entirely to the Minister of Natural Resources.

The same thing is true of section 47; the very important matter of rehabilitation is left to the minister without even any guidelines set for the ministry to operate by.

The rehabilitation security payments are again, under section 48, left to the minister. Even the right of an individual to prosecute has to be approved by the minister before that person can proceed with a prosecution. It is the same with all of the important regulations. We'll find if we look at section 62: "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations respecting the management of the crown aggregate resources of Ontario, prescribing or providing for the calculation of fees and providing for the payment thereof."

All of the important parts of this bill are not put into the bill itself but are left to the discretion of the minister. Actually, this bill should be before us as a one-paragraph bill. It could simply say the Minister of Natural Resources is hereby authorized to establish policy and make regulations as he deems desirable for the establishment and operation of pits and quarries in the province. In effect, that is largely what is being done by this bill.

Somehow or other I have the strange belief that it is this Legislature, through acts of this Legislature, which should make policy; that should be the purpose of the bills we have before us. This bill doesn't do that, therefore it is largely a sham and a hoax.

This bill is an insult to this House because while the 1971 bill was still in force, at the same time that this bill was being circulated for comment, the government had stated its policy in clear and unequivocal terms.

I have a letter here to the Ontario Municipal Board dated September 11 and signed by the Minister of Natural Resources, in which he states the policy of the government of this province. This was written, I think I'm correct in saying, because there was a hearing on Durham region's official plan before the Ontario Municipal Board. The minister sent this to them as a statement of government policy.

I want to read most of this into the record because I think it is important. We look at the bill on the one hand, that skeleton that says nothing, and then look at this letter on the other hand.

It is headed Mineral Aggregate Policy for Official Plans:

"1. All parts of the province possessing aggregate resources shall share the responsibility for future demands, at first approximately in proportions existing under present market patterns until new, long-term sources of supply can be made available, based on efficient, long-distance transportation systems;

"2. That aggregates must be available at reasonable cost to the consumer, including environmental, transportation and energy costs;

"3. That licensed pits and quarries under provincial legislation must be recognized and protected in official plans . . ."

Then there is a section about the province providing some basic information to municipalities.

"5. That the province, in co-operation with the municipalities, must identify areas of high aggregate resource potential and define those areas required for possible future extraction adequate to meet future provincial demands;

"6. That the identification, designation and protection of high aggregate resource potential areas should occur jointly by the regional county and local official plans;

"7. That uses of land which would preclude the possible future extraction of aggregates should not be permitted in required areas of high aggregate resource potential. Prohibited uses would include residential, commercial and industrial development. Other land uses would be permitted, such as agricultural and forestry;

"8. That because of time and cost constraints there should be special approval procedures for wayside pits and quarries; therefore, policies should be included in official plans to allow the opening of wayside pits and quarries without amendment to the plan or its implementing zoning bylaws;

"9. That the Ministry of Natural Resources should have ultimate authority to ensure that adequate supplies of aggregate are available for future use, and official plans should not be approved until they ensure the municipalities will have available their fair share of future aggregate supplies; and,

"10. That the province require rehabilitation of land after excavation, either through restoring the land to its former use or condition or to another use or condition that is or will be compatible with the use of adjacent land."

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that is the policy of this province, not what's in this bill. When the minister determines whether he is going to give approvals to wayside pits and quarries, that is the document that is going to be used. I say it's deliberate that they don't set out the principles in this bill, because they want to retain unto themselves the principles and the policy. This bill becomes very much a sham.

It's essential in any bill where you delegate authority to the minister that you establish the principles of the act. The government did that in the Niagara Escarpment Protection Act. Maybe that's why they don't do it here. There were principles established there. They succeeded in backing off, of course, but it makes it much more difficult; that is perhaps why they don't have them in here.

It seems to me there are at least four principles that should be included. One is that priority should be given to maintaining prime farm land. It's not even mentioned in the bill. Two, the number of pits and quarries should be related to need and no municipality should be expected to take an excess of pits and quarries. Three, the views of local councils and citizens' groups should be a major factor in the decision-making process. Four, the payments to the municipalities should be at least adequate to meet all other additional costs.

At the present time those things are all left to the discretion of the minister. They are very basic principles which, to me, should have been embodied in Bill 127.

I'm not going to go into any great detail on the other aspect of the bill which is weak, but I know some of my colleagues will. There are many sections to that. I would just say to the minister that he could do no better than to read—and perhaps he has already read it—the article by John Swaigen of the Canadian Environmental Law Association in Municipal World. I believe it was in the September, 1979, issue. It sets out the policies which ought to be included in this bill and points out the weakness of the bill as it now stands.

There is just one other point I want to make while I'm on my feet, I will leave the rest to my colleagues. It is this: This bill is really predicated on the proposed new Planning Act white paper and the Planning Act which is going to be brought in based on that white paper.

What we have in this bill, therefore, are policies that make it even more meaningless, because that bill is not in force at present. When that bill is in force it will in some respects even further weaken this legislation. I say that because as it is proposed in the white paper the Ontario Municipal Board only makes a recommendation, it doesn't make a decision—it only makes a recommendation to the Minister of Housing and the public doesn't have a right to appeal that to the cabinet, which means there can be even more in-house manipulation by this government.

Look at the procedure that will be followed. There will be an area where pits and quarries will not be permitted to be established, perhaps in a municipality or parts of a municipality. There will be a pit and quarry operator, because there is aggregate there, who will want to develop. He will go to the municipal council and the municipal council will say, "No, we don't want those pits and quarries in that area." So he will appeal directly to the Ontario Municipal Board.

The people in the area who are opposed to it may not even be notified of it, but there will be an announcement in the paper. Conceivably they will have the right to be heard, if the minister doesn't think it is a frivolous application, and after a long and lengthy hearing takes place there will be a recommendation to the Minister of Housing on whether the zoning or the official plan in that area should be changed.

Obviously the Minister of Housing will consult with the Minister of Natural Resources. He will pull out another document like this, which says that aggregate resources must have the highest priority, and the zoning change will then be made.

There is no appeal for the people in that area, or even for the municipality in that area, except directly to the minister. The official plan will be changed to permit it and the minister will issue a permit.

I say that is not just some sort of abstract theoretical thing; that is, in effect, what will most likely take place.

What we have here really is a meaningless bill, because it is not fleshed out. Further, we have a minister, perhaps I should say a ministry because this minister has not been there all that long, who has refused to enforce the present bill—and the aggregate working party says that; and finally we have the likelihood of the OMB losing much of its power to protect the citizens.

It becomes very difficult, under those circumstances, for us to support this bill; but because the one we have now is ineffective and there may be the possibility in committee of putting some flesh on these weak, bare bones, we will be supporting it so that it can go out to committee.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to support this bill and ask the honourable members opposite if we could have it pass second reading before six o'clock so it could be referred to the resources committee and dealt with in the January/February sitting of that committee.

I have a riding that has a lot of quarries and pits, and I have a lot of people who would like to make presentations; municipalities as well as owners of the pits and quarries, and naturally the people who are opposed to the pits and quarries. If it is referred to the committee I would hope that we could have public hearings and allow full participation from all the interested parties; then, hopefully, we could come up with a bill that would be acceptable to the majority of people.

I would simply ask the members if we could pass second reading before six o'clock.

Mr. Hagerty: Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to Bill 127, an Act to revise the Pits and Quarries Control Act, 1971.

I listened to the previous speaker for Welland-Thorold, who pitches gloom and doom on the industry, and then finally says he will support it. I am just a little amazed at the comment. If one would take his attitude, perhaps we would not have seen any construction in the city of Thorold; such as the tunnel constructed some 10 or 15 years ago when we had difficulties at that time in removing sand and gravel from around Fonthill and the town of Pelham where people were a little up tight about the removal of the sand and gravel in such amounts and quantities.

When I first entered the Legislature, I was one of those persons complaining about this issue. I thought municipalities did not want to initiate controls under the Planning Act at that time. I believe it was section 35 of the Planning Act that they could have brought in controls for operation of pits and quarries in the municipalities. Many municipalities did not wish to go in that direction. I think this is where many got themselves boxed into the problem, with residents protesting and objecting to the opening of new quarries and pits in the area.

I endorsed the bill in 1971. I thought it was a step in the right direction. I thought the municipalities did not want to shoulder that responsibility and that some other level of government must take that initiative to provide protection to residents and municipalities as a whole.

Some mention was made about the Niagara Escarpment control order that was applied. It was a great piece of legislation in the sense it did result in the abandonment of a great number of quarry operations along the escarpment. That caused problems in other areas. The operators of the quarries immediately started looking for other sources of material; they bought up a number of small quarries in my area and they are expanding that into quite a business.

I know there is some criticism by councils in my area about one particular quarry, to the effect they are not doing enough. I find after reviewing and looking over the sites in my area that they are going out into the area of rehabilitation to the extent it has led to an additional cost onto the price of stone, which eventually will be passed on to the consumer. As far as I am concerned they are doing an excellent job. In some cases they have gone to a considerable extent in rehabilitation; they have even established ponds which they have been able to stock with fish. It has been very successful. I am referring to the Port Colborne quarries. I suggest members should be looking at this operation.

In Fonthill, after removal of the sand and gravel in that area one of the quarries had been rehabilitated into a golf course and is even used for housing.

I don't think we should be picturing doom and gloom here. We do have quarry and pit operators in business in Ontario; we have to have the aggregate to build industry, bridges, housing and highways.

I live close to one of the best tourist attractions, the best tourist sites in the province. I have given the minister a copy of a brochure about it. It is the Sherston Beaches. The 27-acre quarry there just goes to show what rehabilitation can do. It is one of the major tourist attractions for campers and swimmers, for fishing; in fact for everything. It is right there. The operator owns one on the other side of Ridgeway which is a successful tourist attraction as well, providing camping facilities for many of the tourists coming in from the United States.

I would suggest any quarry operator who wants to abandon a pit or quarry can give it to me because I think I can make it work and be profitable. It has been shown here and in other areas that there is good use for abandoned pits and quarries. It can raise the watertable, although at times it may cause some difficulties when they are drilling. Certain water supplies may be depleted for some period of time and they may lose a well.

Hopefully in this new proposed taxation program which is an increase of about 300 per cent, from two per cent to eight per cent or something like that, there is provision for funds to go back to the municipality. Where there is difficulty with persons living around a quarry or pit operation who have lost their water supply that funding should be allocated to putting in services.

The more I look at this particular bill, the more I realize I have never seen a piece of legislation like this before the House at any time. It discriminates against a certain business practice carried out in the province. The excuse is we are afraid it will give four cents back on every ton to the municipality to build roads, et cetera. I am sure the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) will look at the operations of the large steel mills in Welland which are bringing materials in by heavy trucks using roads in the municipality. They are not taxed additional tax for making use of that road, but the truck operators from the quarry are. If exemption can be provided for a number of industries in this particular area, then I think the minister had better reconsider his position so there is not discriminatory taxation of this industry.

In the long run, it's the municipality that will pay for it, because the industry is going to pass it on to the consumer. It will cause some difficulties. Under the present scheme of the $100,000 set aside for funding for rehabilitation, it's a benefit to the province because of the low interest rates. I suppose those in the industry look at that and they say, "Well, we are only getting six per cent buildup in this fund, it could go up almost 12 per cent." That is what needs looking at. Perhaps then the minister wouldn't have to go back and put an extra tax on the consumer purchasing the stone, aggregate, gravel or whatever it may be.

I suggest to the minister he is discriminating against a certain industry, the non-metallic industry. There is nothing mentioned in this bill to include the other industry, open pit mining for example. Yet it can cause just as much of a nuisance and a problem to the rest of Ontario as a quarry at the present time. There is nothing in there that says open pit mining operators, when they abandon a mine must rehabilitate it. There is nothing in this act, yet I believe should be included in it.

I don't think we can single out one particular area of the mining industry in Ontario to carry the whole shot, particularly the taxation proposed today. It is an injustice, I think, when we look at other areas like open pit mining where tax depletion is allowed when they gradually phase out.

I suggest the minister take a second look at this thing. When we talk about heading for double digit inflation this is certainly going to add to it.

I am not here to defend the quarry industry. I think the bill itself is a good bill. It has brought control and order in a number of municipalities. I don't think municipalities can complain too loudly about the loss of some of their authority, because they had the powers years ago to move in that direction and they didn't. That is why the ministry is faced with some of these problems today. I have to commend the ministry for moving in that direction even back in 1971.

There are some conflicting views, as expressed by previous speakers, and that relates to the white paper on the Planning Act and the powers vested in the minister under this particular section. On the white paper on the Planning Act it said the minister will have the power to request any municipality to incorporate into its official plan any matters specified by the Ministry of Natural Resources; I suppose where the ministry fails to amend its plan the minister may cause the plan to be amended.

I have to agree; I think there has to be some form of appeal here. That appeal should go to the Ontario Municipal Board where people do have a right to be heard and to object to it under sections 2, 3 and 6 of the Pits and Quarries Control Act. I think this should still be part of the bill. It stipulates that the minister shall not issue a licence when the location is in contravention of any official plan or municipal bylaw, and that where a local municipality does not have an official plan or bylaw governing the location of pits and quarries, the minister may not issue a licence if the council objects to the location.

Both of these provisions have been deleted from the new act. I suggest that people should have a right to appeal to some other agency so that their side of the story may be heard. I don't think even the Environmental Assessment Act applies to certain areas of this particular bill. It does give the minister rather broad powers under this new bill. I suggest that they are perhaps just a little bit too much.

There has been some concern about the regulations. I believe there is a resolution from the regional municipality of Waterloo which the regional municipality of Niagara has supported. They want to delay Bill 127 until they can see the regulations. I suppose they are more concerned about what regulations will follow the act. Again I suppose they will give the minister rather broad powers.

I want to say to the members of the House that I think it is discrimination against a certain industry in Ontario. There must be some other measures by which a tax can be added to cover the cost of rehabilitation.

On this matter of rehabilitation, as the minister indicated in his opening remarks he's going to spend quite a bit of money on rehabilitating old pits and quarries in the province. I question that. The question is who owns the property in the first place? Does it all belong to the crown? Is the minister going to rehabilitate these quarries and add value to them? Are they then going to be sold or go back to their original owners to be sold at a gainful profit?

I talked about rehabilitation of some of the quarries in the Niagara Peninsula. The Niagara Peninsula Conservation Authority bought vacant quarry land from Canada Cement LaFarge of Montreal. They spent—I could be wrong on the figures—around $300,000 for this abandoned pit operation which they are going to rehabilitate. The city of St. Catharines has spent around $1 million on buying out an old quarry operation on the top of the escarpment just behind the Shaver Hospital in St. Catharines. They are going to use it for a garbage disposal or waste disposal site.

I suggest that almost all of these abandoned quarries do have some good value. I am talking about dollar value that can be developed. If the minister is spending taxpayers' money to rehabilitate some of these old quarries, I hope he is not going to rehabilitate them with the owner still sitting there waiting for all this major work to be done to beautify it and then turning around, selling it and making a huge profit on it. Again that would be at the expense of the taxpayers who are purchasing and the consumers who are buying the aggregate. I hope the minister may have some comments on this area.

That's about the only thing I can add to the bill. I think it's a good bill. It does give the minister additional power. Once it's referred to the standing committee I am sure these matters can be ironed out and amendments will be coming forward that will make it a workable bill for all parties concerned.

Mr. Wildman: I want to rise in this debate to say that along with my colleague from Welland-Thorold I support the principle of the bill. However, we find some very serious shortcomings in the bill as drafted. At the committee stage we will be introducing extensive amendments to try to respond to some of the questions that are being raised and will be raised at committee stage about the bill by the various groups and individuals involved.

The previous speaker, the member for Fort Erie, talked a lot about discrimination. Mr. Speaker, I know this may be close to your heart. I want to talk about discrimination in this bill and the whole government's approach to regulation of pits and quarries in this province, and I want to speak specifically to section 5 of the bill.

Mr. Eaton: You don't speak to sections during second reading. That's done in committee.

Mr. Wildman: I am going to speak about this section as it embodies the whole principle and the whole approach of this government towards regulation of pits and quarries in this province.

It is interesting that when we look at this bill we find that it follows the old act, the Pits and Quarries Control Act, 1971, in terms of the sections of the province that will be covered by the bill. Then there is another proposal in the bill, of course, that the Lieutenant Governor in Council can designate parts of Ontario in which this act and regulations will apply, over and above the parts of the province that are now designated under the Pits and Quarries Control Act.

When I mention discrimination, you just have to look at the areas of this province which are now designated to discover that much of northern Ontario does not come under this bill as it is proposed because it is now not designated under the Pits and Quarries Control Act. I have had correspondence with the minister about this to find out what he has against northern Ontario. Why is it that the north should be treated differently from any other section of the province? Why is it we should have less control over pit and quarry sites in our part of the province than other sections of the north, there are a few sections of the north that are designated, and most of southern Ontario?

Mr. McKessock: You are right on. Let's change the licence fees.

Mr. Foulds: And give us the same gas prices.

Mr. Wildman: Do you realize that licence fees save you about 40 to 50 bucks a year, where it costs us over $100 more in gasoline prices in a year?

Mr. Kerrio: Gas is cheaper in Sault Ste. Marie than it is in Niagara Falls.

Mr. Foulds: Go ahead, save money; drive to the Sault and fill up your tank.

Mr. Wildman: You can't drive from the Sault to Thunder Bay on one tank of gas. You have got to fill up in Marathon or White River, and the Speaker knows exactly how much it costs up there.

But to get back to the bill, what I am concerned about is the fact that the pits and quarries along Highway 17 are not going to be governed by this bill.

I had some correspondence with the minister about what I see as two different attitudes by the government towards management of pits and quarries in southern as opposed to northern Ontario. In response to my inquiry the minister pointed out that at the present time 287 townships, including the Sudbury region, an area around Sault Ste. Marie and the La Cloche Islands near Manitoulin Island, are designated under the Pits and Quarries Control Act, therefore they will be designated under this bill when it comes into effect.

He pointed out, and I am quoting the minister: "Although the designated area is relatively small, over 80 per cent of aggregate production in the province is covered by the act. The reason for the larger designated area in southern Ontario is because of the problems associated with the high production in the south."

It may be that 80 per cent of the aggregate production in the province is covered by the old act and therefore will come under the purview of this act when it's passed. However, it still escapes me why the other 20 per cent should not be covered.

The minister tried to explain that away by indicating to me that in addition to the designated area in the north, all pits and quarries on crown land operate in accordance with the quarry permit issued under the Mining Act. In other words, the Ministry of Natural Resources controls directly the operation of pits and quarries on crown land. The impression the minister tried to leave apparently is that because these pits and quarries would come under the Mining Act, there was no need to have this bill applied to the whole province in terms of designated areas.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, if the member looked at subsection 2 of that section he would see that the Lieutenant Governor in Council can designate other areas, so that there is provision to deal with the north.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that when I began. I'm not satisfied with that. I don't think it should be left purely to the discretion of the minister—basically that's what it means—to decide whether or not he is going to designate the other areas.

I've been concerned about this for some time. When it was announced by the minister that he was going to bring in changes, I thought finally they're going to include the north and they're going to deal with that. But when we come back to the bill, all it does is deal with the areas that are already designated under the old act and makes a provision, as the minister points out, that other areas may be designated. I emphasize "may be designated." We have no commitment that they will be.

On the point made by the minister in his correspondence with me that these other areas are controlled by the Ministry of Natural Resources under the Mining Act, I have a number of problems with that. In the areas that are not on crown land, in the pits and quarries that are not on crown land but are not in the three small designated areas of northern Ontario, in that whole area of northwestern Ontario there is no control.

There is no control at all if it is on private land in an area that is not designated. As a matter of fact there's a place in my riding—the minister may correct me on this—where I'm pretty certain that the township of Thessalon is not part of the designated area immediately around Sault St. Marie; it's too far out. There is a great deal of aggregate in that area. As far as I know that area is being mined indiscriminately for transportation of a great deal of that aggregate to southern Ontario.

They're taking a whole hill; they're going to wipe out a whole hill—a small mountain. They put it on trucks and then barges at Thessalon for transporting it across the lake to Collingwood. There, it is put back on trucks and brought down here to Metro because apparently these isn't enough aggregate available in this area to meet demands. I suppose because the minister has control here, there isn't as much indiscriminate development of aggregate deposits in southern Ontario as it is possible to carry out in the Thessalon area. So fine, they go and get it from Thessalon.

I want to make clear I'm not opposed to the development of aggregate deposits in the north. Obviously, if we're going to build roads—and we need roads, we need a lot more roads and a lot better roads—then we're going to need aggregate.

Why should we have the aggregate without the control? Those pits are going to be worked out eventually. Right now there is no provision for a pit on private land in an undesignated area to be rehabilitated. Anyone who has travelled across northern Ontario has seen and experienced not only the great scenery and beauty but also, every few miles along the highway, an abandoned pit.

It appears, despite what the minister says about control under the Mining Act, that the main culprit is the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. MTC seems to have a licence to develop whatever pits it wishes, wherever it wishes, whenever it needs aggregate for repairs to highways or for rebuilding highways.

Mr. Foulds: Including in provincial parks.

Mr. Wildman: That's right; there are even some in provincial parks.

I want to conclude by saying that although I support the principle of the bill, we should have more accurate and determined methods of control over the development of pits and quarries and for their rehabilitation. My position is that it should apply right across the province. The north should not be singled out.

I want to make one other point. The minister made an argument in which he stated: "No new designations have been made in the last three years because of government constraints on personnel and funding. Because of the relatively large increase in staff and funding required to cover the whole province, the original plan was that the new act would apply only to the parts of Ontario that are designated under the Pits and Quarries Control Act. We have a number of requests to designate the whole province, with the result that the matter of further designations is under review."

Obviously it was under review, but it wasn't decided that it should be included in this bill. I wonder if the minister could indicate how much more money it would cost in terms of funding and personnel in order to designate the whole province—or at least to designate the populated areas. I am not asking him necessarily, although the Speaker may disagree with me, to designate the Hudson Bay area, but surely he can designate the areas where we have highways, populations, municipalities and where we have private land. That's the important thing—the areas where we have private lands that are not located in designated areas. Maybe the Mining Act will cover crown land, although I have some serious doubts about MTC and the way it operates on crown land. But what about the private lands in undesignated areas? This bill should apply to the whole thing.

When it goes to committee, I assure the minister we will be proposing an amendment so we no longer have the discrimination this bill proposes between southern and northern Ontario.

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill because it particularly concerns my riding. I guess 90 per cent of the resource in five or six counties in southwestern Ontario is located within the boundaries of my riding of Middlesex.

I also want to put on the record some comments on behalf of my colleague the member for Durham-York (Mr. W. Newman), who wanted to speak on this bill but who had to attend a meeting. He indicated he wants to see this bill go to the resources development committee. It is a matter of importance to him as well, since there are some 50 pits in his riding he is interested in and concerned about. He is prepared to have a lot to say on the bill when it gets to committee. I assure the minister that I will have a lot more input at that time also. I just wanted to speak briefly to the bill now, because I know there are others who want to speak on it and the time is somewhat restricted.

This bill concerns a matter with more than one side to it. There are people in my riding who would not allow another pit to be developed if they had their way, yet it is a resource of the utmost importance to the progress and needs of our area. There are others who would go ahead and do just about anything they pleased on the operating of a pit and not have any controls put on them whatsoever.

Neither position is acceptable. I think we must look for a position that is suitable to see the needs of the area supplied, with controls acceptable to the communities in which we live.

I've seen a situation I particularly don't like; it's hard to take a shot at one's own ministry, but I'm going to have to do it. We have situations where time has been spent in public hearings meeting the requirements of the previous act, to see a pit licensed and all the necessary—I think they are necessary—steps taken in getting that licence and in seeing that all the requirements of operating that pit are met. Then, within a week, someone comes along and applies for a wayside-pit permit and it is issued very easily and very quickly; they don't have to meet the same requirements. They haven't had the cost of developing the pit and they're in competition with the people who have already gone through all the steps of developing a pit.

I say to the minister that there is going to have to be a solution worked out between his ministry and the Ministry of Transportation and Communications to eliminate this conflict. I know it means cheaper supplies of aggregate to our Ministry of Transportation and Communications when a highway is being built, but it is utterly ridiculous to put some operators through what they have had to go through to get their licence for a pit and operate a pit and then see someone else come in a mile down the road and not have to meet those requirements.

I say to the minister, that goes a little further. It goes not only to the operations between the two ministries, it goes to the controls the townships have been able to have over some of these operations.

The member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) talks about all the pits around the country that haven't been taken care of. A lot of those pits are there because of our municipalities. They were municipality-operated pits and at that time they didn't take any responsibility. Now the very same municipalities are turning around and holding up for ransom legitimate pit operators who are putting up their berms and meeting all the requirements and carrying out their work properly and who have already rehabilitated some pits and done a good job, an excellent job, at it. The municipalities are taking money out of the operators they shouldn't be taking out of them, for road work and so on which has already been committed, through licensing fees and other methods.

This legislation is going to get some working over in committee. The resources development committee has been one to do that, as some honourable members who have been on it have seen in the last little while. My friend the member for Durham-York, who's on that committee, and the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson), who will be on it in this next session, are prepared to work on those kinds of items to see this bill come around.

We support this bill in principle on second reading to see it come to committee. But I assure the minister that a lot of us are going to have a lot of input into this bill when it gets to committee.

Mr. McKessock: Bill 127, An Act to revise the Pits and Quarries Control Act, is welcomed by my riding, realizing that changes were needed. This bill is of much concern and significance to Grey county because of the fact two thirds of the aggregate reserves of southwestern Ontario are located in Grey county.

The mineral aggregate study which was conducted by the Ministry of Natural Resources determined that southwestern Ontario had about six billion tons of high-grade, quality sand and gravel and that four billion tons of this are located in Grey county. However, we are concerned about the impact the removal of this natural resource will have on the individual municipalities and the county as a whole. We do not want to suffer environmentally or economically because of this natural asset. Removing such a large amount of aggregate will have a very serious effect on our road system, both in trying to maintain these roads to accommodate large trucks and in inconvenience due to extra traffic in the years of gravel extraction. Our roads and bridges are not built for such a venture and building and rebuilding roads would be a continuous task.

Most natural assets such as large waterways, which have encouraged cities and industries, tend to continue to benefit the area as time goes on. It's hard to see anything but hardship from this natural resource; depleted gravel pits, poorer roads, business tax gone, thousands of acres of topsoil gone. What then will this land be good for? What will the townships do with all this residual land?

Residual land is what Art Fields, chairman of the Grey county aggregate committee, told me we would have. I was not sure what residual meant so I looked it up in the dictionary. It says: "Residual: A disability remaining after a disease or operation." Disabled land is what we'll have. It would never be reclaimed for farming.

For these reasons, we feel it is very important that to compensate for these hardships and depleted resources a licence fee of 10.5 cents per ton be charged. The minister will notice this is an increase in what he has suggested, but we feel it is very important that this licence fee be increased, eight cents per ton to go to the local municipality from whence it came; one cent per ton to the counties or regional municipalities; a half-cent per ton to an abandoned pit or quarry fund and one cent per ton to the province.

I realize these fees are going to be set by regulation, but I want the minister to take note of the increase Grey county has suggested for the municipality. This is an increase of four cents over what the government suggested back in June when they put out information regarding licence fees.

Some have requested that the regulations be put before us at the committee stage and I would ask the minister if he is going to do this.

We feel certain other parts of the act are wrong. For example, only some areas of southern Ontario are covered by the act. We feel that all of southern Ontario should be covered. Under section 7, we feel the figure of 20,000 tons of aggregate is not high enough. We feel 35,000 tons of extraction should be allowed under a B licence. Having to jump to an A classification puts considerable hardship on a small operator with the extra cost in acquiring an A licence.

Municipalities should be contacted and given a chance to be heard under the annual review and not just once in five years as has been suggested in the bill. Some consultative mechanism should be set up so the minister has to consult with the local municipalities before he overrides a local bylaw to issue a permit, as he could do under section 27. If an agreement hasn't been reached with a municipality after this consultation, the municipality should have the right to take the issue to the OMB. Too many times in this act the minister has power to override municipal restricted-area bylaws.

The minister should not be allowed to alter permits, which this bill allows, without consulting with local municipalities.

When it comes to crown land, the licence fee should not go directly to the Treasurer of Ontario but should be disbursed in the same manner as if it were non-crown land. After all, the local impact will still be there, the same municipal roads and bridges are going to be used.

It is my understanding that nothing in this act allows the minister to freeze aggregate areas. I want the minister to assure me that this is correct.

[5:15]

I understand this bill is going to committee for clause-by-clause examination and that municipalities and interested groups will be allowed in at that time to make their views known; certainly Grey county representatives will be there.

This concludes my remarks on second reading and I look forward to the bill going to committee.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether I will have an opportunity to make any submissions or participate in the hearings on this bill when it is in committee. Undoubtedly, if time permits I will because of its importance.

We in this caucus had difficulty in deciding whether to support the bill or not and the effective words which led us to support the bill are contained in the purpose clause which states the purposes of this act are, amongst other things, to provide for the management of the aggregate and crown aggregate resources of Ontario.

It goes on to other matters, but the key words and the matter which is of immense concern to us is that finally the government has assumed the responsibility for the management of these public assets. I will be interested, when the minister winds up this debate on second reading, if he will clearly indicate the extent, degree and ways in which he intends to carry out the mandate he is asking from this assembly and which we gladly give to him to manage these public assets in a way that will best serve the purposes of the people of the province. Particularly when they are in a very real sense fungible, they are not going to be there at some point after they have been used, even though they can be qualified and a price ascribed to them.

In that sense the depletion of provincial resources today is of immense importance to our party because we are interested in the conservation aspect as well as the exploitation aspect of the resources of the province.

There are two or three matters which specifically concern me. One is I hope the minister will allay the concerns of the assembly when he says the Lieutenant Governor in Council may designate parts of Ontario in which this act and the regulations apply and put us all to rest on that question. The intention should be to make this act apply to the whole of Ontario, right from its inception and from the assumption by him of the management of these resources.

For him to accept the responsibility for management and then to wait a period before he assumes the jurisdiction to manage those assets across the province seems to us inadvisable.

I don't have very much of value to say, but I may just wait for the minister to take his seat and perhaps listen to the debate. Maybe we could recess for a few minutes and have a cup of coffee or something like that. I have great respect for the minister but I will just wait until he has finished his discussions around the chamber.

I won't repeat myself, Mr. Speaker, because I know the minister always reads what I have to say in Hansard.

I did want to say I would like an explanation on why the definition of aggregate is different to the definition of crown aggregate. For example, I find that diatomaceous earth is included in crown aggregate but must necessarily be included in other aggregate only by way of prescription, as well as marl, for example. Marl is included in crown aggregate but is not, by name, specified in the definition of aggregate.

As a layman in the assembly, expecting people in the province as laymen to read this statute and understand it, it seems to me one could have said aggregate was the same whether it was crown aggregate or not crown aggregate. Perhaps the minister can in some way explain that to me. If the minister is not aware of them, I do have the definitions here of diatomaceous earth and of marl. I could put them on the record but I am quite certain the minister is familiar with those terms, as I know he is with berm and hectorage as well as the other technical terms which occur throughout the bill.

One of the other matters of very real concern to me is the whole process by which the public is involved in participating in the decisions which are made. Because I believe it to be part of the bill, I particularly refer the minister to the provisions of section 12, which again, together with section 21 applies when the Ontario Municipal Board is holding a hearing under section 22 of the bill. For example, I am extremely concerned when it is the decision of the minister as to who may be given standing before the Ontario Municipal Board. This whole question of standing in process before any of the bodies which the government establishes, let alone the question of standing before the court, is really becoming a mess.

I notice the introduction of what to me are significantly new and different and inconclusive words. For example, section 12(7): "Upon receipt of a notice"—that is, a notice from a member of the public that a hearing is required before the board. "Upon receipt of a notice under subsection 6 that in the opinion of the minister discloses an interest in the matter that is sufficiently substantial to warrant a hearing and is not frivolous or vexatious, he shall refer the application and the objections to the board for a hearing."

Surely it should be possible for the board to make that decision. Surely the notice which the minister is to receive could be transmitted to the board and the board could make the decision as to whether or not it disclosed an interest in the matter that is "sufficiently substantial to warrant a hearing and is not frivolous or vexatious." It is customary to allow the body which conducts the hearing to make the determination about whether or not the board should hold a hearing with respect to it. In this instance I think it is just too restrictive in as important a consideration as this for the minister to be able to make that decision.

In section 22 when the board decides, as I understand it the board can specify who shall be parties to the proceedings. Again that raises the question about what the criteria will be which will determine whether a member of the public has standing to appear before the Ontario Municipal Board. It is very much the kind of basic and fundamental question which was raised in the bill debated in this assembly last week by the leader of the official opposition, the member for Hamilton West (Mr. S. Smith).

I trust that during the course of the committee hearings on this bill the whole procedure of public involvement and public participation and the right to appear before the Municipal Board will be thoroughly canvassed so that we have the reality of public participation and not just the form of it; so that we have the substance of it and not just a bill that sets out an elaborate procedure, about which, by the time one has completed it, one has the sense that one has chased a shadow rather than the substance of the kind of participation which should take place.

There are few if any extant pits and quarries in Riverdale, but I think the issue of the way this government is finally going to deal with the pits and quarries operations across the province and the way in which we dispose of this public asset, defined of course in technical terms in the bill, is of such immense importance that regardless of the areas we represent, we are concerned about the process of the bill.

It was interesting to me that a member of the government benches, the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton), would speak critically about the bill. We all recognize there are very real conflicting interests involved in the settlement of the questions as to the extent and time and way in which these resources will be exploited.

It is the very need to resolve and to compromise those conflicting interests which may be involved on any application for a licence or for a permit that requires these public hearings to make certain the public participation role is guaranteed in a real and substantive way in the procedures finally adopted.

Mr. McGuigan: My purpose in rising in this debate is because I live on a gravel ridge on highway 3, between Blenheim and Ridgetown. It is actually the former shoreline of the lake and has two great purposes; growing fruit and being used as an aggregate. I am sorry to report the second is really becoming the dominant force. As one drives along highway 3 today it's pretty much a matter of pits.

I remember as a child when many of those pits were established, some of them going back to the turn of the century. I don't go back that far, but I remember the pits from about 1930s. They were used for indiscriminate uses; for dumping, for storing old abandoned equipment and were a general eyesore. When the act came in in 1971 to provide for some rehabilitation, it was quite an improvement. Since that time the active pits are being managed in a much better way.

I just point out I am very much in favour of the purpose of this bill. It provides for the management of the aggregates. When the aggregate is taken from our pit to neighbouring towns or villages and put into parking lots or concrete or whatever masonry structures it is put into, it has a limited life. At some time or other it is dug up again and taken away. Most of it comes back onto our clay lands in landfill sites. Perhaps it is there for good engineering reasons, but certainly not reasons that the local people are willing to accept. It seems to me that a good deal of that rubble, without garbage or organic matter in it, should come back into filling up these gravel pits.

To some extent that is beginning to happen, no thanks to government regulations but mainly because of the opportunities some of the owners see in rehabilitating this land. Quite recently, in putting in a connecting link in the town of Blenheim—and it is sort of ironic that the town of Blenheim sits on gravel—the engineering specs called for the excavation of the subsoil, which was gravel. They have taken it out now and are filling up one of the gravel pits with that subsoil. In the meantime they're digging another gravel pit to replace the soil in the town of Blenheim, which is already gravel.

We need better management of these resources. If this act brings about better management, it will be appreciated by the people of my riding and especially by the people in the two townships of Harwich and Raleigh, where the gravel ridge is covered.

I would just like to say a word or two about the rehabilitation. Many of the pits in my area go back to the turn of the century, and the people who benefited from the sale of that gravel have gone to their reward; the land has passed to their heirs and is of doubtful value to them. I rather balk at the suggestion that all of the costs of these rehabilitations should go to the present owners. When the land was originally sold, it was not sold at a price that would include the cost of rehabilitation.

Another point about rehabilitation is that the cost of rehabilitating various pits or quarries can be quite different. It seems to me it's very cheap and very easy to do it in the sand and gravel pits in my riding, because it simply means a matter of sloping the sides, planting a bit of grass and leaving it in a level condition. I would hate to see a situation where one type of pit or quarry is cross-subsidizing another type of pit or quarry. I would suggest that matter be looked at in committee.

Also, on the matter of securing the permission of present owners as to whether or not it should be rehabilitated, I'm not suggesting that the ministry would want to run roughshod over the present owner, but it would seem to me that in the event that permission was not granted there should be some method of appeal, possibly to the Ontario Municipal Board, or a hearing in which it could be decided that rehabilitation should go on in spite of the fact that the owner might not be in the health or state of mind to grant permission to do the rehabilitating.

The hour is getting late, Mr. Speaker, and I think most other points have been covered, so it's with a great deal of pleasure that I give my support to the principle of this bill. I look forward to making further comments in committee.

Mr. Warner: I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate. For me the issue of abandoned pits and quarries goes back to July 17, 1978, when, unfortunately, a young lad who I had known for some time—a friend of the family—drowned in an abandoned pit located near Military Trail and Morningside Avenue in Scarborough. From that day until now I have spent a great deal of time doing research and contacting people in various fields throughout the province regarding the safety aspect of abandoned pits and quarries.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I've been quite encouraged by comments from people in my own municipality, from my own municipal council and from members of this assembly. I am not going to take the time to go through and read the letters I received back from members of each of the three parties, but I can tell you that I certainly appreciate the interest that members have taken in this very serious issue.

It is fair to say there has been a great deal of confusion over the years about who is responsible and who should be responsible for the safety aspect of an abandoned pit or quarry. I realize—and I don't mean to say it in a highly critical way—the government has had some difficulty in determining where the responsibility should lie.

In August 1978, I got a letter from the member for Muskoka (Mr. F. S. Miller), who was then Minister of Natural Resources, which mentioned that the responsibility really rests with the Ministry of Labour and that he had forwarded my inquiry to the director of the mining, health and safety branch of the Ministry of Labour.

Then the portfolios were changed and the member for Leeds (Mr. Auld) was appointed the Minister of Natural Resources. I wrote to him, and I got a letter back on November 24, 1978. He told me there would be a new act, "but the new act will not include any legislation pertaining to safety problems, as this responsibility falls within the purview of the Ministry of Labour."

I wrote to the Minister of Labour, and on December 7, 1978, I got a letter back from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie). It is a lengthy letter, but in part it reads: "With the passing of Bill 70, all provisions of the Mining Act will be administered by the Ministry of Natural Resources, except those relating to health and safety while the mine is in operation. Thus, once that takes place, perhaps you might wish to approach Natural Resources again about changes to that act."

He sent me back to Natural Resources, so I then drafted a bill, a private member's bill, and introduced it in the House. I was quite pleased that in the May 1979 edition Gravel Extract, the magazine put out by the Foundation for Aggregate Studies, they mentioned the bill I had put forward and they supported it. They also ran articles on the same subject in the issues of February 1979 and October 1978. In October 1978 they said something I thought was quite significant:

"The rehabilitation of pits and quarries should involve more than building a berm or planting a few scraggly trees to screen off the view of the mess inside. It should at least restore to a good condition, if not make over an improved form. It is important to think of rehabilitation not as an activity separate from mining, but as a part of the total process. This means that the planning process must encompass efficient operation of the pit right through to final rehabilitation.

"Two criteria must be met in good rehabilitation: (1) restoration of a landscape that is in character with the area; (2) creation of a condition that relates to and supports future land uses beneficial to the community."

Encouraged by that, I started to make contact with every municipality around Ontario and I discovered from the correspondence that then took place that I was on the right track. I had mailed to me an article from the Ottawa Journal, dated April 25, 1979, regarding the "death quarry" on Montreal Road. The city of Ottawa, faced with the serious problem of an abandoned pit where there had been a drowning, attempted to pass legislation which would render that area safe. They lost in the courts. The message was that they couldn't do it; it required provincial legislation.

Knowing I was on the right track, I maintained my correspondence with the municipalities. I'm pleased to report there are approximately 150 municipalities in the province that have supported my private member's bill.

Before the chair gets all excited about me talking about a private member's bill, knowing that this bill was coming forward I took my private member's bill and had it drafted into an amendment. The amendment fits into section 33 of the government bill, perfectly in keeping with the principle of that section. It will allow for the safe restoration of abandoned pits and quarries.

The correspondence from the municipalities was quite rewarding. I heard in positive support from the regional municipalities of Durham, Niagara, Waterloo and Peel; from the counties of Huron, Kent and Perth; from the municipalities of Port Stanley, Machin, Nottawasaga, Galway and Cavendish; from the villages of Zurich, Paisley, Lakefield, Elora and Chesterville; from the corporation of Ridgeway, the district of Sioux Narrows, and the improvement district of Opasatika; from the cities of Guelph, Thunder Bay, Mississauga, Barrie, Scarborough, Kingston, St. Catharines, Windsor, Nepean, Toronto, Kitchener, Orillia, Burlington, Brantford, East York, Oshawa, Thorold, Stratford, Metro Toronto, and North York; from the towns of Renfrew, Perth, Onaping Falls, Fort Erie, Kingsville, Prescott, Goderich, Milton, Ancaster, Dresden, Whitby, Deseronto, St. Mary's, Ajax, Pelham, Fort Frances, Tecumseh, Rayside-Balfour, Thessalon, Paris, Blind River, Newmarket, Blenheim, Little Current, Wallaceburg, Napanee, Valley East, Bradford, Exeter, Gananoque, Aurora, Powassan, Parry Sound, Vankleek Hill, Ingersoll, Oakville, Durham, Grimsby, Petrolia, Markham, Elliot Lake, Whitchurch-Stouffville, Kirkland Lake, Geraldton, Richmond Hill, Newcastle, and Amherstburg; and from the townships of Anderdon, Plympton, Chatham, Red Lake, North Dumfries, Colchester North, King, West Carleton, Adjala, Hinchinbrooke, Papi-neau, Hay, Anson, Hindon and Minden, Romney, Ops, Coleman, Pittsburgh, Manitowadage, St. Joseph, Georgian Bay, Michipicoten, Cardiff, Admaston, South Dumfries, Malden, Schreiber, Sebastopol, Thurlow, Barclay, Harwich, Ennismore, Tiny, Wellesley, Baldwin, Raglan, Brock, Lavant, Dalhousie and North Sherbrooke, Owens, Williamson and Idington, Norwich, Faraday, Gosfield North, Maidstone, Eilber and Devitt, Georgina, Smith, Johnson, Verulam, Stanhope, and Flamborough.

Not only did those municipalities and towns, villages and cities send me their support but many of them elaborated. Many pointed out the serious problems they have had over time with the abandoned pits and quarries and they're concerned that there be some legislation around the safety aspects.

For example, the township of Schreiber—I'm sure the real Speaker, not the deputy, would enjoy the comments—whole-heartedly supports the minister's Bill 185 and any amendments to the Pits and Quarries Control Act that would allow the township of Schreiber to take action necessary to eliminate a long-standing hazard in Schreiber. Like Scarborough, Schreiber lost a life in an abandoned pit some years ago and is vitally concerned in preventing a similar incident.

Unfortunately, we're not able to force the owner and operator of the pit to rectify the situation as contemplated in the bill. Council has since purchased the abandoned pit with the long-term view of providing parking for an arena. Council, however, wishes to commend the minister for his initiative and expresses its support of the bill.

The town of Blenheim mentioned they've had similar tragedies as referred to in the correspondence "with gravel pits adjacent to us in Harwich township." The town of Little Current mentions they do not have any pits or quarries, but can certainly understand the problems and hazards they can create.

Fort Erie says they hope the bill, if passed, will eliminate the dangers that sometimes remain with abandoned pits and quarries.

Durham, Ontario, mentions that in addition to the support letter they sent back they will be notifying their local member of Parliament, the Minister of Natural Resources and the Premier regarding the town of Durham's concern over the condition in which some excavations have been left around the province. It is their council's feeling these should be rectified immediately.

Perth, which is close to home for the Deputy Speaker, says at a meeting of the Lanark county roads committee held on March 13, 1979, this matter was thoroughly discussed by the committee. "Although the members of the committee support the intention of the bill, it unfortunately will not solve the problem in this area due to the fact that the townships within the county of Lanark are not designated townships under the Pits and Quarries Control Act."

While the minister may very well agree with the amendment I am putting forward, one of the problems raised by Perth is the problem to which my colleague from Algoma referred. They mention here that although Perth supports the bill which I put forward, the problem in their area is the fact that the townships within the county of Lanark are not designated townships under the Pits and Quarries Control Act. It would make sense then that we have to deal with the entire province.

They go on to say, "Some municipalities have passed bylaws under the Municipal Act in order to reduce the type of hazard you have described. However, an amendment of the Pits and Quarries Control Act would not cover any of these townships in our county. Perhaps you could consider this aspect when proposing your bill, since it is my understanding that the new mineral aggregates act to be presented to the Legislature also only covers certain municipalities within the province of Ontario."

The town of Thessalon mentions: "There are a number of large pits in its area and within a few years one or two of them close to Thessalon will likely be abandoned when they could be a serious hazard if not made safe before abandonment. At times they constitute a danger to children even when dry and in use."

Gateway to the Kawarthas, Lindsay: "At a meeting members considered the problem which exists in many parts of the province and passed a resolution to support your efforts in this matter. I have taken the liberty of sending this on to our own member to see if additional support can be provided to you."

From Anson, Hindon and Minden: "Council members are genuinely concerned about the dangerous situation abandoned pits create and trust suitable measures will be introduced to protect the public from such hazards."

From the town of Napanee: "It was felt abandoned quarries do cause a very serious hazard and your orders should be required to make these as safe as possible."

The town of Whitchurch-Stouffville not only supports the bill but says: "There should be more control over the construction of berms between pits and abutting owners. This municipality wants assurance that four cents a ton will be paid to municipalities on gravel mined. Processing plants should be licensed and regulated. Site plans should be circulated for wayside pits before licences are issued."

That is just a sampling, Mr. Speaker. There is widespread concern across this province about the safety aspect of abandoned pits and quarries. Quite frankly, I was very disappointed when the bill came forward that it did not provide all of the measures needed. The bill does provide some measure of safety with respect to the new licence procedures but not for the abandoned pits and quarries. It's deficient.

It seems to me if we are going to pass a comprehensive bill dealing with pits and quarries in this province, we owe it to the people to make as sure as possible we will have safe conditions. I don't ever want to experience another drowning in my own area because an abandoned pit was not rehabilitated in some way, was not made safe.

The minister well knows—and I'm sure he will speak positively about it—a variety of things can be done to an abandoned pit. It can be drained and made into useful agricultural land. On the opposite side, I have a lengthy and detailed proposal from the Ontario Water Ski Association which claims they can make excellent use of an abandoned pit which contains water for safety instruction and teaching water skiing.

What I'm saying very clearly to the minister is that regardless of the use to which the abandoned pit or quarry is put, the very first consideration is an obligation to make that area as safe as is reasonably possible. That concern is reflected throughout this entire province, as shown by the sample letters I read.

I look forward to this bill going to committee because it is my intention, to bring forward at the appropriate moment an amendment to section 33 which will accomplish the very thing I've been talking about.

I indicated to the minister back in 1978, at the very beginning of this issue, that I thought this is the kind of thing we can do together, as a Legislature. The last thing in the world I want is to see it become some kind of political issue. I don't think it has to. But I also indicate to the minister I will not be moved from my position. If the minister cannot simply accept the amendment I am putting forward, I will have to move it in committee and I will have to ask for a vote.

I hope it doesn't come to that because I think one thing we all have in common in this place is an abiding concern about the safety of the citizens of this province. That's what I've attempted to address.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks I would like to make in winding up for my party the debate on this bill. I rise with some reluctance because we have serious reservations about the bill, and while we will not oppose it on second reading, if the bill is not substantially amended in the committee hearings that have been mentioned time and time again this afternoon we reserve the right, and serve notice now, that we will be voting against the bill on third reading because it is seriously flawed.

However, at the present time, two elements and two principles embodied in the bill are supportable and are the reasons why we will not vote against the bill at this stage.

The bill is a rare one for this Conservative government. It provides for two positive steps. First, unlike the Mining Act, the bill actually envisages, as my colleague from Riverdale indicated, the management of a resource. Would that we had that principle embodied in the early history of this province, either in the Mining Act or the Crown Timber Act, or both. For that small mercy, that small principle, we in this caucus, to whom the management of conservation of our resources, and the wide use of them for the development of this province are essential, are thankful and support the bill.

Second, the bill does provide for a rehabilitation fund so that pits and quarries need not remain the blight on the province they have in the past. It is on those two critical points that we are in agreement with the government.

However, we have serious reservations. One, the environmental provisions of the bill are woefully inadequate. Two, the appeal mechanism is lopsided; it favours only those who are seeking a licence. Three, municipalities are given very little protection. The minister's authority to override the municipality zoning bylaws is enormous; we feel that either the municipalities must have the right to appeal to the Ontario Municipal Board to overturn the granting of a licence when this happens, or the municipalities must be given the power to deny the licence, which the minister can then appeal to the OMB. There must be that right of appeal.

It is a disappointment—in fact I'm insulted by the map that was included in the Mineral Aggregate Resource Management booklet, a map of southern Ontario barely including Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury. It doesn't even include the real north. This bill should include the whole province; those areas that the minister wants exempted should be exempted specifically and he should have to come in with a new bill every time he does that.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: The bill's the pits.

Mr. Foulds: The bill's the pits, right. We find it an insult to the people in northern Ontario. There is far too much ministerial discretion.

There is a point, if I may say so. The record of the mines branch of this ministry in the proper development of the resources in this province has been woefully inadequate. We do not see any hope if that branch has the responsibility for this act—or the lack of this act—in northern Ontario.

Interestingly enough, we also have embodied in this bill the principle of taxation by regulation that we, in this party, have consistently opposed. That is the assessing of the fees for the licences is set by regulation. That is taxation, as OHIP fees are taxation, by regulation, to which we object because every time the government is given power to tax by regulation they are being given power which they should not have, that they should have to come back to this Legislature for.

Those are the very serious reservations that I have about this bill. There are many others that I won't go into in detail but, as I said, it is important that there be substantial revision of this bill during the committee stage or, frankly, we will clearly vote against it and call for division on third reading.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will be brief and, hopefully, you will find that the clock is a little fast, Mr. Speaker. I want to make a couple of comments.

It is true that we are anxious that the bill go to the standing committee. I anticipate there will be a good deal of discussion on the various detailed points of the bill; this is apparent from the debate this afternoon and it is apparent from the representations that have been made to the ministry since the bill received first reading.

I would like to touch on some of the points. First of all, naturally I'm pleased to see that both parties are supporting the bill, although the New Democratic Party has some reservations. However, generally speaking, I think it has been recognized that the present act requires substantial revision; that is what we are proposing to do.

Our intention is to improve the whole process of protecting the resource, planning the operation and, finally, returning the land to a form compatible with its original condition.

A number of points raised by honourable members are matters of detail and will be dealt with in the clause-by-clause discussion, but the Ministry of the Environment will continue to review and comment on site plans for pits and quarries and continue to enforce the Environmental Protection Act and the Ontario Water Resources Act with regard to pits and quarries. There was some misunderstanding there.

Pits and quarries must comply with restricted-area bylaws under the proposed legislation, except for existing licensed pits and quarries and established pits and quarries in newly designated areas.

We conducted research through the University of Waterloo which indicates the amount of money provided under this act for rehabilitation of abandoned pits and quarries would cope with the problem in about 10 years, which is a reasonable time frame as the people who will be paying for it are not the people who caused the problem.

One other minor point: notice is published, according to the act, in a newspaper in an area where the pit or quarry is proposed and anyone can object and appear before the OMB.

The member for Algoma asked about the approximate number of people and the additional money required to cover the whole province. I am informed our current estimate is about 21 people and about $850,000, not quite double the budget and the staff we currently have.

The member for Riverdale asked me to describe how we propose to manage the resource. I am afraid that would be impossible.

We propose to manage the resource using the various sections of the bill, many of which are interrelated and I hope when the committee meets we will have an opportunity to make a presentation indicating the mechanics involved in the bill before we start dealing with it clause-by-clause.

The reason for the two different definitions, the definition of aggregates and of crown aggregates, is because crown aggregates will include all those substances now dealt with under the Mining Act, which the member for Algoma referred to and subsequently will all be dealt with by this act. We will no longer be dealing with pits and quarries under the Mining Act in northern Ontario and under the Pits and Quarries Control Act in southern Ontario.

Finally, to the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, I can only repeat what I wrote him in a letter. I appreciate and thank him for his concern. This bill is an act to control and regulate the operation of pits and quarries and to provide for their rehabilitation. It has not been designed to deal with safety matters. As he is aware, safety matters in an operating pit or quarry is currently a matter for the labour safety branch of the Ministry of Labour. It may be that it is an appropriate matter to be brought before the committee and I have asked my staff to look into the situation and maybe we will have further remarks when we get to the relevant section in the bill.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I close.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for standing resources development committee.

The House recessed at 6:05 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

MULTICULTURAL POLICY

374. Mr. Duksza: Will the Ministry of Housing outline in detail what initiatives, if any, it has undertaken since May 1977 to reflect the multicultural policy enunciated by the Premier at that time? In its reply, will the ministry outline specific policies, programs, procedures and appointments undertaken to recognize that Ontario is a multicultural society? What, if any, other initiatives are to be expected in this fiscal year? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Bennett: In order to deal with the public, either by telephone or by letter, the ministry has on file in its personnel branch a list of employees who are fluent in 55 languages other than French and English.

New programs such as the white paper on the Planning Act are advertised in ethnic language newspapers as well as in English and French weekly newspapers.

Regular seminars on subjects dealing with multiculturalism are held for Ontario Housing Corporation staff members to help them better understand the particular needs of the various ethnic groups.

OHC provides rooms in several of its developments to enable tenants to attend English classes for new Canadians given by the various boards of education.

The ministry also has a representative on the interministerial committee dealing with Asian refugees and last year it had a representative attend, as an observer, the provincial government's interministerial committee on multiculturalism.

375. Mr. Duksza: Will the Ministry of Community and Social Services outline in detail what initiatives, if any, it has undertaken since May 1977 to reflect the multicultural policy enunciated by the Premier at that time? In its reply, will the ministry outline specific policies, programs, procedures and appointments undertaken to recognize that Ontario is a multicultural society? What, if any, other initiatives are to be expected in this fiscal year? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Norton: Additional time will be required to prepare a response to this answer. A final answer should be available about mid-March 1980.

376. Mr. Duksza: Will the Ministry of Culture and Recreation outline in detail what initiatives, if any, it has undertaken since May 1977 to reflect the multicultural policy enunciated by the Premier at that time? In its reply, will the ministry outline specific policies, programs, procedures and appointments undertaken to recognize that Ontario is a multicultural society? What, if any, other initiatives are to be expected in this fiscal year? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Because of the volume of information requested, we require additional time for the preparation of the answer. The final answer will be ready about mid-March.

377. Mr. Duksza: Will the Ministry of Labour outline in detail what initiatives, if any, it has undertaken since May 1977 to reflect the multicultural policy enunciated by the Premier at that time? In its reply, will the ministry outline specific policies, programs, procedures and appointments undertaken to recognize that Ontario is a multicultural society? What, if any, other initiatives are to be expected in this fiscal year? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Additional time will be required to prepare a response to this answer. A final answer should be available about mid-March 1980.

378. Mr. Duksza: Will the Ministry of Industry and Tourism outline in detail what initiatives, if any, it has undertaken since May 1977 to reflect the multicultural policy enunciated by the Premier at that time? In its reply, will the ministry outline specific policies, programs, procedures and appointments undertaken to recognize that Ontario is a multicultural society? What, if any, other initiatives are to be expected in this fiscal year? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Ministry of Industry and Tourism acts as the co-ordinator and administrator of the Ontario 20 government information program, working with individual ministries to develop information for ethnic newspaper, radio and television advertising.

The Ontario 20 advertising program, now in its sixth year, consists of basic information messages that present details of the Ontario government's range of programs and services available to all citizens of Ontario. The advertisements are designed to communicate in the reader's/listener's own language.

The current program for 1979/80 consists of a total of: 122 newspapers serving 32 ethnic groups in Ontario; TV commercials produced in 10 languages—Italian, Portuguese, Greek, Spanish, Chinese, Yugoslav, German, Indian (English plus 14 dialects), Macedonian, Ukrainian. These are shown on ethnic TV programs in Toronto, Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury, Windsor, Hamilton, Thunder Bay and throughout the Global network; radio commercials translated into 35 languages on ethnic programs broadcast over 27 radio stations in 25 Ontario cities.

The ethnic broadcast messages describe specific government programs and invite people to write, in their own language, to Ontario 20, Queen's Park, for additional information and assistance with specific problems. The citizens' inquiry branch of the Ministry of Culture and Recreation services all inquiries to Ontario 20.

379. Mr. Duksza: Will the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations outline in detail what initiatives, if any, it has undertaken since May 1977 to reflect the multicultural policy enunciated by the Premier at that time? In its reply, will the ministry outline specific policies, programs, procedures and appointments undertaken to recognize that Ontario is a multicultural society? What, if any, other initiatives are to be expected in this fiscal year? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is the stated objective of the consumer outreach program that initiatives will be for those consumers who are disadvantaged in knowing their rights by either language, geography, income, or handicap. Therefore, multicultural groups are a priority for service.

It is the policy of the registrar general and the residential tenancies program to provide telephone and over-the-counter service in a variety of languages, because these are two of the most public ministry programs.

The ministry in the present fiscal year has taken special effort to initiate discussions with the Ministry of Culture and Recreation to maximize resources.

Programs include workshops on consumer rights and responsibilities conducted with over 15 multicultural service groups across the province; groups have been used to comment on the five most popular consumer materials and how they could be applied in other languages; an average of four advertisements per year for the last two years have been placed in the ethnic newspapers; discussions are under way with the new multicultural television station to develop a consumer program to be translated into many languages; and meetings have been held with five major ethnic organizations to develop better ways of handling consumer information.

An inventory of languages spoken was developed last year in the ministry and is distributed to all frontline inquiry staff in ministry programs and the field, for assistance in translation. In addition, the staff of the consumer information centre speak English, French and Spanish and have an ongoing network of all major languages through the inventory.

The communications co-ordinator for the ministry has been charged with giving special attention to multicultural services in the ministry, and particularly, communications concerns.

During the balance of this fiscal year, the ministry anticipates the following initiatives: Major input into the research of the Ministry of Culture and Recreation to determine the information and service needs of non-English/French-speaking people; the development and evaluation of an information program in the ethnic communities, ESL program and ethnic media on compulsory automobile insurance as a prototype for programs that have a particular effect on this client group; the development of two learning packages for the English-as-a-second-language program; a major emphasis in the communications program for the Residential Tenancies Commission; and the translation of key consumer-related materials in conjunction with community agencies.

380. Mr. Duksza: Will the Ministry of Government Services outline in detail what initiatives, if any, it has undertaken since May 1977 to reflect the multicultural policy enunciated by the Premier at that time? In its reply, will the ministry outline specific policies, programs, procedures and appointments undertaken to recognize that Ontario is a multicultural society? What, if any, other initiatives are to be expected in this fiscal year? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: The Ministry of Government Services essentially provides support services for ministries and agencies of the Ontario government. As a result, the programs of the Ministry of Government Services generally do not have a significant direct involvement with the public, but rather support the service needs of other ministries. This ministry has been and will continue to be committed to equality in its hiring practices.

381. Mr. Duksza: Will the Solicitor General outline in detail what initiatives, if any, it has undertaken since May 1977 to reflect the multicultural policy enunciated by the Premier at that time? In its reply, will the ministry outline specific policies, programs, procedures and appointments undertaken to recognize that Ontario is a multi-cultural society? What, if any, other initiatives are to be expected in this fiscal year? (Tabled December 3, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Additional time will be required to prepare a response to this answer. A final answer should be available about mid-March 1980.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE EDUCATION

391. Mr. Bounsall: Will the Ministry of Education indicate what funding has been made available or funding commitment made to school boards choosing to respond favourably to the Minister of Education's October 5, 1979 announcement on French-language education? If the ministry has made no specific commitment to allocate additional funds for francophone education, will the ministry state if and when such commitments will be made? Will the ministry indicate whether it will provide the necessary funding for: 1. Additional francophone teachers; 2. additional administrative staff; 3. additional clerical staff; 4. school facility alterations required to establish French-language entities in the school system? (Tabled December 4, 1979.)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The funding for mixed language secondary schools and homogeneous French-language secondary schools is currently under review. Although I am unable to indicate the exact nature of the funding mechanism at this time, I would like to reiterate the government's commitment that the 1980 general legislative grant regulation will provide additional funds for the establishment and support of homogeneous French-language secondary school entities and for the expansion of the French-language programs in mixed schools where they remain by local agreement. I intend to announce the details of our support in the very near future.

393. Mr. Bounsall: Will the Ministry of Education list all communities with mixed French/English schools where no meetings or action have taken place as a result of the Minister of Education's October 5, 1979 announcement on French-language education? (Tabled December 4, 1979.)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: There are no communities with mixed French/English schools where meetings have not taken place as a result of the October 5, 1979, announcement on French-language education.

---

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1979

The House resumed at 8:00 p.m.

OCCUPIERS' LIABILITY ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurtry, moved second reading of Bill 202, An Act respecting Occupiers' Liability.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the reason I have been given the privilege of carrying this bill is that, unlike the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), I represent both an urban and a rural constituency. This bill is extremely important to the farmers of my area in eastern Ontario and I know it is important to the farmers in the rest of Ontario as well.

I know it is also important to the urban members, but the agricultural community has been waiting for some time for this piece of legislation. I really feel it is a privilege, as the parliamentary assistant, to carry this bill forward.

I am pleased to bring forward two bills tonight, Bills 202 and 203. If there is time this evening after the Legislature has considered Bill 202, I will be introducing Bill 203, An Act to protect against Trespass to Property. That particular act replaces law which is some 145 years old.

In May, 1979, the Attorney General issued a discussion paper, which he tabled with the Legislature, on occupiers' liability in a trespass to property.

This paper has generated discussion and the Attorney General has received some 200 responses to it. In his opening remarks introducing this for first reading, he indicated there were some minor amendments made to the legislation from that proposed in the discussion paper to the bills presented to the Legislature on December 11. I hope to be able to explain those changes and answer any questions.

In 1972, the Ontario Law Reform Commission published its report on occupiers' liability in which it recommended the enactment of legislation imposing on occupiers one duty of care. In the view of the commission the judge-made common law, with its system of classifying entrants as an invitee, a licensee or trespasser, was no longer adequate to govern the liability of occupiers. I can remember as a student of law one of the most difficult areas of law to understand surrounded this very topic of occupiers' liability. It was difficult to read a case and determine how a court decided whether a person entering on another person's land was an invitee, a licensee or a trespasser. Indeed, in many judgements one was somewhat suspicious of the reasoning supporting the finding of trespass in any one of these particular categories.

This bill basically follows the commission report by replacing the numerous duties of care that an occupier of land now owes to entrants to his land by one primary duty of care; that is to take such care as in all the circumstances it is reasonable to see that persons entering the premises are reasonably safe while on the premises. Sections 2 and 3 of the bill are designed to accomplish that purpose.

The government felt it desirable to depart from the commission recommendations to deal with several issues that are of significant importance to Ontario residents. One of those issues is a responsibility an occupier owes to those who come on his premises with the intention of committing, or in the commission of, a criminal act. Although it is likely that a court would find that such an entrant had voluntarily assumed his own risk, the government felt it desirable to state this in legislation.

While occupiers will still be prevented from using excessive force against persons entering for a criminal purpose, they should not be required to see that the premises are reasonably safe for such unexpected entrants.

A more important issue upon which the government felt legislative direction should differ from that recommended by the law reform commission is the duty of care that an occupier of rural land owes to persons who are trespassing and the duty he owes to persons he permits to use his property for recreational activities without charge for the entry or the activity.

In 1975 the government appointed a group of knowledgeable persons from many walks of life to investigate the status of trail recreation in all parts of Ontario. Public hearings were held throughout Ontario over a period of two years by the Ontario Trails

Council. In its 1975 report, the council stated that the foremost impediment to broader recreation trail use and development in Ontario is the current responsibility before the law of the land owner or occupier towards people invited or trespassing on his property. In a discussion paper published by the Ministry of the Attorney General, as mentioned before, the following proposal was made:

"To protect the interests of the agricultural community and to promote the availability of land for recreational activities, special protection be given to occupiers of certain designated classes of land. Where entry is prohibited to these lands, or where entry is permitted for recreational activities without charge, the occupier's liability be limited to dangers created with the deliberate intent of causing harm or acts done with reckless disregard for the entrant's presence, the entrant to be deemed to have willingly assumed all other risks."

The opinion of more than 100 recreational associations that responded was unanimous. They were all of the opinion that the recreational entrant should assume his own risk of injury. The agricultural community as well, of course, is in agreement.

Section 4 of Bill 101 has been revised from the draft that was contained in the discussion paper. The classes of land to which the reduced duty is applicable have been modified in light of the public comment we have received. However, the principle that entrants who are trespassing and those who are on the land for recreational purposes assume their own risk has not been altered.

The remaining sections of this bill are basically the same as those recommended by the Ontario Law Reform Commission and those that have been outlined in the discussion paper. I hope that this bill, and the next bill which we will introduce, will clear up a confusing part of the law of Ontario.

I know some members of the Legislative Assembly wish this to go to a standing committee. I would not like to commit myself to doing that at this time, but I would listen with an open mind to any member's rational reason for doing that.

Mr. Lawlor: I thought you had committed yourself.

Mrs. Campbell: I was told that you had committed yourself.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, the understanding I have at this time is that I am not certain of the feelings of all the members of the Legislature on that particular matter, but I will listen and I think—

Mr. Lawlor: We came here with a certain understanding.

Ms. Gigantes: An undertaking.

Mrs. Campbell: That was my understanding.

Mr. McKessock: Let's finish it all up tonight.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I would also indicate there are several members on the government side who wish to speak on this particular matter and who have asked to take part in the rotation of the members.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I am a little disturbed at the closing remarks of the parliamentary assistant. My understanding was that the Attorney General—first of all I was told the bills would be debated tonight because the minister could not be here this afternoon; second, I was advised that the minister had committed himself to having this matter go to the resources committee.

I find it very difficult, Mr. Speaker, in this House at this time, to find commitments made and broken with great regularity. I was advised some time ago there would be no legislation, save two bills, brought forward after November 1. That went by the boards.

It is difficult. We do try to co-operate where we feel it is in the best interests of the people, but this sort of development leaves us in a very equivocal position. I cannot do other than express my resentment of this treatment.

Mr. Sterling: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I consulted with the House leader for the New Democratic Party and did not give any commitment on that basis. There's some confusion as to where the official opposition stood on this matter. I spoke to the agricultural critic on it but I didn't speak to the House leader for the opposition.

Quite honestly, I was waiting to understand what the majority of the Legislature wanted. If the majority of the Legislature or the Liberal Party want the bill to go to the standing resources development committee that's fine and dandy by me. I don't think I have ever tried to mislead this Legislature and I take some objection to those comments.

Mrs. Campbell: I'm sorry if the impression was left that I said the parliamentary assistant was attempting to mislead the House. I put it specifically, I thought, on the door of the minister himself. I quite understand the parliamentary assistant may not have had communicated to him that which I understood was communicated to us by the minister, not by the parliamentary assistant.

In speaking to the bill, I believe it is time we codify the matter of occupiers' liability. I have no difficulty with that at all. I believe, however, there are some flaws in the bill that ought to be the subject of correction, perhaps an amendment. It has nothing whatsoever to do with the agricultural provisions but with the recreational provisions.

I have a little concern that as I understood the common law it had falteringly moved forward to give some kind of in-depth protection to the child who came on the premises, that a higher standard of care would be applied. This does not seem to be the case. I would like the opportunity to debate that at some other point.

That is not a matter of the principle of the bill, so I can say that we support codification of occupiers' liability at this point.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, we will support the bill with the gravest kinds of reservations and on the understanding that we have a chance to clarify and work out, not only in terms of principle itself, because there has been a very grave breach of the basic principle consummated by the Attorney General, but on the basis of wording and how to construe this legislation, particularly section 4 in both bills. These are visitations from above.

In 1973 the Ontario Law Reform Commission set forth a model statute on occupiers' liability. That has not been followed. It has been severely departed from, so much so that it justifiably caused considerable concern as to the reasons that go into that and as to the impact of those reasons over against the whole purport of the law.

There is a totally different understanding now, and to pretend that section 3 is the governing section is quite erroneous. Section 4 is the tail that wags this peculiar dog. Section 3 was the blue-eyed creature, the one the Ontario Law Reform Commission recommended to the minister after considerable study.

When I consider English law, how it so-called broadens down from precedent to precedent—in most instances, within any eon, most painfully; and in no area more painfully than in the area of occupiers' liability law. From the time that law was solidified, and indeed made classic in the famous case of Indermaur versus Dames in 1866—Lord, what law students have lived with. As the parliamentary assistant pointed out in his initial statement, the divisions and categories were on the basis of land interest only and not on the basis of the persons involved. You could see the kind of monetary and the kind of proprietary interest involved in those days, Mr. Speaker, which were the heyday of capitalism. Since that time it has severely declined, largely through the instrumentality of people like the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman).

In the course of decline over the years, the various categories have been eroded. The invitee, for instance, the highest and most supreme category of them all, was not a guest, not a beloved one, not someone who came as a friend to one's property. One's friends were second rank. Number one in this particular categorization was he who came to do business with you, Mr. Speaker. Whether he was a scoundrel or not didn't matter one iota; he was carrying the necessary wherewithal upon his person that gave him the sovereign right to be protected against all harm.

The second category, the licensee, was a guest on the premises; invited, permitted to be there. One was not to set traps for him; that is traps of which one had knowledge.

Finally, there was that pariah among all human beings, the untouchable known as the trespasser over against the sacred rights of retention, assertion and acquisition of property. We know that English law was like that in all its tort aspects; it gave priority to tangible goods over against human beings for five centuries. It is only of recent vintage, in recent years, that a certain humanization has taken place. That humanization has taken place precisely in this area of law, along with others.

I will cite in a few moments the famous doctrine which changed our whole perspective on law over the years, the case of Donoghue and Stevenson. The smell-in-the-bottle case, the case in which, for the first time, the judges of the high court of England, the House of Lords, said, "Who is my neighbour? What duties if any, do I have toward another human being living in proximity to me, or to a human being who may come in contact with me? Who is my neighbour and what are the responsibilities in this context directed on to the law; not who owns what?"

This law, as I see it here, is basically retrograde. It is a reversion and an enfranchisement of that reversion into the terms of this particular statute. It has to be discussed in depth, at length and with a thorough understanding. Perhaps there are adequate justifications and grounds over against particular interests in the community that would warrant it, but it bemuses me—it doesn't amuse me actually but does the contrary.

I wish the Attorney General of this province were here. He is the chief law officer of this province. By definition, according to McRuer, according to any theory of constitutional law as to the role of an Attorney General, he stands above all other cabinet ministers. He is relatively and by absolute nonpartisan. His legislation is directed to the sovereign whole, to the benefit of everybody in the widest possible sense.

He is not the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I give every credit to a Minister of Agriculture and Food for promoting to the hilt and in the best possible way the interests of the community which he is appointed to represent; or to the Minister of the Environment with respect to related groups; or the Minister of Energy with respect to the interests of Ontario Hydro. That, in each instance, is their job.

But that's not the job of the Attorney General. He is not transcending his function at the present time; he is becoming a gutter-snipe politician working for particular interests and allying himself in a purely political way with particular partisan causes. That is not his function and he's betraying himself.

He's done it with the police bill; he's doing it in this particular legislation. It's blatant and it's overt and it has to stop. "McMurtry manoeuvres" I call them. They are a betrayal of the office and lend very great strength to saying that he no longer knows the caps he's wearing and that he with malice prepended launches himself into particular areas representing sectarian causes. That it is not lies in the mouth of an attorney general of any province or anywhere, and it wouldn't be known in the other jurisdictions. Becoming a political creature in that sense is to degrade the office. I hope these sentiments are conveyed to him in this particular regard.

Let's look at some of the background of this legislation. I want to refer to the case that has caused apparently all the difficulty, the case of Peter Veinot versus Kerr Addison Mines Limited, a case decided in the year 1974 in the Supreme Court of this country.

The Supreme Court of Canada hasn't been known for its forward actions, for its bold and imaginative ventures into reforming the laws of this country. It hasn't been overwhelmingly progressive in this regard. Even the House of Lords, if I may say so, shows a far better grasp of contemporary conditions and contemporary situations. It has not even done so under the aegis of Chief Justice Laskin, who has been the beacon of the court and who has usually had to live under a shadow, namely, the great dissenter, always in the minority, always almost alone, trying to shape law, to give it an overall contour. That's what I'm after here.

There are two elements in contemporary tort law that shape the whole thing, from trespassers' liability on one side of the fence, to manufacturers of automobiles on the other. One element is foreseeability. What can one see ahead? What could one predict? What would be likely? What could be predictable in a particular circumstance? One weighs that. That's the job of a judge, to weigh that particular concept in an overall way and shape the law not on a causality basis, or not on a half a dozen other grounds which are the ancient basis of the law of wrongs, or tort, but on the basis of foreseeability. That is the prime approach.

The second approach, as I indicated, is set forth in the Donoghue decision. I will recite very briefly the facts of this case.

A snowmobiler, with long experience and very much aware of the hazards of snowmobiling, with all the needed equipment against danger, et cetera, riding along a logging road up around a place called Virginiatown, in northern Ontario, in the winter, et cetera, got onto a well-travelled portion of that road. As he came along at night he was struck by a pipe across that road at the same level as the head of the driver of a snowmobile and was severely injured.

The question was whether there was any liability on Kerr Addison Mines in this particular matter, with respect to that obstruction place in the roadway. True, it was placed there 20 years before. It wasn't lighted and there were no markings or signs to indicate its presence.

The court, by a margin of five to four, on the basis of a judgement rendered by Mr. Justice Dickson, ruled that there was liability on the part of Kerr-Addison. And it was a breakthrough in 1974.

The law reform commission report was written in 1972, so they didn't have the benefit of this decision, but they're directly in line. What the law reform commission recommended in this context and what the highest court in this country came to at that time are directly affirmative. That principle is under question, scrutiny, or even fire this evening as a result of what the Attorney General, knowing these decisions, knowing the tenor of contemporary law, knowing the hard drive to bring it into its present condition, et cetera, has subverted, traduced, undermined, whatever word you wish, Mr. Speaker. It's in the process of being done, and being done rather blatantly, too, with a screen or aura as though they were performing some kind of benevolent function in the process of doing it. There is nothing like impudence in order to win assent. People's breath is taken away from it unless they're prepared to stand back and scrutinize what is actually happening.

I would like to read into the record the sum of what the learned judge, giving the judgement for the majority in the Supreme Court said:

"Dickson, J.: This is an occupiers' liability case. That branch of the law of negligence having to do with the duty owed to a visitor, or an intruder, by an owner or occupier of land has long been in an unsettled state due in part to the Procrustean and often vain attempt in an infinite variety of fact situations to fit a plaintiff neatly into the category of invitee, licensee or trespasser and then allow category to be the conclusive determinant of the landowner's liability. It has not been found easy to reconcile the Victorian landowner's unbridled rights with the modern law of negligence."

It hasn't been easy, but they're going to do it, and the Attorney General is going to undo it.

"Nowhere are the uncertainties more apparent than when one comes to consider the position in law of the trespasser, one who enters the land of another without consent or privilege, whether the entrant is a burglar or wandering child."

The Attorney General is making very little provision for wandering children in his legislation. There is no mention of it. It's one of the defects and, again, it has to go to committee in order to write a clause in giving specific cognizance to the role of the child and, to some lesser degree of liability touching allurements, a document that the courts had to dream up against the harshness and purblindness of the common law, as it has been. They had to dream up fictions in order to protect the child from straying on to property and being hurt.

Whether the entrant is a burglar or wandering child, or an irreproachable wayfarer, the general principles historically applied were those expressed in Robert Addie and Son (Collieries) Limited versus Dumbreck by Lord Hailsham. This is the basic law on the thing and this is the basic law that the Attorney General revives in the very words of Addie and Dumbreck, which has been superseded here and which was overruled in the House of Lords in Great Britain. The Attorney General reincarnates it. He brings it back to life. It's the leading feature of his section 4. This is Lord Hailsham:

"Towards the trespasser, the occupier has no duty to take reasonable care for his protection, or even to protect him from concealed danger. A trespasser comes on to the premises at his own risk. An occupier in such a case is liable only where the injury is due to some wilful act involving something more than the absence of reasonable care. There must be some act done with the deliberate intention of doing harm to the trespasser or at least some act done with reckless disregard of the presence of the trespasser."

Let me pause there for a moment. When the law was initially taught and even prior to that time, do the members remember the famous case of the spring guns, the various forms of spear-like obstacles and catapults erected on the property, all perfectly legitimate up to a certain time in history, as the way of keeping trespassers out of property? In other words, up until the middle 18th century one was able to wound, harm and even possibly kill another human being in this particular regard.

At this point I want to break off for a moment from Justice Dickson's judgement and refer to an article published by the Law Society of Upper Canada, Special Lectures, 1973—the year before—written by a practising lawyer by the name of Percival, Recent Trends in Occupiers' Liability. He is talking to lawyers at the behest of the law society of this province, outlining and bringing up to date, as the law then stood, what the position for occupiers' liability was.

He says at page 105 of those lectures, "The law of occupiers' liability has remained largely unaffected by the broad principles of Donoghue versus Stevenson. The general law of negligence now requires one to take reasonable care to avoid acts or omissions"—that is the general law of negligence; automobiles or manufactured goods or a hundred other things—"which one can reasonably foresee would be likely to injure one's neighbour". Our present approach to 'occupier' factual situation wholly ignores that principle.

"To understand why the law of occupiers' liability is so different, one must appreciate its genesis and development. The courts of England in the 19th century conceived the original principles of occupiers' liability to fulfil that country's then fanatical obsession with the sanctity of real property rights, even over that of human life."

Further on, after citing a number of cases, he is talking about a case called the Herring- ton decision, which is a child injury case, British Railways Board versus Herrington, decided in 1972, 1 All England Reports, which overruled the House of Lords' decision. Lord Morris, for instance, said, "For the reasons which I have given I consider that the learned judge was warranted in deciding that the respondent was entitled to recover. It involves also that on its facts, the decision in the Addie's case should, in my view, have been the other way."

The House of Lords, one judge after another, knocked Addie's case down, knocked down the very principles the Attorney General has enunciated in this legislation, saying it was out of date, it no longer had relevance to the contemporary world and that other considerations apply.

I refer you to that and to Lord Wilberforce's statement, Mr. Speaker. Further down it says, "For the first time in the field of occupiers' liability the House of Lords was prepared to utilize the 'neighbour' concept. Lord Morris at page 767 put it squarely: 'Could a child such as the boy in the present case be regarded as a neighbour?' When Lord Atkin posed the question, 'Who then in law is my neighbour?' he said that the answer seemed to be 'persons who are so closely and directly affected by my act that I ought reasonably to have them in contemplation as being so affected when I am directing my mind to the acts of omissions which are called in question.' No one would suggest that every trespasser is a neighbour, but within these words, was not the small boy in the present case a neighbour?"

It goes on in that vein and develops the law as it stands at this hour in the province in which it has been adopted by the Supreme Court.

I want to go on at page 314 of the Veinot decision. Mr. Justice Dickson says: "These rules, of course, perpetuated the traditional 19th century concern for the sanctity of landed property. The general principle was that a landowner could do as he wished with his land. He owed no duty to an intruder, however accidental or inadvertent the intrusion, other than to refrain from shooting him or otherwise recklessly and wantonly doing him harm. The rigour of the rule is exemplified in such cases as Edwards versus Railway Executive. As could be expected, various inventions were employed from time to time to modify and ameliorate the harshness. In some of the cases the landowner's consent was implied or imputed, particularly in 'children's cases', the status of the intruder being elevated from that of a trespasser, which he clearly was, to that of a licensee, which he clearly was not.

"In other cases a generous meaning was given to the phrase 'reckless disregard' or a tenuous distinction was drawn between land in a static condition and land upon which an operational activity was being conducted . . ." the Attorney General is aware of that distinction and in his legislation he has given cognizance to the static over against something being done on the land, which had taken into the context of possibly injuring someone, ". . . productive of injury."

Now listen to this: "In time, two distinct, not easy to reconcile, lines of jurisprudence emerged. One perpetuated the letter and spirit of Addie's case. The other"—that is the line the Attorney General has taken in his legislation—"gave effect to changing ideas of social responsibility and imposed upon the owner of land duties well beyond those in contemplation in Addie's case. Commission for Railways (N.S.W.) v. Cardy and Videan v. British Transport Commission."

That is a case where Lord Denning had a hand in shaping this law, the great shaper of contemporary law in many areas. I looked up his volume before I came here, the one recently published by himself. He makes no mention of these cases at all. His reforming zeal is so great in other areas that he finds this not foremost in his mind. In the Videan decision he certainly was there.

These cases they are citing here ". . . pre-saged the change which found expression in the leading case of Herrington v. British Railways Board. That case was decided within the context of the Occupiers' Liability Act, 1957, of England, which imposed a 'common duty of care'"—without exceptions as the Attorney General has all over the place, just the common duty of care in this particular legislation—"on occupiers towards all persons who might lawfully come on to their land, but left unaltered the existing law as to the trespassers."

In other words, they set up a category of—what was he, guest, invitee?—which knocked out the distinction between the invitee and the licensee.

Later on the Scots, two years later in 1960, passed the Scottish Occupiers' Liability Act where they wiped out all distinctions. They are now proceeding, as I thought the minister was going to do with his legislation, in across-the-board fashion to leave it up to the courts to make the judgements and to weigh as to when a trespasser would or would not, within reasonable grounds, be awarded any compensation.

The same thing pretty well happened in New Zealand under their law. But not for Ontario. There are too many political considerations in Ontario. There are too many wooings. The Attorney General would too much like to be the number one politician in this province rather than performing the prime duties that he has of forwarding, consolidating, giving voice to, shaping and being aware of the best developments in the laws as they are coming through from all jurisdictions, in this case, particularly from Great Britain.

"In Herrington's case their Lordships exhaustively considered the nature of the duty owed by occupiers to trespassers. Lord Reid applied the subjective test. He said: 'So it appears to me that an occupier's duty to trespassers must vary according to his knowledge, ability and resources. It has often been said that trespassers must take the land as they find it. I would rather say that they must take the occupier as they find him.' And that is a far better test—"take the occupier as they find him."

Later on in the same page, "So to the question whether an occupier is liable in respect of an accident to a trespasser on his land would depend on whether a conscientious humane man with his knowledge, skill or resources could reasonably have been expected to have done or refrained from doing before the accident something that would have avoided it. If he knew before the accident that there was a substantial probability that trespassers would come, I think that most people would regard as culpable failure to give any thought to their safety. He may often reasonably think, weighing the seriousness of the danger and the degree of likelihood of the trespassers coming against the burden he would have to incur in preventing their entry or making his premises safe or curtailing his own activities on his land, that he could not be fairly expected to do anything.

"If he could at small trouble and expense take some effective action, again, I think that most people would think it inhumane and culpable not to do that. If some such principle is adopted there will no longer be any need to strive to imply a fictitious licence."

The test of common humanity was also applied by Lord Morris, of Borth-y-Gest. "In my view, while it cannot be said that the railways board owe the common duty of care to the young boy in the present case, they did owe to him at least the duty of acting with common humanity."

The nature of the duty of care was described by Lord Wilberforce in these words. "Again, it must be remembered that we are concerned with trespassers and a compromise must be reached between the demand of humanity and the necessity to avoid placing undue burdens on occupiers. There is a balance there. What is reasonable depends on the nature and degree of the danger. It also depends on the difficulty and expense of guarding against it." The law, in this context, takes account of the means and resources of the occupier or other person in control. What is reasonable for a railway company would be very unreasonable for a farmer or, if this is relevant, a small contractor.

Lord Pearson used these words: "It does not follow that the occupier never owes any duty to a trespasser. If the presence of the trespasser is known to or reasonably to be anticipated by the occupier, well then the occupier has a duty to the trespasser. But it is a lower and less onerous duty than the one which the occupier owes to a lawful visitor. Very broadly stated, it is the duty to treat the trespasser with ordinary humanity."

That is the development of the law. In the next page he gives Denning's judgement, and I won't read it into the record. It is there for anyone who happens to be interested in this area of law and to see how that has developed.

Other members of the court, particularly Mr. Justice Martland, giving the dissenting judgement, et cetera, took a different view, a highly legalistic, technical view about implied licences and about the old definition of what a trespasser was. If he was technically on somebody else's land then he suffered the consequences and that was the way he ruled. Just as the Court of Appeal for Ontario ruled that way over against the decision of Mr. Justice Houlden, in the Supreme Court in this province, who, using the fictitious device of an implied licence to be on the land, gave the judgement in the first instance to the plaintiff.

That was heartening; it was a real advance in the law. It was a new approach and a broadening out of the principle of this whole area, making it applicable to a particular narrow segment of that area. The reaction with respect to it apparently has been intense and not weighing the various factors in a really forthright and objective way that had gone into the development of this area of the law.

At this point, I would like to make some reference to documents and remarks that have come into my hands about the Attorney General. His parliamentary assistant, as I heard him say tonight, received 200 or so briefs of which we have been privy to very few. I am sure if this goes into committee some of these briefs might be made available to the members of the opposition who have responsibility for these matters.

Apart from that, in my hand I have a letter from a teacher at the University of Toronto faculty of law, Robert Pritchard. He sent a letter to the Attorney General on June 14, 1979. He says: "However, within section 4 you have proposed a very substantial exception to this general approach, in that on lands listed in section 4 the duty created in section 3 is not to apply unless the dangers were created with deliberate intent of doing harm or damage. As a result, one can immediately anticipate numerous cases in which a person will be badly injured by unreasonable conduct by the occupier of the land, but in which the injured individual will be unable to achieve compensation because of immunity created."

In other words, the act cannot be as the wording goes in this section, that the occupier must not create a danger with "deliberate intent," or with "reckless disregard." Nothing is said as to the "reasonable" that is mentioned in section 3. It goes beyond the reasonable. I would interpret it that one may act unreasonably provided he doesn't act with a deliberate intent to do harm. There are lots of gradation between unreasonable, reasonable and malicious, for heaven's sake, and the bill has carved out that area, giving complete licence to act as one will in that gambit of activity.

"These cases of persons going uncompensated, despite conduct by the occupier which was unreasonable in all the circumstances, will be tragic ones. They will often involve children. They will frequently involve very substantial individual damages. They will often lead to persons injured for life and left destitute. They will almost always involve people engaged in the most innocent of activities and they will often happen in circumstances where the land owner's conduct will be conduct which no one would condone. There will be cases that will result and they will bring the statutory reforms that you are now proposing under close scrutiny.

"I would suggest if this legislation were enacted and then a series of these injuries were to occur, which they inevitably will, a searching critique of the provisions of section 4 will be undertaken. At that time I suggest the criticism will be no less scorching than that which common-law lawyers have for years brought to bear on the present system of occupiers' liability."

Let me pause here just for a moment, Mr. Speaker. What the Attorney General is trying to do in the legislation is to wipe out a whole series of artificial, silly, archaic categories of the law. What does he do? He sets up a whole series—I won't say they're archaic because they're brand new—of categories of his own. He has five of them. If you don't like categories, Mr. Speaker, you can't be overly affectionate about the particular provisions of section 4 in this statute.

"At that time I suggest the criticism will be no less scorching than that which common-law lawyers have for years brought to bear on the present system of occupiers' liability. Again, we will have inequitable results, this time dependent not on the category of visitor, but rather on the category of land which the individual is visiting.

"Explanations of these results based on the statute will be no more convincing to injured members of the public than our explanations based on the common-law category inherent in the present system of the common law."

That is one remark. Just to take it a little farther, I have before me a letter from Stephen Fram. He is counsel to the policy development division. It is a letter directed to Professor Waddams of the University of Toronto law school. I take it that Stephen Fram has been involved in framing this and has had a great deal to do with this legislation; he wouldn't be writing this letter otherwise. We will no doubt meet with friendly, almost Christmas-like accolades some time late in January.

He says this in reply to the professor, and I will come back to the initial statement: "There is no doubt that section 4 would result in a risk"—this is what the minister's department says—"that some individuals be injured without the opportunity to obtain compensation. However, section 4 is not intended to exonerate the unreasonable occupier of land of the designated types."

I'll stop there and turn over to Professor Waddams' reply of July 11 this year.

"Thank you for your letter of June 28. In it you say, in paragraph two, 'However, section 4 is not intended to exonerate the unreasonable occupier of land of the designated types.' If this statement is true, section 4 must be amended, for 'exonerate the unreasonable occupier' is exactly what it does. Indeed, the only effect of section 4 will be to protect the unreasonable occupier, since one who acts reasonably cannot be liable in any event under section 3." That is true.

Mr. Fram says: "Section 4 is intended to inform the occupier of land of this type that he need not need any standard of care higher than that which is traditionally applied to trespassers. Given the nature of the lands to be included in section 4(3) we believe it would be reasonable for occupiers to be liable only for dangers deliberately or recklessly created. Section 4 can be perceived as a legislative direction as to how section 3 is to be applied in a specific set of circumstances."

What nonsense! No one could possibly read the two sections in conjunction, particularly when the minister says at the beginning of section 4, "section 3 doesn't apply."

Anyhow, much better than me, Professor Waddams says: "At the end of the same paragraph you say 'Section 4 can be perceived as the legislative direction as to how section 3 is to be applied in a specific set of circumstances.'"

If the intention is to make section 4 subordinate to section 3, redrafting again is necessary. At present, section 4 says flatly: "The duty of care provided for in subsection 1 of section 3 does not apply." So how can Mr. Fram say it does when by express purpose it says it doesn't? It's been written in deliberately in that way in order to exclude it's operation.

Continuing with Mr. Fram's letter: "Very few claims arise out of the use of rural, nonindustrial land." If that's the case coming from the minister's department, why all the palaver? Why the elaborate gyrations to depart from what has been laid down as a model statute from the minister's own reform commission, and set up a wholly new clause which the law reform commission has never seen? No one with that kind of authority has ever had an opportunity to peruse, analyse, subject it to general examination.

A thing is issued in the spring across the board; it's not referred back to the law reform commission for reconsideration to see how fitting it is. Why? Because the minister knows it's too wretchedly political and too much a posturing to individuals, et cetera, to meet the accord of fair-minded, objective people who are trying to shape the law in a way that is outside and above partisan politics in its operation.

That's what the law reform commission is there for, so they can take the flak off the government, so they can act as a lightning rod and, thirdly, because of their erudition, because they know and they're living with contemporary law all over the world, which the government is not. They are in the members' weasel holes in Ontario, seeking out the largest advantage they can possibly find in any particular area of the economy to stay in office or to gain office. They'll sell their souls to whatever comes along. It's a betrayal of the basic concept of law, as I see it.

"Very few claims arise out of the use of rural, nonindustrial land. Nevertheless, the occupiers of rural land are fearful of claims against them. Though these fears appear groundless, the existence of fear results in the foreclosing of recreational activities to many individuals."

He says these fears are groundless and under the law as it was framed, I think, it could perhaps be strengthened with respect to orchards and lands under cultivation and that certain preservations could be made. But the minister doesn't have to go holus-bolus the way he has on this legislation in order to grind down and eliminate from existence the rights so hard won in a century of court proceedings. If he can't do something benign, he goes whole hog in the opposite direction and then absents himself from the House.

"It is impossible at present to convince occupiers of rural land that they have no justifiable fear of being wrongly sued and improperly found liable." I think that is true. I would like to see the cases in which these suits have been successful, despite the Veinot decision, about which everyone is somewhat hysterical.

"It is impossible to convince rural occupiers of land"—this is the Attorney General's department talking—"that the decision in Veinot was a misapplication of the principle that a person must take reasonable care not to injure his neighbour. It is fruitless to attempt to convince a rural occupier of land that occasional misapplications of sound principle leading to the possible over-compensation of some entrants on land do not justify the enactment of the principle that trespassers and recreational users of their land should not assume their own risk.

"It is clear that the brief submitted from the Ontario Trails Council and the ministry's discussion with organized recreational groups that most persons entering without charge on rural, nonindustrial land for recreational purposes expect to assume their own risk." I mention that because I suspect in his reply the parliamentary assistant will say that is the case. I only reply to him that he should pay some attention to what Professor Waddams and Robert Pritchard have indicated to him: it is not for any group within the community to surrender rights on behalf of the rest of that community, in any way, however well intentioned and whatever lengths they think they have to go to in order to achieve some small prerogatives.

The professor says: "You agree with me that the fears of nonindustrial rural occupiers are groundless, yet you say it is impossible to convince them this is so. If the arguments against the proposed legislation are soundly based they will convince reasonable people. If reasonable persons refuse to be convinced, their proposals should be rejected where they are contrary to what a reasonable person will perceive as the public interest.

"Let me remind you we are talking about the rights of innocent children, negligently injured to reasonable compensation. In paragraph four you say it is clear most persons entering without charge on rural, nonindustrial land for recreational purposes expect to assume their own risk. One may ask, risk of what? No one expects to assume the risk of unreasonable conduct and it is only unreasonable conduct that will attract liability in the first place.

"I would point out too, that the immunity in section 4 as presently drafted is not limited to nonindustrial lands. I regard railroads and utilities as industries."

He goes on in that vein. I trust the members have read these briefs and are up to date on them. We would like to peruse them. It will go into the total picture of what is involved in the legislation as it has come before us.

There are other things that must be discussed which have never been canvassed by the law reform commission or by anyone else. I am thinking of a doctrine in law having to do with consent, when a person consents to certain risks. As you know, in criminal law I can't consent to your assaulting me, Mr. Speaker. The law will not permit that kind of consent. In civil law it is possible to have a whole series of consents and this is one of them.

In the relevant section, it says, "The duty of care provided for in subsection 1 of section 3 does not apply in respect of risks willingly assumed by the person who enters on the premises." Back in 1973 the law reform commission referred to the doctrine of volenti non fit injuria, as it is called—everything is done in Latin because we can't speak English any more. It's an old doctrine in law and it's the way lawyers express themselves. It has its point, in any event.

What Allan Leal has said about this is that it really doesn't matter. The use of the consent has been severely cut back and is increasingly being narrowly construed by the courts and therefore the court won't take as consent what maybe a layman would consider to be consent. That's as far as they go on the issue in the law reform commission report. Then they cite three cases proving that proposition of the narrowing of the recognition of consent. I went to look them up and took just the headnotes of the three.

One of them has to do with a gratuitous passenger who is injured. This is the case of Car and General Insurance, in 1956. It says: "If the driver is held to have undertaken at the outset to drive with reasonable care, knowledge of the passenger at a subsequent stage of the journey of the driver's intoxication and of the risk thereby created does not operate to release the driver from the duty originally undertaken" on the principle of volenti. That's number one.

The second case has to do with a police officer. "The fact that a police officer is aware of a risk of injury which in fact befalls him in the discharge of his duty does not mean that he voluntarily assumes the risk." That's fairly commonsense. I don't know how that argues in the direction of saying that consent is being narrowly construed by the courts. I think it is a very special case; a case of a police officer.

The next case is the case of a driver who continues to drive although he is aware that he is sleepy. He is guilty of gross negligence when he falls asleep and the car goes off the road, killing a gratuitous passenger. So two cases are gratuitous-passenger cases.

In this case they said the gratuitous passenger could still recover, although he could hardly be expected to be fully aware of the sleeping habits of the man at the wheel.

I don't think the cases cited by the Ontario Law Reform Commission as to what weight one should give to volenti non fit injuria are either here or there, or help a bloody bit. I think we are going to have to get a better definition and write in what we mean. Some kind of amendment is probably in order with respect to that particular matter. It's left too much up in the air. It wipes too much out.

What risks are willingly assumed by the person who enters on the premises? I think the English legislation tries, up to a point, to clarify that issue and determine it to a greater extent than what is done here.

The wording about assuming all risks, et cetera: I think we need to go into committee in order to discuss what the ambit of those risks is, what the limits are in various cases.

Section 4(3) says: "A person who enters premises described in subsection 4"—that's that fairly long list of seven or eight categories—anybody falling under those heads "shall be deemed to have willingly assumed all risks." That has to be scouted. That has to be looked at carefully.

In a sense it was never done by anybody out there—I particularly think of law commissions—certainly not by the law commissions in Great Britain or in New Zealand, who worked on the same area of law. They never saw this kind of wording in their lives and probably wouldn't believe it if they did see it. Ontario established a new norm of uniqueness in terms of pure persiflage. We have it before us today.

Also, a deeper interrogation of Hazeldean and Dawe, the decisions there with respect to an independent contractor, and the wording as to whether it's precise enough et cetera, seemed to be in order, as does the problem with respect to landlords and tenants as to the landlord's duties of repair and the provisions that have been made in that regard.

Then there is the whole area of higher duties—innkeepers' rights, common carriers or hirement for bailment of various kinds. I don't think that has had enough cognizance or enough time spent on it.

Regarding the role in master and servant relations, and the role in this statute as compared to the next one we will discuss, trespassing with respect to the labour law, picketing and the effects on the whole area of industrial relations are not mentioned here at all, despite the fact that section 4 picks up the massive prohibitions written into the Trespass to Property Act. The whole thing is picked up and incorporated within this legislation.

There is area after area, and ground after ground, upon which this legislation deserves and must receive, but never has received, adequate and determinate scrutiny.

As I understand it—and my colleague who received the promise is here now—we came in here this evening with an understanding that this matter would go to committee. I wasn't sure, when the parliamentary assistant spoke previously, whether he was giving plenary assurances to that or vacillating a little bit. There will be no vacillation on this issue or there will be hell to pay in this House, I warn him.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support both bills, but Bill 202 to start with. I would like to make one comment in regard to something that has been told to me many times: We have too many lawyers in this Legislature and not enough people with common sense.

I find it extremely intriguing that a socialist should quote from the House of Lords, and quote lord after lord after lord. I resent the criticism of our Attorney General, who in his wisdom deemed to present this bill to the member for Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling), his parliamentary assistant, who is more than able to carry this bill. I give the Attorney General credit for his common sense.

I think the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) has suffered from his visit to New Zealand and has got mixed up in the trespass between the North and South Islands.

At this time, I would like to pay tribute to the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) who, on December 1, 1977, introduced a private member's bill, An Act to amend the Petty Trespass Act. It was a bill that was long overdue, I say to the NDP members; not to the Liberals, because they seem to have more common sense.

[9:15]

The explanatory notes of that bill say: "The purpose of this bill is to remove from requirements for petty trespass that land be enclosed or that land must be posted before one can be considered a trespasser." It places the onus on persons to ask permission to enter on another person's land—which is only common sense—"and it increases the maximum fine to $1,000 from the present $100. It removes liability from a property owner for trespassers unless deliberate intent to do harm to the trespasser is involved." This is something any reasonable person would surely accept.

Farm and Country December 20, 1977 says Speedy Action on Hunter Trespass Law Needed. The article reads:

"Our last editorial appealed for bright MPPs to pick up the ball and draft a private member's bill. One moved quickly. Robert Eaton, Conservative for Middlesex. His bill, the result of consultation with farmers and the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, meets the needs of Ontario rural communities. Mr. Eaton's bill, we feel, should be equally effective, especially when so many rural hunters have given it wholehearted backing. After all, most of those hunters also own farms and they have personal horror stories involving rogue hunters. Rural Ontario should give the MPP for Middlesex a vote of thanks, and in the next election a vote."

Another editorial, March 27, 1979: "Eaton Feels Trespass Row Solution Now Within Sight." That is if you people will agree.

This was a story in the Sudbury Star. Some members opposite might know where Sudbury is.

"The Ontario Legislature will soon be presented with revised laws governing trespass designed mainly to be of help to farmers and protect them from unjustified lawsuits. To a city dweller with scant knowledge of the problems presented by owning large tracts of property, not all of it visible from an upstairs window, it will come as a surprise to know how little protection existing trespass laws give the farmers. Why would a person who is not supposed to be on somebody else's property have any right to sue if something happens to him?"

"Rights of Farmers Need Consideration." That was the paper in Sarnia, Thursday, April 25, 1978.

Farm and Country, March 27, 1979, carried a heading Revised Trespass Bill.

You people don't even know what trespass means. Bill 202, An Act respecting Occupiers' Liability, and the companion piece of legislation, Bill 203, An Act to protect against Trespass to Property, are both excellent bills.

As a member representing a rural riding, I know the vast majority of my constituents will be in strong support of this legislation. These bills achieve several significant and beneficial results. They are beneficial to the landowners, and especially to the farming community, but in the long run they are beneficial to the hunters, the anglers, the hikers, the campers, in fact all outdoorsmen. If this legislation is not passed there is going to be quite a controversy between the two groups; this is one way to help resolve it.

The benefits I perceive in this bill are several. One, it restores the property rights to the landowners, and especially the farmers, the people who daily live and work on their lands and have been the victims of trespassers for years.

Two, it relieves the owners of assuming the responsibility of injury to a person or persons on his property with or without his permission. The present law is completely unacceptable when a farmer can be held responsible for damage or injury to an individual trespassing on his property and he is not even aware they are on his property.

It reverses the burden of proof. Under this legislation the onus will be on the individual to prove he does have permission to be on someone else's private property.

There has been some concern regarding written permission. The concern many farmers have is that in granting written permission they also assume liability. This is not so. If an individual is injured on a landowner's property, whether the individual is there with or without permission, under this legislation the landowner is not responsible. This is the way it should be.

The fines for trespass are now realistic and meaningful, and should have some positive results.

One main point is restitution. The courts, under this legislation, would have the power to make judgement for damages up to $1,000. If the damages exceed this amount, the person suffering the damage has the recourse to seek further action.

Mr. Lawlor: He is on the wrong legislation. He is not talking about the same acts at all.

Mr. J. Johnson: Hell, you've been all over the place.

Mr. Acting Speaker: He is expressing his views as you have expressed your views.

Mr. J. Johnson: You were talking about NDP on the picket line, for God's sake. Where do the picket lines fit into this?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: He's not on the right bill.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order. He is speaking to the principle of the bill.

Mr. J. Johnson: One area of concern I have is in the signing of property. I would assume that property that is fenced or cultivated would not have to be signed; only vacant, unfenced land would fall into the category requiring signs or markings of some sort.

It is a wishful hope, but I did come into the Legislature tonight with the unrealistic hope that all members would support this legislation and possibly we could have it passed tonight. I know many of the Liberal members expressed the same sentiment, but unfortunately the members of the third party have different opinions and there is no way of changing.

I do hope it is passed for second reading, referred to the resources committee, and we can then have proper hearings in January or February, not that it may be referred to the House in the spring and passed as soon as the House reconvenes.

Mr. Riddell: I will follow the trend established from the very beginning this evening when we started talking about these two bills. The parliamentary assistant alluded to both bills. The other speakers may have tried to confine their remarks to the occupiers' liability bill, but since they are companion bills on which most of us have something to say we'll cover the ground now so we won't be getting up a second time.

I support both bills, but I do share the concerns expressed by the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) and the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor). They probably had every justification to vote against these bills on second reading. I can't do that, because I am speaking on behalf of the farming community and this is something for which it has been asking for a number of decades.

We recognize these two bills replace the current Petty Trespass Act, which is almost identical to the original passed in 1834. It is unbelievable that we are dealing with the same kind of legislation, with very few amendments, first introduced in 1834.

As the minister stated when he introduced this legislation on December 11 this year, these bills reform two different but related areas of law, the law governing an occupier's liability to those who come on to his land and the law protecting an occupier from trespassers to his land. A white paper for discussion purposes was tabled in May of this year by the Attorney General. Bills 202 and 203 are pretty well the same as the discussion drafts of the bill that were contained as appendices B and C in the white paper. Very few changes were made.

The minister indicated in the House that hundreds of letters were received by him on the proposals contained in the discussion paper. I can't understand why the Attorney General refused to introduce these bills prior to December 11.

He sent the discussion papers out to the various groups that would be interested in this subject and I am sure he got the responses. As a matter of fact I think he set a certain time frame in which he was to receive responses so that he could draft legislation.

Mr. Eaton: The end of June.

Mr. Riddell: All right, the member for Middlesex said it was the end of June. Surely, if he received these responses by the end of June he could have had sufficient time to draft legislation, get it into the House and, if need be, send it to committee and we could still have had the bill passed in its amended form ready to go into effect in the fall or winter months of this next year.

I also fail to understand why the Attorney General is not here to answer the questions we have on this legislation. I really think he is showing some contempt for this Legislature. I really think he is failing to assume the responsibilities he has as the Attorney General.

I have every respect for the parliamentary assistant, but the real concerns about this bill have been expressed by the member for St. George and the member for Lakeshore. I am not convinced that the parliamentary assistant fully understands it. I am not even too sure that the Attorney General understands it, but he should be here to listen to what is being said.

The member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel gave the member for Middlesex all kinds of credit for introducing an amendment to the Petty Trespass Act back in 1977. I commend the member too, but I will say that the member's name came up in the lottery, he searched diligently for a bill to introduce, he went back to the resolutions and discussion papers the Ontario Federation of Agriculture put out and as a result of the work done by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture the member for Middlesex introduced the bill. I am going to say that back in December 1976 I wrote a letter to the Attorney General strongly urging him to review the current bill, the Petty Trespass Act.

Farmers, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and such recreational groups as the Trails Council of Ontario have been urging the government for some few decades now to change the trespass law. For a number of years farmers have been exhibiting growing concerns regarding property rights for the owners of private land.

As leisure time and mobility increase for the public there are increasing demands for recreational pursuits. Farm equipment and farm activities may pose increasing hazards for intruders who may be unaware of the risks that could be encountered. The new law expands the classes of land that do not need signs in order to keep intruders out. This will include land under cultivation, gardens, orchards, vineyards and premises on which trees have been planted.

The government proposes to replace the existing trespassing prohibition with three specific offences: entry without permission; prohibited activity; and refusal to leave after being told to leave. The burden of proof to show that permission to enter was received would lie with the accused.

In addition to "no trespassing" signs, "no fishing," et cetera, the government intends to allow colour-coded signs. A sign with a picture of a diagonal line running through a fish or a horse would be permissible replacements for "no fishing" and "no horseback riding," but the federation of agriculture has indicated that such signs would be impractical, because we know what happened to the signs farmers had to post on their property if they didn't want trespassers on that land. The signs were simply torn down and, once again, the farmer was held liable if anything happened to a trespasser while crossing his land.

Red markings on fences, trees and posts would mean entry is prohibited; yellow markings would mean entry is prohibited except for activities specified by the owners. It would be the responsibility of the person entering to determine which activities are permitted.

Changes to the Occupiers' Liability Act will mean that other than acts done with deliberate disregard for the presence of someone using the land, people who use other people's lands would be deemed to have reasonably assumed all risks. A land owner will have no duty of care to a trespasser on his land, other than to avoid creating deliberate hazards.

But I can understand the concerns that the members who have spoken have for recreational land, land that innocent victims, children, could wander on to feeling they had every right to be on that land. Of course, if the owner of the land was negligent—let me use an example. Maybe there was a well on this land and maybe the top had been removed, or maybe it was just a plank top and a child wandered on there and removed the plank, or if some branches had been blown across the top of the well and then snow had covered that, somebody who was snowshoeing, or a child could wander on there and drop into that well. I am not too sure that the occupier or the owner of that land shouldn't have had the responsibility to make sure there was a proper top on that well and I am not too sure that in that case the owner shouldn't have been held liable for negligence.

Mr. Laughren: What are you sure of?

Mr. Roy: No, no. He can take a flexible approach.

Mr. Riddell: That's right.

Mr. Roy: That's what he does. He is not like the NDP. They are sure about everything.

Mr. Riddell: I know what side I am on, but I can fully understand the concerns and for that reason I certainly don't object to the bill going to committee. I don't think the federation of agriculture objects, although I do know the farmers and the farm groups representing the farmers would like to see this legislation passed before the House prorogues. I don't think that is going to happen because, as I say, there are a number of very important matters that need to be discussed in committee.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture made a submission to the government on this proposed legislation. They are pleased that the government has finally dealt with the concerns of rural property owners, especially farmers, regarding the free and quiet possession of their property and that for the first time since 1834 farm land is now recognized as private property and not as a playground for the province. Therefore, the farmers consider this to be a very important piece of legislation.

However, the federation of agriculture, as spokesman for the farmers, has felt that some improvements can be made and this is the reason they don't particularly object to the bill going to committee. Along with some other minor changes they would like occupiers to be so defined as to include a tenant, because we are seeing many more tenant farmers. If the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Henderson) and his colleagues over there are going to permit foreign ownership of land to continue, there are going to be more tenant farmers all the time and therefore we had better make sure they are included in this legislation.

The federation would also like the definition of "premises" to be expanded to include implements of husbandry.

These are some of the recommendations we will be making if this bill goes to committee.

I feel that the bill should be sent to committee for the reasons that have been outlined very clearly by the member for St. George and the member for Lakeshore. This also would give the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and other groups a chance to come in and make presentations.

But we certainly do support the principle of the bill in second reading and I hope we can expedite the thing through the committee. There's no reason in the world why it couldn't go to committee after the House prorogues and before it starts its new session in February or March. Then the legislation can be reintroduced for third reading and we can get it into law by March or April and it will be clear sailing from there on in.

Mr. Speaker, all I can say is let's work hard if it is going to go to committee, let's expedite it, get it into committee, get it back into the House and then it will be in effect for the fall of 1980.

Mr. Warner: As the Speaker certainly recognizes, people in rural Ontario have had a very deep and legitimate concern about protecting their property as people from the urban centres endeavoured to use rural property during recreational pursuits. I might say that some of the organizational clubs have had a concern as well, wanting to know what properties are available for snowmobiling and other winter activities, not wanting to intrude themselves upon farm property in an unwarranted fashion.

As the Speaker is well aware, the farm community of this province has served us well; it has served us in a fashion that is exemplary. It has provided for the people of Ontario a rich heritage in providing food for our table, in providing a moral and family standard to which we all subscribe. So when the farm community of Ontario raises a concern, every one of us should listen and listen closely.

Unfortunately the government has responded in a rather slipshod way. In fact, the government is misleading us; as the Speaker is aware, the explanatory note provided with Bill 202 is misleading. The explanatory note says, "The bill is substantially that recommended by the Ontario Law Reform Commission . . ." That's not true. It's not true at all. The parliamentary assistant knows that.

I must first put on the record my very deep regret that the Attorney General did not see fit to be here tonight. The minister of headlines couldn't find it in his capacity to be with us. That shouldn't surprise any of us, as each one of us knows there's only one reason why that minister brings forward legislation: he brings it forward only to capture headlines for himself; he doesn't have the least interest in presenting good legislation but only that kind of legislation which will garner him headlines.

Where is the Attorney General tonight? Where is he? He wouldn't lower himself to be in here tonight because he disdains this Legislature. It's such an inconvenience for him. The Legislature is an inconvenience to the Attorney General and you and I know that, Mr. Speaker.

This cheap attempt at headlines is so evident in the misleading explanatory note.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Drea: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I don't know that where the Attorney General is tonight is germane to second reading of this bill.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, the bill is in his name. I would expect that he would be here and he is not and I know why. He has already got the headline and that's all he cares about. He knows full well—

Mr. Eaton: You are being unfair. You are taking cheap shots. That's what the parliamentary assistant is for.

Mr. Warner: I will tell you I am sick and tired of his silly, cheap games. He can bring in legislation which purports to protect the farmers, yet at the same time distort the report from the law reform commission. The law reform commission certainly put forward the material that is present in section 3 of this bill, but they did not cut off the legal representation of citizens as is represented in section 4 of this bill. That is what bothers me.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You don't even know what you are doing here.

Mr. Warner: Now that I have roused from slumber the member for Scarborough Centre I may read to him the results from the case of Peter Veinot versus Kerr Addison Mines Limited in which the case, for my friends on the government side, is that there should be a reasonable level of care. It is called the neighbour principle as explained by the judges in the judgement on that case—that there should be a reasonable level of care extended and the Attorney General has decided to erase that.

If this bill passes in its present form, it turns back the decision that was rendered on the Veinot-Kerr Addison Mines decision, a landmark decision about the rights of individuals when they find themselves on private property. It disturbs me greatly. In fact, section 4 of this bill is a licence to be unreasonable, that's what it is. What the Veinot case found was if an individual through no negligence of his own found himself on private property and was injured he should be compensated. Section 4 of this bill negates that and says no matter what the private individual may do on his own property, there is no onus to be reasonable, no onus to maintain safe conditions on private property. That's what this bill says.

The parliamentary assistant knows that. The Attorney General knows that. That's probably why he isn't here tonight. This bill, in very straight legal terms, is a very dangerous kind of bill to civil liberties. The member for Scarborough Centre knows that, as well as other members of the Tory caucus.

Mr. Speaker, in the interests of good legislation, I will certainly consent to second reading, but I will serve notice that when this bill goes to committee section 4 has to be worked over very thoroughly, because it is dangerous to the rights of individuals in this province. I'll tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that if it is not worked over satisfactorily to protect the rights of individuals, I will vote against it on third reading.

It's really interesting how the government can decide that you can eliminate golf courses when not open for playing, but you cannot impose any obligation to maintain safe conditions on those golf courses. That's what reads through the entire bill.

I wish the member for Scarborough Centre would examine the bill carefully. I'm sure when he has he will agree with me that it is a very dangerous precedent to set.

Hon. Mr. Drea: When I want legal advice I will get it from someone who knows.

Mr. Warner: Go to a good lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You haven't been.

Mr. Warner: I have, I have been to several. What they tell me is if we pass section 4 of this bill it returns us to the law of 1866 under which residents in Ontario had no protection when they wandered on to private property. Not just adults, but children. Under this bill, if children happen to find themselves on private property and are injured, there is no recourse. And the minister knows that.

Other members have spoken about Bill 202 and Bill 203 because they are companion pieces of legislation. I understood we were dealing with the bills separately. I look forward to the debate on Bill 203, the bill which is essentially anti-labour legislation. I look forward to that debate.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on this legislation which I consider to be of prime importance because we're dealing with an area of the law which is extremely complex, the question of occupiers' liability and trespass. If I may, for purposes of reducing participation in this debate I will speak on both bills. The predecessor to Mr. Speaker in the chair seems to have allowed comment on both Bill 202 and Bill 203 because the ministry seems to consider that they are companion bills.

The first comment I would make is that I support the concern of my colleague from Huron-Middlesex that the Attorney General should bring in this legislation so late in the year and, therefore, on the basis of that make it very difficult to bring forward what we consider to be—and I think what most people consider to be—very important legislation, especially for the farming community and recreational community but also, by and large, for the public of Ontario.

It is somewhat annoying for those of us who participate in the legislative process and who take it seriously and try to have the best type of legislation possible, to first of all, have legislation introduced like the trespass act—which really is the first of its type, as my colleague from Huron-Middlesex has said, since 1834. This comes in after recommendations were made by the Ontario Law Reform Commission back in 1972. Those recommendations were made some seven years ago.

What makes it annoying is when the legislation is brought in and then we're told by the Attorney General: "Let's be expeditious about this. Let's see if we can't get this matter through." There is some suggestion by the Attorney General that he doesn't want any delay on the part of the opposition. In fact, the onus is often put on the opposition. If we participate not only on second reading but in committee, to suggest that the legislation go to committee is taken that somehow we are impeding the legislative process here. I consider that to be most insulting. My colleagues who have raised some concern about this are fully justified in doing so.

Just the other day in this House the Attorney General brought in a piece of legislation affecting citizens' complaints against police and he suggested, at that time, that it be passed through the House expeditiously. That's something we've been waiting for for the last four or five years and something we've had reports on for the last four or five years.

I trust that when statements like that are made by the Attorney General he would not be suggesting that the comments of those of us who participate in the legislative process and have what I consider to be comments that are valid—and certainly the comments I've heard this evening are valid and justified—are impediments and delays in the legislative process.

I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, as the presiding officer in this chamber, you would agree that the opposition still has a role to play in the legislative process of Ontario. I was not here, but I heard the parliamentary assistant make comments about this legislation. I trust he was not suggesting, as well, that the bills be passed without going to committee.

My colleagues from Middlesex, St. George and Lakeshore have mentioned that this legislation should go to committee. I think it should. I don't know of a more difficult area of the law than the question of occupiers' liability. Undoubtedly, Mr. Speaker, you're aware that the existing law was based on common law and that liability involving individuals by and large rested on what we called the category of individuals involved. You've heard many discussions on legislation in this province dealing with gross negligence and with other terms such as this. It has happened before the courts on a regular basis that someone has argued that the negligence rested on whether the person involved was an invitee, a licensee or a trespasser. The courts were not satisfied that these were the only three categories. They went on to create other categories, some of which were called the bare licensee and the permittee and, in trespassing, they created such terms as inducement, allurement and so forth. The law involving responsibility of an owner or occupier became extremely complex.

I understood that the whole purpose of the Ontario Law Reform Commission report was to study this, to report back and to follow what other jurisdictions have done—my colleagues have mentioned England, New Zealand and others—and to try to codify or have some legislation which gives some guidelines on the question of occupiers' liability and thereby some direction to the public about its liability and responsibility and some guidance to the courts, as well, about their liability and responsibility.

I think there was an attempt to do this by the law reform commission, but I have some concern about the end result that has been presented to us in this assembly by the Attorney General whether we will succeed in doing that.

As my colleague from Huron-Middlesex has said, I understand the concern of the community out there, of the farming community and of the community involved in recreational areas. Whether we're talking about Skidoos, all-terrain vehicles, hunters or the great allurement of the urban community towards getting out in the outdoors hunting and so forth, it has reached the point where there was some legitimate concern about people going on to other people's lands and about their responsibility. I think it important that legislation be brought in and some protection be given to that community.

My colleagues from that community agree with me that in giving protection to these people, to these occupiers and giving some response to their legitimate concern about their responsibility, we are not too restrictive. My colleague from St. George has raised some legitimate concerns. My colleague from Lakeshore also has raised some legitimate concerns.

When we talk about section 4, and we say that a person who enters premises described in the subsections shall be deemed to have willingly assumed all risks, I ask are we talking about children? That's a legiti-mate concern. My colleague from Middlesex raised it.

Are we to say that an occupier will be absolved from all risks for children, even traps that may be set? That is another concern we have in this legislation.

Some of my colleagues have mentioned the fact that although we have changed the category of people who may or may not come on the land in respect to responsibility, whether one is an invitee or a trespasser or a licensee, we change that category of land which may make it as difficult. There are some categories that have been mentioned here as being difficult to accept, such as a golf course when it is not open for playing.

All these are concerns which warrant and merit that this type of legislation go to committee. Surely, it should be in committee so that not only the legal community but also the farming community, the recreational community, people who have expressed concern, people involved in the law, professors, et cetera, can come forward to express their points of view so that we may see how we can get the best legislation possible.

Surely that process is a process which has legitimacy. Surely it is a process which makes sense and logic. I want to say something to the parliamentary assistant on which I think my colleagues will agree with me. Just because the Attorney General comes in at the 11th hour with a piece of legislation which he says is important—and we agree with him—just because the Attorney General decides in December we should proceed and discuss this legislation with which we agree generally on second reading, doesn't mean to say that we are saying yes to every dot and that every line is correct in this bill and that we do not have some legitimate concern.

I hope we are in agreement and that the parliamentary assistant will understand we are not trying to delay this legislation in any way, but that we have some legitimate concern. Our trust is that this legislation will go to committee so people may come forward and express their concerns.

I have other concerns about Bill 202 and concerns dealing with the fact of the restriction and the ability of a contract under section 5 of the legislation. I have concern about section 8 and that the premises used are under some form of tenancy. I don't want to take up too much time as I know some of my colleagues want to participate, but I do want to put on record some of these concerns.

I can recall this Bill 203. Surely we have seen this before, perhaps through private bills or others. This colour coding I find interesting; I don't know what the origin is of that, and about whether signs should be in red and yellow markings. This concerns the size of the signs as far as trespassing is concerned. I had some difficulty understanding this. It seems to me that a sign should reflect what it is meant to convey and that we should try to be as simple as possible with legislation. A sign should be a sign that one considers reasonable to convey what it is intended. If there is to be a sign saying you are not to trespass, then it should be a sign that a reasonably intelligent person can read, whether it is red, yellow or otherwise. It seems to me that is what a sign should convey. I find this to be of some interest.

I have great concern, as well, about the power of arrest under section 9 of the Trespass to Property Act. I also have some concern about the fines that are imposed under section 2 of the trespass act. All of these concerns, I trust, Mr. Speaker, will be responded to, not only by the parliamentary assistant in debate on second reading, but when these bills go to committee. When we hear comments not only from the parliamentary assistant but some of his colleagues, for instance the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel, and when some of our colleagues get up here and mention concerns about a bill, we are not doing so in order to stop or delay or in any way show undue concern about the legislation. I trust we will get a commitment from the parliamentary assistant that this bill will take its ordinary legislative process.

Surely, when he receives a report in 1972 and brings legislation forward in 1979, the Attorney General cannot stand in this House and say, "Let's get on with this legislation. Let's quit this foolishness." If he wants our co-operation, let him show that he deserves it and we will give it to him, but let's not get the impression from the Attorney General that because we express legitimate concerns in this Legislature we are in any way delaying the process.

I am so pleased to be addressing the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins) in that chair as Acting Speaker because he fits it so well. I am sure he will, on our behalf, convey to the Attorney General and to the parliamentary assistant our concern about the legislation and, also, convey our concern that when he brings in a piece of legislation at the last minute we in the opposition are not rubber stamping it. We are going to look at it closely. If there are amendments to be brought to it, we will bring in such amendments.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly on the bill. I am delighted to know there is an agreement in force which says this bill is going out to committee and there is, therefore, no need for me to stand here and urge that the bill go out to committee. I understand it is a definite agreement, therefore I don't believe it will be necessary for me to speak at any great length.

I really am sorry the Attorney General of this province feels so uncomfortable in this assembly that he very seldom comes here, except during question period, in order to participate in the proceedings of it. It has been said to me that there is a certain arrogance about the Attorney General. I said, "Oh, that can't possibly be so. It must be that we don't make him feel at home here." He must feel uncomfortable here. It may be the lesson he wants us to learn tonight is that we must perhaps be more deferential to him, more considerate of him, less demanding of him. Perhaps we should have special cameras here for him, special electronic devices so that whatever he says here can get instant replay outside.

It does seem to me that most of his statements of any significance are made outside. I would have thought in a funny way, that when we were talking about occupiers' liability and about trespass to property that when the Attorney General was going to make a statement related to vandalism he might have chosen this forum to make it. I don't quite know why that wouldn't—

Mr. Warner: No way.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is that in the principle of the bill?

Mr. Renwick: Well, vandalism has something to do with the destruction of private property and I think the occupiers' liability and trespass bills relate to private property. At least I believe that is the tenor of the bills.

In any event, I don't believe for one moment that the Attorney General is arrogant because last Thursday night in the House of Commons we saw what happened when a minority government became arrogant and we wouldn't want that to happen here. Certainly not in the closing days of this session. Although I alluded to the fact that we were quite prepared to run a parallel election, I doubt if the Conservatives in Ontario or my friends on the right are prepared to do that.

Out of curiosity of course, I would be anxious to know where the Attorney General is tonight, but I gather that none of his colleagues are prepared to let us know about that. This, of course, does no disservice to the member for Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling), who is the fall person to carry the legislation for which he bears no responsibility in this assembly.

I guess we are old fashioned here about the parliamentary system. We believe that the minister of the crown who carries the responsibility for the legislation, apart perhaps from Bill 1 with that typographical correction in it that we will be dealing with, that any bill of principle the Attorney General sees fit to introduce into this assembly and makes a choice as to which bills he will proceed with on December 11 and then have us debate it on second reading at this time, would have at least considered it important enough to have been here.

The message I give to the government leader and to the Premier of this province is that when important legislation stands in the name of the Attorney General, I expect him, the Attorney General, to be present in this House—

Interjections.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Renwick: I yield to my friend the member for Carleton-Grenville.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege. When I made my introductory remarks I indicated to the Legislature I considered it a great privilege to bring forward this bill for second reading. The Attorney General has yielded to my wish to bring this bill to the Legislature today because I represent a rural riding; the agricultural community is very interested in this particular piece of legislation and it is at my urging that the Attorney General has allowed me to carry his bill.

Mr. Warner: You make excuses for him when he is a disgrace.

Mr. Sterling: If other members of this Legislature want to—

Mr. Warner: He is a disgrace to this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere an expert on law or rural communities?

Mr. Sterling: It is at my behest that I am here and I want to make that very clear to the other members of this Legislature that the Attorney General is at no way in fault for my representing him on this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Renwick: Whatever privilege the Attorney General conferred upon the member for Carleton-Grenville is not a privilege in this House. If the Attorney General wanted to have the member for Carleton-Grenville debate this bill in the assembly that's quite satisfactory to me, provided the Attorney General is sitting in his place to accept the responsibility which is his under the system.

As I say, I do not believe for one moment what many people have been saying, that the Attorney General is arrogant.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am glad that is on the record.

Mr. Renwick: I am glad that the Minister of Industry and Tourism is glad it's out of my system as well.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I said I'm glad it's on the record.

Mr. Renwick: Has he got a question of privilege? I yield the floor to the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was just sitting here speculating where all but one of the member's other front-bench colleagues are on this very important bill. I notice that many members of cabinet are present on this side and several members of the Liberal Party are in the front bench. I just wondered where all the front benchers for the NDP were on this very important piece of legislation, because we do in fact think this is an important bill.

In any case, I am glad the honourable member got it on the record that the Attorney General was not arrogant and for my part I want to confirm that I don't think the rest of the member's front bench is arrogant for ignoring this bill this evening either.

Mr. Roy: You see why the minister is so good with the radio ads.

Mr. Renwick: I certainly do. I am looking forward to the bill on the Island homes. I wonder whether it will be called in this session; I think it is Bill 158.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are you going to filibuster that too?

Mr. Renwick: No, we are going to amend it.

Mr. Speaker, as the Premier sometimes says, I was provoked into speaking longer on this bill than I had intended. I want to say that I received today a letter from the president of the Advocates Society about this legislation, which points up a matter that is of much concern to us as to what it was in the processes of the Tory government that decided this bill would be called for second reading and referred to committee, when Bill 201 is going to die on the Order Paper in the assembly.

I would have assumed, if the government were going to send these two bills out to committee, even under duress, that it would have agreed also to have debated Bill 201 and to send it out to committee so we could have dealt with it as well.

The president of the Advocates Society states that on December 7, 1979, he received a letter from the Attorney General, indicating that in part because of the representations the society made to him with respect to the bill it was only going to be introduced this session for first reading so it could be studied and further representations could be made by interested groups.

He then goes on to state that "late on Friday"—that is, December 14—"the Attorney General, because of certain representations made to him, intends to attempt to have the occupiers' liability legislation passed at the current session of the Legislature next week." I am not going to go into the reasons why the president of the Advocates Society, which is a very distinguished body in the province, as the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick knows, and which has very considered views and concerns about the law of the province, should write to me to put the position to the government that the bill must be dealt with in committee.

I feel deeply honoured that the president of the Advocates Society would select me. It is an expression of their concern about what this legislation is doing that they want it to go out to committee and I am delighted we can give them that specific assurance.

I want to say very clearly to the parliamentary assistant that it may well have been that there came a time in the Roman Empire when the codification of laws under Justinian was part of the process. There may have come a time in the British Empire, in the late 19th century, when the codification of law in the dying days of an empire was a proper and fit way in which to deal with the contribution of that empire to civilization.

I am suggesting to the parliamentary assistant that it is very dangerous in Ontario at this time to be considering the codification of law when there are all sorts of new, conflicting and difficult relationships being developed, especially in this province, with respect to the general right of the citizenry for recreation and those of other persons in the farm communities. I take my seat behind no one in my concern that the legitimate interest of the farm community in the protection of its property should be upheld. I also take it, as a very concerned person representing an urban riding, that the people in the urban society who leave the city to participate in recreational and other alternatives outside pose very difficult questions of law for the interrelationship of those people under law in a way which will be acceptable.

As I read this bill, as I read both the bills that are before us tonight, there is something so succinct about them as to be almost Draconian in their nature. There is something inflexible and rigid about them which will cause untold difficulty for people in the province.

I do not believe that one tries to work out complicated interpersonal relationships related to the use of property by some kind of a codification which bears very close resemblances to criminal law in the penalties which are levied. I think we are about to deal in situations which require extreme sensitivity in a way which shows, in my judgement, a lack of sensitivity on the part of the government.

I reiterate what I say. I take my seat behind no one with respect to the need to protect in this society the legitimate interests of people in those bundles of interest which are called the right of ownership to property. But everybody knows in a society such as this that the right of property is no longer absolute. The right of property is no longer to be determined by the colour of the signs and the notices which are put on the property. That isn't the way life works any more. One does not give anybody an untrammelled right to say that anybody coming on to one's property with the intention to commit a crime has the licence to murder. One just doesn't have that kind of right.

I have a legitimate right to protect my property in self-defence; that's what the law says. It's not an absolute right. There's no absolute right to kill in the land that I know of and under any circumstances, even under the codification of the criminal law which we owe to the uncle of Virginia Stephen, who became Virginia Woolf.

When we embark upon this kind of law to replace in three or four pages many years of case after case after case of the English law, then I want to be sure we are not dividing the people of this province into questions of whether they are in the rural community or the urban community. I don't want the law to be seen as that kind of a political weapon.

I believe the introduction of this bill was brought into this House because of some sense of some cheap political gain that could be made. I think it does a disservice to the farming community in the province and to the people in the cities and towns of this province, if the minister is going to try to divide the community on a bill which is of such a fundamental nature.

This bill deals with people's property in the city as well as in the country. It deals with everybody's property. As we will speak about on the other bill, it touches upon very profound and real civil liberties and very profound and real political liberties which have nothing to do with questions of the recreational use of land.

I've gone on at sufficient length. Fortunately, because of the commitment which the government has given to put the bill out to committee, there's no need for me to go on at any greater length. I want the minister to know we're very concerned about the bill. We're very concerned about its genesis; we're very concerned about the timing of its introduction; and we're very concerned about the sense that somehow or other there was a political motivation behind a bill for which there should be no political motivation.

We are supporting the bill on second reading. We want to see this matter dealt with in committee. I want to see it dealt with in committee in such a way that if it turns out that the bill is not a wise bill, that the principle of codification is not right at this time in Ontario respecting the use of property, then the government will have the courage not to proceed with the bill and let the ordinary and everyday courses of the common law take care of these situations. I want the government to be open about it, I want it to be real about it and I don't want it to use this kind of a bill and the law reform commission and the work which has been done by that commission to divide the communities in this province for some cheap political purpose.

Mr. Eaton: I am pleased to see that this legislation has finally reached this chamber. If there is anything that can be criticized as far as the legislation and the Attorney General is concerned it is certainly the time it has taken to get it here. I think my colleague from Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) was right; it should have been here at the beginning of this session.

We had presentations on the previous proposal until the end of June, so they had time to consider those presentations and draft the legislation. I for one think the Ministry of the Attorney General and the Attorney General should be criticized for that legislation not being here much sooner.

However, I think it is pretty cheap the way some people have taken shots at the Attorney General for not being the one to carry the legislation. I think the parliamentary assistant is not only the one who has the knowledge of the law that is coming in but he also represents a rural area; he is vitally interested in the bill, that is why he is carrying it.

Those members talk about politics. They play cheap politics pretty often. The member for Riverdale referred to splitting the urban and rural community because of this bill. I will tell him it is the circumstances under the present legislation that are splitting the rural and urban community. Those in the urban community have protection; people can't enter their backyard or frontyard and do what they damned well please, but in the rural community they are doing it. That is why there is such a need for the change in the legislation, so the people in the rural community will have the same protection of their property rights as they do in the urban community.

If the members look at the previous bill and then at the present bill they will see the bill now protects agricultural land; it includes orchards, which people could have entered before and taken fruit; it now includes vineyards, which is one of the changes which has come in since June.

I think it is that kind of legislation that brings equality for both the rural and urban people that should bring them together on the matter. People can now go to a rural community and say, "We don't have the right to be on your land, but can we use it?" I tell you, Mr. Speaker, a lot of people will give them the right to use it. They are willing to work with people who will use their property in an organized and fair way, but they don't want the abuse they have taken in the past because they haven't had that protection.

I think this legislation is a great step forward. It puts in some teeth that have been lacking in any protection that was there. The protection itself was weak. Once you did get someone into court it might have resulted in a $10 fine, or a $100 fine at the most. Now if somebody is flagrantly treating someone else's property as a place where they can do anything they want, there is an opportunity for somebody in that situation to know they are going to get a fine that means something, not just a fine that represents a licence to be on someone else's property.

The people in the rural community want to work with groups as far as recreation is concerned. As for the suggestion with regard to signs, if a ski club comes in and makes arrangements with the landowner to use his property, they can put signs saying skiing is allowed. That particular recreation would be allowed on the property to the exclusion of other people entering without permission. This is the kind of protection rural property owners have been looking for. The main emphasis should be put on informing the public that if they enter property without permission they are trespassers.

I am personally a little disappointed that the bill has to go to committee. I would liked to see it passed—

Mr. Speaker: Point of order, the member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: I wonder if I could have clarification as to what bill the honourable member is discussing at this point.

Mr. Eaton: Like all the other members, I am talking about both the bills in combination.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I was one of the speakers who confined themselves to the bill that we had had introduced.

Mr. Eaton: The member for St. George probably was the only one who did. She wasn't here after she presented her case. She went out and didn't hear anybody else talking about it. There were several people who referred to both pieces of legislation at the same time. If members just want to talk about the one and then repeat the whole thing again on the other part of it, that's fine. Personally, I wanted to speak about both of them at the same time, because they are in combination; they both have an effect on the vital interests of the rural people in this particular province. I'm referring to both of them. I won't get up to speak again on the other bill when the time comes.

Mrs. Campbell: Fine.

Mr. Eaton: Fine? Okay.

Mr. Germa: Why are you filibustering?

Mr. Eaton: Nobody is filibustering. There is not going to be a vote on it tonight. We had a member from the NDP come in here and take the whole first hour. Our fellows, I think between the two of us, have taken 10 minutes. Talk about filibustering!

Mr. Speaker, this legislation in going to committee will give people an opportunity to provide input, as I started to say before I was rudely interrupted. I was one who wanted it to go ahead very quickly. I can understand, from what some of the members have said, that they want it to go to committee so we can have some discussion on it in committee.

I'm pleased it's going to the resources development committee, since I am a member of that committee. I know the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) is interested; he's on that committee. The member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson) is on that committee and is interested; he is one of the ones who has also worked hard to see this legislation come to life.

This is legislation that should be supported by this House. It will not split the rural and urban communities, as the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) suggested. I think it can bring them closer together, to work together to see that property rights are protected and at the same time that people can get their recreational needs met. I urge the members of this House to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Grey (Mr. McKessock), who seems to be the next person who wishes to speak on the bill, move the adjournment of the debate so we can give the government House leader an opportunity to indicate what the business of the House is likely to be?

On motion by Mr. McKessock, the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last Thursday, pursuant to the rules, I would further indicate today what the business of the House would be for Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

The House will meet tomorrow from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m.; then, after the luncheon break, from 2 p.m. until 6 p.m., with the routine proceedings at 2 p.m. In the morning we will finish this legislation, Bill 202 and 203; if any time is left after that, we will proceed on concurrences that are on the Order Paper—and right through the afternoon session tomorrow—in this order: Attorney General, Solicitor General, Provincial Secretary for Justice, Health, Agriculture and Food, Environment, Natural Resources, Energy, Provincial Secretary for Social Development, Provincial Secretary for Resources Development and Industry and Tourism.

On Thursday, the House will meet at 10 a.m., when we will have the routine proceedings, followed by any concurrences that have not been finished on Wednesday. The House will break for lunch at 1 p.m. and resume at 2 p.m., when we will have the windup speakers in the budget debate, with the vote followed by the supply bill and, hopefully, prorogation by supertime so we can all go home and enjoy Christmas and do our Christmas shopping.

Mrs. Campbell: I would inquire of the government House leader if he is aware that the justice committee is sitting tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. While it is not dealing with justice matters, I understood that by the arrangement of this House we would not be placed in the position of having two matters conflicting at the same time. I would like some clarification.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I presume my friend is referring to the justice committee's consideration of Bill 19 which is, in effect, an educational bill. Therefore, I suppose she is right in that we are conflicting with the estimates of the Attorney General and Solicitor General. If it's in order and we had the unanimous consent of the House, we could allow this to happen, since the matter under consideration in the committee is certainly not a justice matter. Perhaps we could have unanimous consent to allow the House to consider concurrence in the estimates of the Attorney General, if we arrive at that. Actually, we are going to be considering the bills first anyway.

Mrs. Campbell: I'm speaking of the bills.

Mr. Martel: She is speaking of the bills.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Oh, the bills, you're right.

Mrs. Campbell: The Attorney General's bills are before the House.

Mr. Speaker: At this point, that's hypothetical. I'm sure those who are responsible for ordering the business of the House can come to an amicable resolution to the problem, should it arise.

The House adjourned at 10:32 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1979

The House met at 10:03 a.m.

Prayers.

ORDERS OF THE DAY OCCUPIERS' LIABILITY ACT (concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 202, An Act respecting Occupiers' Liability.

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Speaker, I share the concerns of the other members when they say this bill is long overdue coming before this Legislature. It is unfortunate that it has been left until a few days before the House closes down to be brought in for us to have a look at it.

It is very important to the land owners that they be relieved of the liabilities that are sometimes brought on them when somebody crosses their property and unfortunately has a mishap.

I tend to agree with the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson) when he says we have a problem with lawyers. When I listened to the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) condemn the bill for three quarters of an hour, and we then realized the bill was made up by a lawyer, I guess we are in some trouble.

After listening to the member for Lakeshore I can understand why farmers won't allow people on their property. If he were to deliver that speech to all the land owners on the Niagara Escarpment, that would put a complete end to the Bruce Trail. Those who haven't turned them out already probably would do so after they see how hard it is to get relief from liability. Who is going to let people on to their land if they're held responsible?

Under section 1(b)(i) of the bill, where it talks about water, I presume that means farm ponds as well. I built a farm pond a few years ago, and we've had a lot of enjoyment out of that pond. I remember at the time that my wife was very opposed to building the pond because of the fear of somebody drowning in it or in case we would be held liable for something that happened. It is very unfortunate that we would not build that pond and deprive ourselves of the enjoyment of the recreation it provided in swimming and fishing because we feared the liability that would be put on us if somebody trespassed on our property and put us in the position that we could be held liable and sued. I don't think that is proper.

We went ahead and built the pond and often on a summer Sunday afternoon there would be 25 or so neighbours in there swimming.

Mr. Conway: A nice pond it is, I might add.

Mr. McKessock: Yes. The member for Renfrew North also has seen the pond. It provides a lot of entertainment but in no way do I want to be held liable if anybody goes into it and there happens to be an unfortunate accident.

If the land owner is going to be good enough to let a person on his property, surely that person should be there at his own risk. Hunters, trappers and the coon hunters' association who want to be able to go on property are willing to accept responsibility for any risks they take, and they wouldn't consider suing a land owner under any circumstances.

When I listened to the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) last night, I became afraid that if this goes to committee and comes out, the land owner probably will have to hang a first-aid kit on every other tree and maybe supply orange juice if the trespasser becomes fatigued.

Mr. Riddell: Or apple juice.

Mr. McKessock: Or apple juice. I'm very concerned about this bill passing as soon as possible to take this liability off the land owner. If it isn't removed, I can see that private property no longer will be available to anybody for recreational purposes of any kind.

I want to speak in favour of the bill, and I hope it proceeds into law as quickly as possible.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of these two bills with some reservations which I will bring in towards the last of my remarks.

If I could use myself as an example—and I realize I'm not here to make cases for myself

—I think my situation may be identical to the position that a great many farmers find themselves in.

I will explain briefly. I live on the edge of the village of Cedar Springs and because of the nature of my farming, which is largely fruit growing, we have a great many trails, field dividers and roads that we keep in fairly good condition to facilitate the movement of goods and people throughout the farm.

We have a very good relationship with the young people of the village, many of whom work during the season at picking various fruit crops. It's actually a great pleasure to my wife and my family and myself to see the young people making a great deal of use of our roads throughout the summer—couples out for a walk or on horseback. A number of children in the area have horses. There is every sort of recreational vehicle that one could imagine.

I have people saying to me, "Why do you allow these people on your property?" We have sort of an unwritten agreement between us, I guess, that if they don't bother me, I won't bother them. Throughout the years, I can't think of one instance where these people have done any harm to us. Under the present law, I am putting myself at considerable risk in allowing these people to enjoy the property.

As our villages grow and as our rural population becomes larger—and it is becoming larger; I think the figure that was put out recently by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture was that in the last year or two some 200,000 rural severances have been allowed—these people are gradually moving out into the countryside and looking to our land for recreation. Also, we have a very mobile population in this country because of the use of the automobile; so city people are coming out to the country.

Unless you can give farmers some protection in this regard, you're going to see these avenues cut off gradually and, through time, you'll see fences and signs erected stopping that sort of activity. Because farmers and city people have a good relationship and a great interdependence, and because we have good farm legislation in this province, we want to see that relationship strengthened and continued rather than brought to a matter of two warring parties.

I would like to point out another aspect of this. In answer to the maritime members for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) and Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) and the very reasoned arguments they made about the historical building up of our common law and the matter of duty of care, that's one that farmers appreciate.

We listened to them very dutifully and attentively, and we were moved by their arguments.

The difference between Canada and Britain, as I have seen it on a couple of visits to Britain, is that all the fields there are enclosed. There are very few rural residents. As a matter of fact, I spent two days with a government official in Britain who was known as the land agent. It was his job to determine whether people could build or separate lots out in the country.

We found that the law in Britain is so restrictive that they won't let a farmer's son build a house on the farmer's property. That farmer's son has to go to the nearest village to live, and he drives back and forth to the farm. In Canada, we allow farmers' sons and retiring farmers to sever lots, especially under the encouragement of the present Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Henderson). As I read his statements, he would make this even more open and would allow us to have more severances. But in Britain, a farmer's son can't live on the farm; he has to go to the nearest town.

I noticed, particularly in Germany, even the farmer doesn't live out on the land. They live in villages and travel each day to and from their work. It's also true in Asia where, of course, land is under such great pressure to produce food. All the people there live in the villages. They walk to and from their fields.

Mr. Riddell: Maybe there's a lesson to be learned there.

Mr. McGuigan: That's right; it's the value of land. It is certainly a side lesson to be learned. Changing the subject, to respond to the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell), we in this party believe in the preservation of farm land and are willing to fight for it.

Mr. Speaker, we see a difference in the historical relationship between people and land in Britain, particularly, and the relationship between people and land in Canada. One of the reasons, as I have already mentioned, is the matter of mobility in this country—next to the Americans, I guess we are the most mobile people in the world—which brings the two segments of our society sort of in confrontation with each other.

We, in this party, want to protect farmers and farm land as much as we can but, at the same time, we are not inhuman, as has been suggested. I would join my colleagues who at least are willing to listen to the arguments made by people who have a different view and, therefore, we would be glad to entertain these two bills going to committee.

In closing, I would like to point out another reason we see these two bills before us; it's one I've taken a personal part in as a member of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association. I refer to reluctance of judges and police forces to properly enforce the law in the matter of pilferage and theft from farm fields.

Too often, a judge has been inclined to say: "When I was a kid, I jumped over a farmer's fence and stole an apple. It's a boyish trick and, therefore, we're going to dismiss this case." The farmer has gone to a great deal of trouble to bring the person before the court and, after a few attempts of that nature, he decides it isn't worthwhile. There is no protection in the Petty Trespass Act.

I recall an occasion many years ago when I witnessed a person stealing fruit from our orchard. I phoned the police. They traced the car licence number and it turned out to be a rather prominent person—a person in a profession. The reply that came back from the police was: "We won't prosecute this fellow. If you want to prosecute him, that's fine; but we won't."

The police had the evidence; they had gone to his house and they found the apples. He admitted he took the apples and so on, but they wouldn't prosecute. We were supposed to prosecute when the evidence was all gone.

Mr. Eaton: If he had taken them out of a supermarket, he would have been charged with theft.

Mr. McGuigan: That's right.

Those are some of the reasons this bill is before us. Farmers, in their frustration about pilferage, have turned in many cases to look at the legislation in Florida, which gives a fine, as I recall, of $5,000 for trespassing in the orange groves. That doesn't require that you be caught with any goods in your hand. If you stop your car and walk into the orchard—into the grove, pardon me; they don't like them being called orchards—if you walk into the orange grove and charges are laid against you, you face a fine up to $5,000. It's pretty rigidly enforced because of the great number of tourists in that state.

In spite of all the positive things we see in this bill, the fact is that we've been waiting many years for this legislation. I remember being part of the group that brought the case to the then Solicitor General (Mr. Welch). We were asking him to bring to the attention of the judges that they shouldn't give people a medal when they're brought in on pilferage charges. This is something the farmers have been working for for many years.

Farmers are human, too. They have children, and when their children go off the farm and go to the city to go to a theatre—and I think in terms of the tragic accident in the United States in recent weeks in the city of Cincinnati—or to other places, we want to feel that someone has the duty of care to look after them. We recognize that. Because of our humanity and our interest, we're at least willing to listen to arguments that are brought up in that connection.

I wish to assure you, Mr. Speaker, at least as far as this member is concerned and, I believe, as far as our party is concerned, farmers need not fear the hearings that will be held on this act. We're behind it, but we are willing to listen to modifications, to make some adjustments and to make these two acts more acceptable to the public at large.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the members who participated in this debate, although I must admit that I found some comments were somewhat negative and I take some exception to them.

Bill 202 will condense thousands of cases of common law on this confused part of law. Before this debate began, and after having read the legislation and literature, primarily the discussion paper which was produced in May of this year, I was somewhat apprehensive about the bill going through the House at a rapid pace.

I must admit that apprehension was founded on the basis that there were so many profound changes included in such a concise piece of legislation. As a lawyer, I have read so many cases on this particular matter, it's somewhat hard to believe that law can be contained in such a short piece of legislation. I must admit that during the debate my belief that it should be fully vented by a committee was reinforced by both opposition parties.

Mr. Lawlor: With some hesitation, apparently.

Mr. Sterling: No. I indicated at the outset that, if it was the wish of the House that this bill go to the standing committee, I had no objection to it. I will be asking the Speaker, if this bill is given second reading, to refer it to the standing resources development committee.

One area that was brought up during the debate and was of concern to me surrounded the protection of children. In most circumstances a child is protected under the existing bill as drafted. Only in the case of rural land where the entrant is deemed to assume his own risk will the protection not be there. In all other cases the duty of reasonable care shall be the responsibility of the occupier. Be that as it may, I would be quite willing to listen to suggestions by the members of the Legislature with a view to possibly amending this particular area of the bill during the committee stage.

During the debate there was mention of a law case; I know this is not always of great interest to all members of the House, but it was the Veinot case. In all fairness, in looking back at the case, it is somewhat a confused decision in trying to draw exactly what the results of that case did say. I am told that originally, at the trial level, the court found in favour of Mr. Veinot; the Ontario Court of Appeal found against him, and then the Supreme Court of Canada found for him five to four. In reading those judgements it's particularly difficult to come out of that decision with a hard conclusion.

Interestingly enough, this very decision was reversed in this Legislature in 1974 by the Motorized Snow Vehicles Act. I was interested to see what took place during the debate at that time, especially on the part of the third party, which had expressed so much interest in it. I was able to get a copy of the December 21, 1974, Globe and Mail, and I quote out of it: "At one point in the debate, not a single member of the 20-member New Democratic Party was in the House for a period of five minutes." There was very little debate at that point in time by the New Democratic Party about the principles of this particular case. I don't know whether that has just come to the fore or not.

The explanatory note in this bill indicates that it is essentially taken from the Law Reform Commission. That is true, except for section 4, which we have added to their recommendations. We have done that, in our view and, I believe, in the view of many of the members of this Legislature, to keep this co-existence, which has been exhibited in the past between urban and rural residents, continuing on a peaceful basis. It is also to encourage rural residents to provide their private land to urban people to come on their land and to enjoy some of the attributes of rural life. I am convinced that we have taken the right step in putting section 4 in.

The particular section, as basically outlined in the discussion paper of May 1979, has been approved overwhelmingly by both the agricultural community and the recreation associations, the responsible people who are using private land at this time.

Purists in law, academics and legal professors would not like us to put in section 4. But what is pure in law is not necessarily what Ontario is about. I believe, and I think our government believes, that this particular act reflects what Ontario is about. It recognizes urban areas, it recognizes rural areas and it recognizes the undeveloped areas of our province.

Farmers don't read court decisions and we do little to show them how to protect themselves. This act codifies that protection. It tells people who are coming out to the country what is expected of them.

I would like to indicate that this bill was not dumped on us in its entirety on December 11; the white paper in May substantially carried these sections of the bill. The white paper also included, for those who've read it, the actual draft of these two pieces of legislation. We received many responses to this discussion paper. We were receiving those responses until October of this year.

It's interesting to note that one of the changes actually answers one of the concerns of the member for Grey (Mr. McKessock) regarding his fishing pond. We had changed section 1(b)(i) to include water because of some of the responses to that discussion paper. Those responses have included some very significant, although minor, changes to the act. That's how vineyards got into this particular act in terms of protection as well as those who are involved in reforestation, Christmas-tree planting and that kind of thing. Also, there was an amendment made to the other act to include school boards to provide them with a better tool to prevent trespassers from going onto their premises.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad that all speakers from both opposition parties have indicated they are going to support this legislation on second reading. I would like to reiterate that I do take great exceptions to the remarks made about the Attorney General last evening; I think they were uncalled for. I want to reiterate, also, it was at my request; I asked to bring these bills because of my great interest in this matter.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for standing resources development committee.

TRESPASS TO PROPERTY ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurry, moved second reading of Bill 203, An Act to protect against Trespass to Property.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say a few words about the bill, directed right on to it. While most remarks last evening gave general coverage and can't help but cover both pieces of legislation, still this is a departure in a more radical sense than the previous bill which, Lord knows, had its moments and its defects precisely because of its deviations from a now established norm, I thought.

We have no Law Reform Commission report with respect to trespass as such. We have no background studies. This is straight out of Jupiter's forehead—and it ain't Minerva who came out, let me tell my friend. It is a narrow, restrictive, niggling and very punitive type of legislation which I wouldn't have expected to see forthcoming at this time in history from this government. It is setting up all kinds of weird little fandangoes that we are supposed to dance to; the signs and markings in various colours et cetera, which in order to be legal I suppose have to be within a circle of 10 centimetres. Measure it; take your tape with you the next time you go.

Lo and behold, as has been pointed out to me, the whole legislation could very easily be unconstitutional on the basis of its criminality, on the basis of the kinds of penalties being enforced in this legislation. The government is overweaning the sledgehammer effects et cetera to bring about a simple result.

One example is going on to a shopping mall to, say, protest against a particular activity going on in that mall. What would happen if the owners of the mall, or apparently any number of other individuals with some interest in the mall, ordered you off, and you replied, "No, if you want me to come in to buy your wretched goods, you are going to have to listen to me in the process"? They call the police, and you are taken off—but subject to what?

First of all, you are subject to a fine of $1,000—but that is only the beginning. Second, you are subject to damages, if that ensued, up to $1,000. Finally—that ain't the end—you are subject to the costs that could proceed by way of private prosecution. They hire a lawyer, but not using the crown attorney, and proceed against you. You might have to pay the shot on that particular thing too. That is pretty weighty.

If one wanted to bring a blunderbuss to this, one could. But today we are in the area of more sophisticated weapons, although that's not what the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) uses. He uses great 17th-century shot and shell directly off Nelson's flagship. It is unbelievable.

Let's go one step further on this. What is the government really doing? It is not reposing this responsibility in a regular provincial court judge; that is not the first aspect of it. This particular matter could very well be handled by a justice of the peace under the new provincial legislation, the machinery of which is being oiled up at the present moment and taking time. It comes before a justice of the peace. We would hardly want to repose that kind of responsibility in a justice of the peace.

Second, the Attorney General knows it is a very questionable procedure to mix up criminal proceedings in the midst of civil proceedings. The normal procedure, if there are damages done to him or me in any particular way, is to take the thing to the small claims court or the county court and have a trial on that basis with the rules of law, which are quite different from those which apply to civil cases.

But no, the Attorney General rolls the whole thing into a waxen ball and messes everything up. Judges are appointed because they supposedly have some competence, and I have some doubts about the justices of the peace in this regard, to handle criminal jurisdiction and who perhaps over a period of time have picked up some form of sagacity about these types of cases. They need not necessarily be very well acquainted with civil and tortious law.

As I say, the law of negligence has always been difficult; it is tricky. Increasingly, up until this legislation and the previous bill, it was devolving more upon the individual. Greater and greater discretions were being reposed in judges so they could meet the exigencies of each separate case. That is the direction of British law and our law. Common law all over the world is seeking to accommodate itself to the needs of particular individuals' unique situation—and every situation to some degree is unique—whereas 19th-century law applied the blanket. Everybody was placed in a category. The axe fell; heads got chopped off. They're supposed to all look the same when they hit the floor.

There is a total change in orientation; a total change in the vision of what law may do. I like that second vision and I will do every damned thing in my power to promote it, because that seems to me to be where justice lies. It lies as between people. When you try to apply these universal rules and lower them on people's heads et cetera, you get the Procrustean bed: You cut off their toes, you cut off something else—God help us—and they're left a little truncated, bleeding on the bench. That's the tendency of this government at this time in history, to return to and reaffirm that in terms of its legislation. It is happening in bill after bill. It's an authoritarian, lofty and dictatorial point of view, somewhat paternalistic when it happens to have an inch of kindness, patting the children of the world on the head—and the citizens of Ontario.

The citizens of Ontario are sufficiently mature to be able to accept the responsibilities of living with one another. They don't need the government's particular form of patting or petting, or whatever the blazes it is that the government does to people by way of twisting their arms when it is pretending it is soothing their pains.

The government has mixed up the civil and the criminal and given it to the same functionary to dispense in one bundle. That's a retrograde step. That is questionable. It is done very seldom. The only case I know of where it is done at all is in terms of assault, where civil remedies are sometimes given in a criminal court over and above any fine for an assault on a victim et cetera. That's very rare.

If it's given by that judge in that kind of court, the individual who has been assaulted cannot take civil proceedings thereafter. I suppose the same thing applies in this particular context.

In most instances, as far as the rural situation is concerned, no notice of any kind is necessary. I'm not going to take too much exception to that. If a place is enclosed or is obviously used as an orchard, then people ought not to be trespassing on it, particularly if their purpose in trespassing is to do any damage or to steal chattels. A farmer is entitled to be protected in these contexts. I suppose there is a fair amount of pilfering these days and a considerable economic loss.

But when the government comes to saying that notices must be given, it sets up a system which is perhaps even ludicrous in its operation. I don't think it will work; I think it will cause difficulty. If I'm walking along a trail somewhere in the Bruce Peninsula, up in the territory of the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), and I see a yellow marking, I must say to myself, glory be to God, what may I not do here? I'm told the thing I must do is seek out the owner and interrogate him closely as to fishing, walking on my head, sauntering through the bush, perhaps horseback riding—who knows. But one has to go through this process.

I'm sure the owner will love the presence on the doorstep of numerous individuals saying: "Tell me precisely what I may or may not do on these particular premises."

How they run smokescreens, camouflage, et cetera. The tone of this discussion paper takes what I suppose Norman Vincent Peale would call "the power of positive thinking." You know what Adlai Stevenson said about that. He said: "I find St. Paul appealing, but Norman Vincent Peale appalling." So do I. This is the Norman Vincent Peale syndrome borrowed by the psychiatric association, that little department, that back office connected with the Attorney General's ministry.

As I say, the government does all the gyrations and posturings; it's like a gymnastic exercise of just how benevolent it can be. They want to promote and encourage benevolence in the farming communities of this province. They do so by removing the possibilities of suit in an innumerable range of situations et cetera.

Isn't this a weird way of thinking? They're going to make people kinder by not penalizing them somehow or other instead of recognizing a natural openhandedness and ability to accommodate on the basis of wishing to do so for its own sake and not being dragooned in to this state. Over and over again in this paper, this is the position they take. They say the farmers of this province will not permit any access to their lands by way of hiking trails or in a dozen different other ways unless this legislation and the penalties are all removed. I have a higher opinion of farmers than that. I think they can reach accommodations and understandings and allow a commerce between the city and the countryside on better terms than what this sets forth and on what is really a very negative stance and putdown so far as co-operation between the two sectors is concerned. They bend over backwards in all directions to get that vote. They would go to any degree or extent.

It seems to me that if democracy is to function at all there must be some limit as to the perfidiousness and the degree of auto-gyration that takes place to summon a vote. If you're a minority government yearning for the good old days, I suppose it's understandable; but at least in the House it's wise to spell out what the blazes is taking place; what this legislation is all about. It's not a well-framed, balanced, objective seeking to meet the needs of the whole community. It's not that at all. It's a highly partisan piece of business.

As I said last night, and I say it again, it ill behooves the station, office, function and responsibilities of the Attorney General of this province. It isn't his job. He has to learn that he has to overcome that and has to have a wider vision of what is necessary and needed in the province. He is not the Minister of Agriculture and Food. That's the job of the member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson). Let him make the representations in this particular regard, and if he prevails in the matter, so be it. Knowing the member for Lambton, I have no doubt he will prevail; he always does. He uses weight; he's got the bulk behind him to push these clauses. The barricades come down before his presence. I stand open-mouthed before such persuasiveness in most circumstances.

The legislation does have to be perused. It has never had a real opportunity. So far as we in the opposition are concerned, we have seen very little, one way or the other, to show us the real grounds and rationale of section after section and, particularly, the wording in these sections. One could go on, but I think it's better to give somebody else a chance.

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member for Lakeshore is concerned about signing private property. Possibly he is colourblind to start with; but, if people use common sense and had the decency to ask for permission, we wouldn't need any signs.

Under the present legislation, any trespasser is subject to a token fine of about $25 if it can be proved there was trespass, which is next to impossible to do. The farmer or the land owner pays the costs of his legal fees; so there isn't much point in taking someone to court today.

Mr. Lawlor: How about settling for $500; somewhere between $25 and $1,000?

Mr. J. Johnson: The member for Lakeshore seems more concerned about supermarkets than farmers. It's unfortunate the member for Grey-Bruce isn't in attendance today, because he would certainly take exception to the honourable member's remarks about riding roughshod over his riding. It seems very inconsiderate of the kind and friendly constituents of Grey-Bruce that the honourable member would ride over their property without even asking permission. It might be a nuisance to knock at the door to ask permission, but it certainly wouldn't be a nuisance to trample over their fields.

In the Sarnia Observer of Tuesday, April 25, 1978, it says: "Rights of farmers need consideration. One can hardly blame farmers for becoming teed-off with self-righteous hunters when they move in for the shoot. Simply by passing legislation which would have them seek permission from the farmer before landing on his property with boots and bullets just seems sensible.

"There was a concern expressed by the Minister of Natural Resources at that time, Mr. Miller, who stated that farmers, who received no co-operation from hunters and so feel that hunting should not be permitted at all, are apt to go to their local councils and ask for prohibition of the right to discharge firearms. That would eliminate the chance for locals to hunt. It's the old story, that one or two irresponsible hunters can spoil it for the rest. It's up to the hunters to obey the rules and prevent further infringement on their privileges to hunt. Common sense and consideration of the other guy will guarantee that hunters retain all of their privileges, rights and needs."

Basically that's what we're concerned about with this bill, that it's the few rogue hunters who create the problems for the majority. The average farmer and land owner in this province is not opposed to hunters or to anyone who wants to use his land for recreational purposes. All he asks is that they have the common decency to seek his permission before doing so. To me, that sounds quite sensible.

In section 8 of the bill it states, "the legislation will set a ceiling of $1,000 for damages caused by a trespasser." This is an area of concern. I think there's a misunderstanding, and the parliamentary assistant to the minister should explain this portion. Some people have the idea that, if they're awarded $1,000 or any amount less, they can't seek compensation. This is the way I understand it. If they don't accept any compensation, they do have the right to seek redress through court action for a higher amount. I think there's a misunderstanding, and this should be clarified.

This past hunting season there was a problem in Simcoe related to the deer season. The land owners and the farmers objected to the open hunting season. We were quite disturbed the season was open. This is an indication of things to come. If we don't redress the problem that the rural people have, we're going to create a problem for all hunters. This is one area that I think most of the members could agree upon. Surely there is some centre ground where we could resolve this.

I have one letter that I would like to read into the record. It's addressed to me and is from a constituent, I believe, of Mr. McKessock.

"We are writing to you in regard to the bill to amend the Petty Trespass Act. We are in full support of your position to second the bill. We live and farm in the 12th concession of West Luther township. We've had numerous occasions when uninvited and unwelcome hunters have been on our property and when approached, these people seem to think that we are wrong to object to their presence and feel they are within their rights.

"We feel that this situation is unjust and would appreciate any efforts to see the bill through intact. We are both surprised and disappointed that 18 NDP and two Liberal members voted against what seemed to be a fair-minded and responsible solution to the problem."

That was the Petty Trespass Act of the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton), but I think that this present act that we have, Bill 203, is an improvement and with a few minor amendments in committee it will serve the purpose that this party is looking for and, I think, the purpose of the party of the opposition. The third party, of course, will be opposed to it. I would hope that we can pass this in committee.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I suppose most of us who debated these bills last night were out of order because we treated the bills as being companion bills and we made comments pertaining to both bills at the same time. I don't intend to repeat what I said last night other than to again indicate that there was some concern amongst members of our own caucus—and I would say these members had better legal minds than some of us—and they realized this bill affects more than farm land.

It's quite all well and good for those of us who represent farmers to get up and say it's the greatest thing since sliced bread, but we also have to realize there are some parts of the bill that members such as the members for St. George and Lakeshore are really concerned about. This is one of the reasons we have no objections to the bill going to committee.

If it does go to committee, I know full well that the spokesmen for the farmers are going to make recommendations. I think they are being more human than we give them credit for because I know that as far as the constitutionality of the bill is concerned, where this heavy fine of $1,000 is being imposed—which would indicate that maybe it does approach criminality or comes under the Criminal Code—the farmers are saying, "Okay, let's put a fine of $25 on the first offence and $100 on the second offence."

They're being quite considerate. I know the farmers are saying written permission or positive entry, signing, would be the only defence against trespass. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture rejects the proposal that trespass be determined by land status or by the land's current use. This is a recommendation they're going to be making if it goes to committee.

As far as colour coding of nonstatus land is concerned, farmers deem that to be impractical. When we're talking about posting, the OFA recommends that posting not be necessary. If owners wish to do so, it should be permissible. Part of the problem as far as the OFA is concerned is the nonexistence of a code to specify the legal meaning of signs in current use. The recommendation is that no signs be necessary because experience shows they're too easy to remove.

I alluded to that last night when I was debating the matter. Farmers who in the past have posted their land with "no trespassing" signs have found that these signs have simply been taken down. The OFA also proposed that legal meaning be given to markings in two colours, red and yellow. It is recommending that farmers should not have the responsibility for posting their land. It is further recommending that posting of trails be the responsibility of the organization contracting for trail use, such as a snowmobile club. The fact of the matter is a farmer is not going to go out and start painting his fence posts or some other mark with red or yellow paint. He simply is not going to do it, any more than he is going to post.

Mr. Eaton: He doesn't have to.

Mr. Riddell: Yes, but all land isn't cultivated and farmers are concerned about forested lands. They are concerned about their woodlots. In the summer, if trespassers are going to go through, there could well be the danger of fire being set to a woodlot. Not all land is cultivated and I think they even made reference to it when they were looking at the discussion paper the Attorney General sent out.

I might say there has been very little change made to the bills we are debating, Bills 202 and 203, from what appeared in the discussion paper. As a result, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture has made a recommendation that the prohibition of entry without notice would apply to forested land. It is recommended that forested land be treated in the same way as cultivated land. There is an excessive danger from fires that could destroy farm woodlots. Posting may be easier, but this should not be a reason for making it mandatory.

These are all recommendations the federation of agriculture is prepared to make if the bill goes to committee. Inasmuch as those of us who are speaking for the farmers have said we would have liked to have seen this legislation introduced much earlier in the year, go to committee and be brought back to the House and passed before the House prorogued, this is now impossible. The farmers are not going to object to having it go to committee so some of their recommendations can be heard, as well as the concerns of our good legal people, the members for Lakeshore and St. George. I am sure they will be most anxious to appear in committee and to make the changes that they feel should be made.

With these remarks, I am pleased to see that all parties are going to vote for the two bills on second reading. We certainly are going to do all we can to see they get down to committee after the Christmas break and then back into the House, so we can deal with them first thing after the new session starts and get them passed.

Mr. Warner: As my good colleague from Lakeshore has pointed out, it is difficult to determine where this bill came from and through what strange process of logic they have arrived at this bill.

Yes, there is a problem. Everyone recognizes that. Farmers have legitimate concerns, urban dwellers who enjoy recreational pursuits have particular concerns. There is a problem and the minister should attempt in a logical, reasonable way to solve the problem. In his feeble attempts to solve it, he has created an additional problem which may be one he didn't even contemplate. I suspect, by the hastily drafted legislation, this is so.

Quite frankly, I don't know how we are going to repair the bill. I am quite anxious to work in a committee and attempt in some way to salvage this dreadful piece of legislation, but I don't know how we are going to do it. I think what has been done, inadvertently or otherwise, is the creation of a very serious problem for the trade union movement. It is a very serious problem as well for people who like to express their social conscience on occasion.

Section 4 particularly makes it possible to preclude picketing. It is bad enough that we have a peculiar situation of a private property with public access, such as shopping malls—public access except that the owner may deny access to some members of the public he's not terribly fussy about. In other words, for those of us who took part in the grape boycott a couple of years ago, the owners of plazas saw fit not to allow access for those members of the public who were demonstrating in a social cause.

I don't think the confusion over the private and public aspect of property with regard to malls has been decided in a definitive way. The government intrudes on that problem; it compounds it; it makes it worse. I would take from that section that it would be perfectly in order for the owner of the mall or the tenants to post a sign indicating there's no picketing allowed. That would stick.

Second, all of us know the serious problems over first-contract disputes in this province. Remember the infamous Fleck Manufacturing Company and the difficulty there in picketing to begin with. This makes it worse. Think of the equally infamous Radio Shack people, that delightful group of Texans who try to make sure the workers will not have the right to a contract and how they could make use of this law to preclude people from their rightful—I take it to be a right to be able to demonstrate your opinion about the owner.

The minister has created a serious problem. I cannot in good conscience support this bill. I cannot possibly see how we can turn this bill around. Perhaps the parliamentary assistant can explain, or can provide some guarantees in the bill. Perhaps he has some magic way of providing guarantees in here so unionized workers on a legal strike or those seeking first-contract settlement or involved in social picketing are protected. But it would seem to me there is some immense confusion between the rights granted in this bill and the rights we assume are there under the Labour Relations Act. I just don't think we can resurrect it.

My other colleagues have spoken about the signs, all the different markings and so on. This is going to be a fascinating exercise across the province as different-coloured markings and signs are posted here, there and everywhere. It's going to be terrific fun. On my property I'll put up a little blue sign that says, "No Tories Allowed." That's what that marking will mean.

The next thing the minister will want to do is to start marking the animals. Why doesn't he paint all the deer pink so people know these are deer coming along?

Mr. Eaton: Some still wouldn't know.

Mr. Warner: They could probably colour them black.

Mr. Gaunt: Signal lights.

Mr. Warner: Some of the farmers have had to paint c-o-w on the side of some of their animals, so that hunters can distinguish them from the deer.

It's no wonder that people make fun of it. It's silly; it really is. That entire section is really quite silly. I am absolutely astounded at how the parliamentary assistant can rush in here a couple of days before prorogation and bring forward a hastily thought-up piece of legislation emanating from who knows where. It certainly didn't come out of the law reform commission. It came out of somebody's thoughts somewhere.

And do you know why it is here, Mr. Speaker? The parliamentary assistant certainly doesn't deserve any kind of attack. He wouldn't function the way the Attorney General does—I don't believe he would. This is here for one reason and one reason only: because our dear Attorney General wants to have a very high profile with the farm community and he would like to get lots of votes, not just for the Tory party, but in a little thing called a leadership contest.

Isn't that what it is all about? The dear Attorney General would like to garner some very solid support from those Tory constituents who are farmers?

Mr. Cunningham: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the bill about a leadership convention.

Mr. Warner: Maybe there should be. Then I could vote against it.

I understand clearly why the bill is here. It is window dressing. The bill is just fatally flawed. It does not solve the perceived problem the member has told us about and it creates worse problems. It is my intention to vote against this bill.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say, perhaps by way of preamble, I do seriously regret the fact the Attorney General is not here. Again, that is no denigration of the member for Carleton-Grenville who has carried almost all of the Attorney General's bills with a great deal of expertise and he is doing his level best with this one, and I understand it. But I am growing very concerned that we have a bill which is, in essence, a divisive bill, and the Attorney General as a lawyer, must understand that.

The fact that it is proposed the bill go to the resources committee is an indication that this bill has been brought in for only one purpose and that is to try to redress the very real wrongs the farming community has suffered as a result of those who carelessly, wantonly or whatever, trespass upon their lands.

Quite apart from other matters, it is significant in this bill that many of its requirements, many of the signings and so forth provided, are not open to people living in urban municipalities by reason of bylaws which preclude this kind of posting. For example, I believe as firmly as I can there should be legislation to protect the farming community. I am ashamed to think the bill is necessary because of those who are not members of that community, who treat that community with, at least in some instances, thoughtlessness, in others, sheer contempt. I do not support that position.

I have very grave concerns even about the constitutionality of this bill. I would like to be able to debate that kind of thing with the person who is responsible for the bill before us. I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, that legislation of this kind, important and necessary as it is for the farming community, should be brought forward so late in the session, when very real rights and very real concerns are caught in a catch-22 situation, in order to resolve the problems of the farming community.

I have been concerned that throughout the debate on both bills I have seen what amounts to almost two Ontarios, because those who speak on behalf of the bill from the farming community obviously understand its importance, obviously want to get it through, obviously feel that these are both bills for the farming community as indeed they are, but they should not be so all-embracing that they do affect carelessly other rights.

The old doctrine in criminal law of mens copā or mens rea are really wiped out in this bill, which has its quasi-criminal aspects. I find it very, very difficult and I have stated so before, but because I know of the necessity of it I am prepared to support it at this point with the very real commitment to doing everything I can to try to overcome the flaws in the bill as we discuss it in committee.

Sometimes perhaps people feel there are too many lawyers in the Legislature.

Mr. Lawlor: Jack Johnson does.

Mrs. Campbell: Perhaps that may seem to a great many people to be true today. However, I think those of us who have that training owe a duty to try to bring to these bills whatever we can of our kind of training and our kind of experience.

I look forward to the debate in the committee to see if we can improve this bill to the point where it does protect the farming community without creating very real problems for others. It seems to me that the Attorney General might have addressed the matter in a different fashion so he could have redressed the wrongs of the rural community without, at the same time, creating problems for others in this province who do come under the bill and who are affected by the bill.

I want to make it clear that I think anyone who is trespassing on agricultural land and who refuses to get off should have no protection from me or anyone else. I think perhaps the parliamentary assistant may himself—because he, too, is a lawyer—be as torn as I have been in trying to view the matter on two basic issues and from two basic points of view. I would hope that he who was so helpful when we were dealing with the Provincial Offences Act and other pieces of legislation in the continuing absence of the Attorney General would give thought to those concerns which have been expressed here. Perhaps we may all work together to bring in a bill which will be effective, without denying rights to those who are not members of the farming community.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about one particular facet of the bill which is of concern to me and to underline to the parliamentary assistant, in the absence of the Attorney General, the nature and extent of my concern and why, at least in part, my caucus has decided that we should vote against this bill on second reading.

I'm rather pleased with the change in the tone of the debate this morning over what took place last night. I always welcome the contributions made by the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel, by the member for Carleton-Grenville, by the member for Middlesex and by the member for Huron-Middlesex, because there is a sense now that we are recognizing that it is extremely difficult, in talking about land in Ontario, to distinguish rural land from urban land in any definitive or real sense. I know the problems which are involved in that question, as we had similar problems with respect to the assessment of farm property as distinct from some other kind of property.

I think there is a sense that these bills, while they may have very specific and special application to protect the individual farmer who is farming his property, nevertheless have an overriding general application across the province which is of the utmost importance.

My colleagues, the members for Lakeshore and St. George and others have spoken about some of the very real concerns related to the bill, as to its constitutionality, as to the problems which may be involved in connection with it. I wanted to spend just a few minutes addressing my remarks to the interface which always exists between the rights of property and the liberties of the subject.

In Canada we do not speak very much of civil rights; we speak more of civil liberties, but there is the same connotation. The rights of property and the interface of those rights with the liberties of people are extremely important. I just do not know the answer to it and that's why we were anxious to have a clarification of it in committee, so that we have an opportunity to discuss those matters. We were also concerned because the bill itself does not appear to recognize the nature of that problem. Therefore, we were perforce required to agree to vote against the bill.

I want to talk about a term which is generally perhaps not known in the farm community in the same sense in which it is known in the urban areas. I want to talk about a term which perhaps has connotations of approval or disapproval, depending on which side of the fence you view it. I want to use it today in a neutral sense. It is the term "boycott."

I want to couple with the term boycott the political boycott. By political I do not mean partisan political politics; I'm talking about political in the sense of the relationship between people who are concerned about matters in the society in which they live and wish to have an opportunity to persuade others to take a particular course of action.

I'm sure the member for Carleton-Grenville and all the other members will give me credit for saying I am talking about the legitimate persuasion of other people. I'm not talking about coercion. I'm not talking about intimidation. I'm not talking about violence. I'm not talking about any form of illegitimate activity in relation to persuasion. I'm not specifically talking about labour relations, although this bill has very important connotations for the whole question of the right to picket and the right to provide a picket for information in labour disputes.

Maybe in committee, the labour movement will be anxious to make some representations about it, I do not know. But I'm not speaking directly about labour relations, I'm speaking more of what this bill appears to do and that is to delegate to a private owner of property the right to determine whether in those areas of that private property that are otherwise open to the public for general use by invitation such as my colleagues have referred to—the shopping malls, the shopping plazas, the large conglomerations of property where there are a number of stores and where there is a general invitation to the public to come in and use the common areas and use the individual entrances to the shops and businesses to conduct their business. To the extent that concentration takes place, it becomes extremely important in the exercise of the right of political boycott.

I use that term although for the member for Wilson Heights (Mr. Rotenberg) and, I assume, the chief whip of the Tory party, it may cause a certain degree of intellectual indigestion to even countenance there is such a thing as the right of political boycott. It is a right of freedom of expression. It is a right of freedom of speech. It is a right not to be exercised in a vacuum but to be addressed to one's fellow citizen to induce that fellow citizen to participate with you in withholding your trade for a particular reason.

We're all mature enough to understand that one of the characteristics of our society is the increasing concentration of economic power in the marketplace and that the number of countervailing means available to the individual citizen to bring attention to that concentration of power and to express the view that perhaps that power is being used unwisely or abusively is a very limited right at best and often ineffectual. But the very limited nature of that right and the degree of its efficacy in any situation means that an assembly must be careful to ensure that a bill such as the bill before us will protect that right.

I believe the rights of individuals with respect to their civil liberties, if faced with a confrontation with the right of property, must prevail over the right of property. But I am anxious, as all of us must forever be anxious, to make certain that kind of confrontation does not take place. The moment that takes place, then you have to use repressive measures to preserve order in the society. I am concerned this bill invites that kind of confrontation which makes an almost-immediate and direct requirement of resort to violence and the need to preserve law and order through the exercise of the police power an inevitable consequence of the bill.

I assure those interested in this bill I know of no way we can protect that right. We may have to use some kind of simplistic system of saying if it is a corporate owner of property, the corporate owner must be restricted in the way he can infringe upon civil liberties. Perhaps that would pick up the great bulk of the areas of the shopping malls and the shopping plazas that are concerned.

Mr. Kerrio: That's discrimination.

Mr. Renwick: I know my friend likes to say "discrimination." I find it difficult to discriminate against a mythical character known as the corporation which has no existence in law or in substance in our society. It's a form of insubstantial entity which we have created and which some people think walks, talks, moves and has its being, but it doesn't. It doesn't exist except in the—[11:30]

Mr. Kerrio: There are humans who pay the bills behind you, Jim. That's the reality of it all.

Mr. Renwick: I suppose that means that all taxes come from the people. We agree with that. We just disagree about the amount that comes from some people as distinct from those who pay the bulk of the taxes.

Mr. Kerrio: That's your little dream world.

Mr. Renwick: I find it difficult to comprehend. Perhaps the member for Niagara Falls sometime would enlighten me as to why Shell Canada pays no income tax in Canada. Would he like to do that now or later?

Mr. Kerrio: I'm talking about my little corporation, that's real and producing.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Riverdale has the floor. If the member for Niagara Falls wishes to participate at a later time, I'll allow it.

Mr. Renwick: I enjoy the comments of the member for Niagara Falls so much that I always allow him to divert me from the main purpose of my comments.

Perhaps if I could be relatively elementary about it, a political boycott means that I want to withhold my trade from a particular organization in order to achieve a particular political purpose in a peaceful way. I know that in a democracy a good part of my ability to achieve that goal is in my ability to talk to other people about my concern. I also know that the message is the important part of what the political boycott is about.

The message is conveyed in many ways; we are all familiar with them—by signs, by picketing, by peaceful demonstration, by handbills, by intercourse with the person you are trying to persuade to adopt your view to effect a particular purpose, usually an economic purpose.

I suppose the classic example in our society was one of the very few successful boycotts that has taken place in our time, that is the grape boycott. Many of us participated in this boycott which in the conscience of people, even though they didn't perhaps agree with the political boycott, did affect very much the conduct of other people in a situation. The member for Niagara Falls will remember we were talking about the migrant farm workers in California at that time. We were able by the political boycott, each in our own small way, to contribute in some way to remove that particular injustice.

The problem came about that the Petty Trespass Act was used for the purpose of prohibiting that form of activity. It's that delicate interface that I want to make certain in the committee hearings is dealt with in an effective and intelligent way. Virtually every political boycott includes an effort to induce other persons, by conversation, by handbills, by picketing, to withhold one's trade for the achievement of a particular objective. The only way you can do that is when you have access to the person at the point at which that person is going to deal. You can say to that person, "We would like you to consider this when you are dealing with this organization or product. We want you to consider this concern which we may have."

I do not think it is too much to say that there may very well be situations develop in the future, as very nearly occurred in Ontario in the 1960s in which the farm community as such may be as equally anxious and concerned to exercise their right of political boycott as we perhaps in the urban areas are somewhat more prone to do for the purposes of the achievement of a political objective. All of us remember the time when the tractors came across into the city and up into the Queen's Park area in order to effect their political protest.

Mr. Eaton: On public property.

Mr. Renwick: On public property. There may very well be a time—I hope it doesn't come; I hope the reconciliation of interest will always prevent it from coming—when members of the farm community may want to be able to contact the customer in the shopping plazas in the Metropolitan Toronto area to bring to the attention of the buyers of farm products the problem of the farmer with respect to those products and the way in which they are being marketed or perhaps the way in which the farm community may on occasion feel they have been exploited. They may want to induce their fellow citizens to at least be available to them to understand that there's a community of interest between the consumer of farm products and the producer.

I don't think it's too far-fetched to say that may very well occur at some particular point in time if there is any validity to the way in which both sides of the populace, both the producer and the consumer, is exploited through the supermarket system. We will await the report about that matter.

I just want to close my remarks on this topic to say to the member for Carleton-Grenville that I really am anxious that he understand that there is a civil liberties interface of this bill with the rights of property which requires attention. We want to find a solution to that problem for a number of reasons, but for the principal reason that this bill is silent in its recognition of that problem. There was no recognition of that problem at the time when this bill was introduced. There was little, if any, recognition of that problem at the time when the law reform commission and the predecessors of this bill came into existence. There was very little realization that we cannot allow, by means of signs or otherwise, the owners of private property to exclude from the common areas of places and shopping malls and plazas where the public is invited those people who come there for a legitimate political boycott purpose to induce their fellow citizens to withdraw.

Mr. Speaker, you cannot leave to the private owner of the property to make that kind of decision as to what kind of communication will take place between those he has invited to come on to his property for his gain and for his profit. You cannot say that at Christmas time Santa Claus is allowed, but a member of the public who wishes to protest about the exploitation of someone in the society, or about the production of some product, will not be allowed. You can't allow the benign and useful and beneficial public body, such as the Salvation Army or others, to make appeals on the public property and deny the right to go on to public property of people who have an equally humanitarian and deep concern related to a political objective, which can be achieved only by some inducement to withhold their services because of the pressure which can be brought against the congregations of economic power, which are one, if not the major threat to the kind of democracy that we have.

There is much more in common with the concerns that we all, as citizens, be it in the rural or urban community, have to see that this bill and the bill which we debated last night are properly and adequately dealt with, than to divide the people of the province, because there are special considerations which we all recognize as applicable to the farm community and for which exceptions must be made, just as we think there are exceptions that must be made in these bills to protect something called a correlative interest of urban people in the exercise of their rights.

If my colleague the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) were here, he would speak as he has always spoken in this assembly to recognize the concern of the farm community about the legitimate needs in a changing society for protection against damage to property, depredation and the unlicensed and unlawful exercise by people of their supposed rights. Everybody understands that. I cannot express it as forcibly or as knowledgeably as my colleague from York South could.

When we were talking about these bills prior to his absence from the assembly, he clearly brought to the attention of the assembly the fundamental and basic concerns of the farm community as expressed through the Ontario Federation of Agriculture about the importance of these bills. I am glad to see the obvious political advantage, in the funny way in which this assembly operates, which was thought to be achieved by the introduction of these bills in the dying days of this session, will not be achieved. All of those matters fortunately will now subside and we will be able to deal with these two bills in a committee where these legitimate concerns can be reconciled.

In the reconciliation of those concerns, we may have to look at some very fundamental elements of what we are talking about. My colleague from Lakeshore clearly expressed to the House the dangers involved in confusing concepts in bills and mixing them all together into one muddle and posing that muddle to the already overlaid courts as a solution, when it will compound the problem in the long run much more than to have left the slow but labourious adjustments of the common law and the courts to this question of reconciliation of property rights with civil liberties.

Mr. Speaker, I have gone on as long as I wish to go on. I have tried to relate only to the one aspect, but I hope no one will think we have but a single-minded concern. The member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson) was really not trying to confront the farm community against the users of the shopping malls. I recognize in the give-and-take of the debate it may have sounded that way, but we must all now recognize the commonality of our concern about both bills.

I have very real questions about whether or not what may have been a solution 20 years ago is now being put forward to us as a solution at a time of immense change in the full conception of the relative use by varying members of the community of the property within Ontario, be it publicly or privately owned; be it owned by corporations or by individuals; be it owned by the very personalized corporation of my colleague the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) or be it owned by the non-personal amorphous bodies known as the larger corporations which do not have that personal identification that the corporation to which the member for Niagara Falls refers had.

It is absolutely essential that we have and invite the widest possible submissions to the committee to hear these bills. These bills, like so many others, once passed become part of the fabric of the law of the province which is likely to remain unchanged for the same length of time as the Petty Trespass Act has remained unchanged. It behoves us to treat it in that way and not for any partisan, political purpose.

Mr. Kerrio: I shall be just a few moments. Earlier, the Speaker suggested that rather than interject when the member for Riverdale was speaking I should stand in my place and make my position very clear. I will so do.

When honourable members who are learned in the law stand in their place and talk about corporations, it conjures up visions of Exxon, Shell and all kinds of huge corporations that are very impersonal in what they do. The reason I interjected when the member was speaking was I wanted to bring the point to the assembly that for every one of those large corporations there are literally thousands of very small, personal corporations. I happen to be involved in one with my son.

In such cases there is no involvement of a corporate structure that completely protects the individual from any kind of reality. Beyond the corporate structure, there exists for the individual a very personal involvement: a putting on the line, sometimes, of everything he has, even to the extent of personally guaranteeing to the bank the collection of accounts receivable. While on the books such businesses may appear as corporations, in reality there are very many people out there in our society who do not enjoy all the protection of a corporate structure.

I say that to the member with respect, because he and I exchange on many occasions differences of opinion. But I think in this particular instance it should be clearly on the record that one must make that definitive kind of description when talking about corporations. I wanted to get that on the record because I think it is very important to the future of many small corporations in Ontario.

Mr. Acting Speaker: You were invited to put that on the record, but it has very little to do with the substance of the bill.

Mr. Kerrio: It does in a way, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Your point has been made. The member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Gaunt: As one who represents a farm community I just wanted to record my support for this bill and its companion bill, the Occupiers' Liability Act.

I know during the past number of years a great many rural property owners, especially farmers, have had concerns regarding the free and quiet possession of their property. We have had a lot of trouble in this respect in the farm community. I think the assembly has to understand that and from the tone of the debate, that understanding is pretty widespread.

I realize the difficulties with the bill. When one is talking about competing interests with respect to property rights and civil liberties, as my friend from Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) did, there are bound to be concerns in what he called the "interface" between those two aspects. I understand and appreciate that. I don't have enough legal expertise to determine whether the bill is constitutional or not. I don't know that; I will have to leave that to my legal friends.

I can understand the concerns of my friend from Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) with respect to picketing. I understand that all picketing doesn't take place on public property; some of it does take place on private property.

Surely those things can be resolved. We have to understand the problem from the point of view of the rural communities, from the farmers' point of view. People do trespass; they do destroy property, cut fences, leave gates open, destroy livestock. Surely that has to be addressed. After all, the property owner does have some rights under common law and I think where circumstances point to the abuse of those rights it is up to this Legislature to address those problems. Indeed, if everyone respected the person and property of everyone else, we wouldn't need this legislation, we wouldn't need most legislation in this House, but it doesn't happen. The human being, the type he or she is, means that doesn't always apply, and so we have to come in with legislation of this nature to try and address a very real problem in what is basically a rural constituency.

I understand the problems—at least, the distinction between rural property and urban property. I understand the attitudes between urbanites and rural people as it applies to the use of property in the country, but at the same time I think we have to understand that the property owner in the country does have rights and those rights should include the protection from trespass where that trespass is going to interfere with the operation of that property, with the conduct of the business taking place on that property and so on.

I appreciate the tone of conciliation, even sensitivity and understanding, that was exhibited by the member for Riverdale. With that kind of attitude I think these bills can go to committee and we can come up with a better bill, a better bill in both cases, that will take these competing interests into account. I certainly look forward to that. Having said that, I want to underline again that I do support the intent of the bills and it is just a question of coming up with the best possible bill to achieve the purposes which we desire in this respect.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly this morning on one of the aspects of this Bill 203 that has been brought up by the member for Riverdale and that is the question of the secondary boycott. I would like to speak for the farm communities and give their views on the secondary boycott.

First of all, I would certainly stand with the member as to the rights of people to withhold their services, to join labour unions, to have the protection of the Labour Relations Act to withhold their services, to carry on informational picketing and the right to determine whether or not they are going to make certain sacrifices in their income for the gains they hope to achieve in the long run. That is a conscious decision they make and they don't always win. They make a sacrifice in doing that. I certainly stand with them in their legislative ability and in their courage and in their resolve to do that.

For instance, at a strike that might occur in the auto factories the organizers persuade the workers to withdraw their services, to stop receiving their wages and to stop manufacturing cars. They don't do it at the point of the auto dealership. They don't say, "We will produce all these cars, we will get our wages for making the cars and then we will run around to the auto dealership and try to stop them from being sold at that point."

There is a real difference between strike action and the right of people to organize and withhold their service and the secondary boycott, whereby the product is grown—and these products are of course, of a seasonal nature; you have only one or two crops a year, perhaps two crops a year in the southern states but even there in the case of grapes it is one crop a year—people produce that crop, it is shipped across the country and thousands of miles away from the site of the real problem it comes under a secondary boycott. As I understand it a secondary boycott is an illegal act, at least in the United States. I am not sure what legislation there is in Ontario. I simply want to point out there is a difference between withholding one's labour and taking part in a secondary boycott.

Speaking for the farm communities in Ontario and especially those in the fruit and vegetable sector, in which I am a producer and know some of the problems, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, they do not support the secondary boycott. When it comes to passing legislation that will better protect farm labour, we are with the members to our left. We will pass that legislation.

The member for Riverdale will likely be surprised to learn that this member has taken part in a picket line. Quite a number of years ago the tomato growers of this province decided to withhold the contracting of their tomatoes. We did it at the source though. We said to the companies, "We will not plant these tomatoes unless you agree to a certain price per ton." We won that refusal to contract by going to the growers, telling our story, by picketing the offices where the contracts were being written, but we did it at the source. The farmers involved were prepared to take that gamble as to whether they were going to win or lose and whether to suffer or gain economically. We didn't sow the crop then run around and say later on that customers hundreds of miles away couldn't buy that crop.

This is a very fundamental point and when the fight comes as to the ability to carry on a secondary boycott, I would want the members of the third party to not be under any illusions as to where I stand and as to where many of the members of this party would probably decide to stand when they have looked at the issues.

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Speaker, I stand to support this bill, An Act to protect against Trespass to Property, and I am pleased to see the fine in the bill has been raised to $1,000. In the past a mere $25 fine hasn't in any way stopped an individual from continuing to trespass. He may be going out of the property carrying that amount of fish or apples or whatever. If he is fined $25 it doesn't restrict him from turning around and doing it all over again. The $1,000 fine will be more of a deterrent to trespassers on private property. Raising the fine to that amount also shows a little more respect for private property.

I have received concerns from people that they will have to post bush and forest property in order to keep trespassers out or to let them know they aren't welcome there. On the other hand, I have received concerns from people who feel forest and bush should be free for people to travel in unless posted. These concerns come from hunters and the coon hunting association, who don't do any damage to the property. They point out the hardship in or the impossibility of getting permission from land owners in certain parts of Ontario where there is much dense bush and ownership of the land is hard to determine.

I'm pleased that farm land has been exempt from the posting of signs. With this bill, a person will have to receive permission from the land owner before being able to go on farm land.

The Attorney General's parliamentary assistant, the member for Carleton-Grenville, did point out to me this morning that farm ponds would be covered under the liability part of this companion bill. The same thing in this bill points to premises as covering water, too. It would be necessary to have farm ponds listed under section 3(1)(a) when they talk about the premises and those exempt from having to be posted in order to restrict trespassers. I hope farm ponds would be added to that list of gardens, fields and other land under cultivation. Then it would be a known fact that it is illegal to trespass on or near a pond without permission.

I can't see the point of saying that ponds are covered under the description of premises and then leaving it out of section 3(1). I hope the parliamentary assistant will make note of that.

I want to support this bill and again say it is long overdue. I hope it will receive fast passage through committee.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the fact these bills are before us and getting what appears to be unanimous support in principle I believe is to the credit of my colleagues, the members for Huron-Middlesex and for Middlesex. They have really pushed this pretty hard. The reason for it has been the unwillingness of the government to take the initiative in a matter which obviously the farm community felt should be acted upon.

It's interesting to note the law reform commission recommended the concept of occupier's liability in 1972. That's quite a while for that sort of thing to be sitting around, being thought of. The thing that brought it to public attention more than anything else was a well-known case where intruders, disregarding "No Trespassing" signs, were injured on snowmobiles.

Mr. Lawlor: There was no sign.

Mr. Nixon: Anyway, the farm owner was held responsible in the courts because of the injury. I'm very glad to see the principle of the limit to which the farm owner or the property owner must protect people who intrude in that way.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, once again—and I guess this is only the second time in all these years the member for Lakeshore and I do not see precisely eye to eye—there has been great delay in bringing this forward. Naturally, I'm always interested in hearing our colleagues learned in the law express their concerns. They will be able to bring forward amendments which will perhaps purify the statute of anything that would transgress or trespass upon that purity of the common law that we hear so much about.

I don't want to appear in any way to dismiss the importance of those concepts, because all of our legislation is based on that. I feel certain that when we examine these bills in committee, there will be sufficient alternatives so that the democratic process will hold sway.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that once we accept the importance of the supremacy of the justice in the common law members, at their peril, will interfere with the concept and principle of these bills themselves. Any further delay should receive the kind of political punishment we all know about. I'm sure the bills will be approved in principle now and I hope when we resume in the spring the committee will be able to report those refinements which will mean the House can enthusiastically give them third reading and proclamation without undue delay.

Mr. Sterling: First of all, I would like to thank the members who participated in the debate on this bill. I must say I found the debate a little easier to follow this morning than I did last night when I was quite often diverted.

I would like to indicate that, basically, this bill only reinforces existing legislation. It has three basic thrusts in it. First, it takes the provisions of the Petty Trespass Act to property from the trespasser and reinstates them in the legislation. Second, it provides higher penalties against a trespasser who is convicted and it also inserts into the criminal proceeding a civil remedy at the same time. Third, it provides a mechanism whereby people who own land in the rural area and in the city know whether they have to sign their property and what kind of signing has legal stature.

Going back to the first point, in talking about the Petty Trespass Act at this time it is my understanding that section 4 does not change the existing law. I would also like to indicate that my understanding of the existing law in relation to picketers was in a case heard in 1976, or decided in 1976 by the Supreme Court of Canada. It was the case of Harrison and Carswell in Manitoba and it was based on that province's Petty Trespass Act. In that case it was decided that a shopping centre owner could withdraw his consent to people coming on to the public portion of the shopping centre. That is my understanding of what the law is today. Section 4 does nothing to change that particular law. If that law was going to be changed, I suggest it should be changed under the labour law, as such, to deal with the picketing issue.

Section 2(1) provides for a person who is not acting under the authority of another law. The other provisions relate to the penalties against a trespasser. If he is authorized by another law, a picketing law or for instance if surveyors are given permission under the Surveyors Act to enter land, then these particular provisions wouldn't apply to that individual. It's our feeling that in the case of the picketing law it would be more apropos to deal with that issue under labour legislation.

Mr. Renwick: Let me reiterate. The political boycott is much wider in context than the labour law.

Mr. Sterling: The political boycott which was brought forward by the member for Riverdale perhaps would not be involved in the labour law but it could be dealt with in committee; we could talk about it at that time. I think there may be some very basic differences in philosophies over that issue as to property and civil rights.

I want also to indicate that this law relates not only to rural people. One of the sections which I hope would help solve a problem which many schools in the urban areas have had with both vandalism and trespassers going on to their property relates to those sections I talked about concerning the penalties and damages that can be awarded by a court.

In talking about those penalties I want to make it clear and put on the record that the fine is not necessarily $1,000 as some of the members have indicated. It's up to $1,000; of course, it's at the discretion of the judge. The damages that can be awarded are up to $1,000. That limitation is put on there because of our concern about the process it is going through, whether or not a criminal or a quasi-criminal hearing can effectively deal with a very expensive or involved civil litigation hearing.

We do appoint provincial judges to hear cases in the small claims court. I don't know if that is the thrust of the constitutional argument; but if it is the appointment of those judges, then I cannot follow the constitutionality argument on that basis.

In the past there's been little justice for an occupier who wants to stop someone from trespassing on his property. It's been extremely difficult for him to bring that person before the court and seek redress. I think that's what we have tried to put into the context of this bill, not only in terms of the penalty, but also in terms of being able to seek in one process some redress for a small amount of damage and to obtain the legal costs which he has incurred for bringing that person to court, if he is right.

There hasn't been very much justice in the past, I believe, in terms of the occupier having the ability to bring that person to court. I think this will meet some of that concern.

In relation to the signing provisions and to those definitions of land which doesn't need signing, I would say with respect to the member for Huron-Middlesex—and to two of our members, the members for Middlesex and Wellington-Dufferin-Peel—the idea that all land need be posted is probably not practical in other areas of the province. It may be practical in southern Ontario, but when you get into eastern and northern Ontario there is a problem because a lot of rural land is vacant or abandoned—the poorer rural land. Quite frankly, most of the people who own that land are not that concerned with people crossing it. So to exclude that amount of recreation land would maybe in reverse do more harm than providing the other avenue. [12:15]

I know signing is a problem, but these signing conventions have been proposed to us by the trail associations and we feel these are the best that can be put forward. I think if the members read the legislation closely, they can't make that much fun of the signs—if they look at them with some degree of seriousness.

Mr. Bradley: Speaking of signs, do you have your lawn signs ready?

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, in my riding we don't need lawn signs.

In the past the Petty Trespass Act has been declared constitutional. It's our view that this particular act does not really go that far away from the Petty Trespass Act and quite frankly I have a great deal of difficulty following the thrust of the allusion to the constitutional arguments that have been thrown up here in the Legislature. I'll be anxious to hear those in committee.

Both of these bills have a lot of effect on the law of Ontario. They have a lot of effect with regard to property rights. As some of the members here have indicated, there is an extreme amount of interest in property rights.

During the committee hearing—and I plan to recommend that this bill as well as Bill 202 goes to the standing resources development committee—I hope that all sides will have an opportunity to vet all of the parts of this legislation to be sure that what comes out of committee will be an improvement to the law, which I believe the legislation as it now stands is.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for standing committee.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, could you ask the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) to cease and desist so we can get on with the matters before us?

I am rising at this time because it seems to me that we are facing a very serious situation in Ontario so far as the Attorney General of this province is concerned. During the debate on the estimates of the Attorney General I produced what I believe it is fair to call a litany indicating that the Attorney General, as I see it and as others see it, is incapable of the kind of objectivity which is required traditionally of an Attorney General under the British tradition.

To add to that, the responsibility for the second ministry, that of Solicitor General, is to me intolerable at this time when our society has changed drastically from the times when it was assumed that one person could handle both roles. Today we see conflicts as we have never seen them before.

During the course of the debate in the estimates I made the statement, and I stand by it, that we see in the administration of justice today what I perceive to be an Americanization of the role of, for example, the crown attorney. I think now we have seen something of the confirmation of that in certain evidence given by a crown recently in a matter before the courts.

There is no question in my mind that the role of the Attorney General in protecting the rights of all citizens is an absolutely imperative role. I referred to the fact that I did not find any evidence, for example, of the Attorney General taking action in environmental matters. I was advised by the former Solicitor General in the committee that he has acted on many occasions. I have asked for the evidence of that and it has not been forthcoming.

If we have an Attorney General who is a political animal and ably so, I must say, this is at odds with the whole function of the Attorney General in our society. As we know, we have had many statements from many of the very fine Attorneys General in Great Britain, indicating quite clearly that the role of the Attorney General is one of a cabinet minister, and therefore he is responsible for legislation introduced into the House. But here the Attorney General plays the political role and the legislative role without understanding the two functions.

As a first step, there must be a separation of these two functions as they exist today, with one minister handling two ministries which themselves have somewhat disparate interests. The crown attorney has a role to play—a very significant and very important role in our system. That role is to be the person who presents to the courts the best possible case he can present, always having in mind the fact that in presenting the case he has to keep before him the dignity of the individual and the protection of our society. He does not, as in the American system, go in to win; he goes in to present a case.

More and more we have seen—and I think the Attorney General himself has indicated its necessity, as he sees it—the crown become more involved in the investigative process as crime becomes more sophisticated. I understand what the Attorney General says, but if he has that approach he ought to recognize there must be some law officer, the chief law officer of this province, to hold the balance; that has not occurred.

We have seen people in this province crying out for rights and for protection. Who in this province is charged with the responsibility of protecting those rights? There is no one other than the Attorney General, save and except, of course, when matters get into the courts. There is no one else but the Attorney General to guard and protect the rights of the citizen. The Attorney General has the overall responsibility—whether he is acting as Solicitor General or not, he must take the overriding responsibility.

Yet we have seen a bill—a much-vaunted bill, a needed bill—introduced with all accompanying fanfare, only to die apparently, on the Order Paper. People have been crying out for protection from what they view—rightly or wrongly is not the issue at the moment—as an inimical complaint system. I am not speaking to the merits of the bill at all; I am speaking to the fact that we can't even debate that important piece of legislation adequately. We can't bring in a bill which can protect the citizen who sees himself as unable to find justice.

I would like to speak about the matter of justice. Perhaps it is because I am a very simple person, but I happen to believe justice is indivisible. I happen to believe you cannot talk about more even justice or more equal justice. If you do not have justice, you have injustice. And our Attorney General is quite prepared to see that injustice in our province. I cannot do other than address myself at this important time to the matter of concurrence in estimates, the philosophy of which and the philosophy of the minister is one I cannot accept. To a certain degree it is almost a matter, not so much of law or injustice, it is almost a morality that is important to me in my Ontario, because it is my Ontario too.

We understand the minister has stated he has acted in the law of standing in a way in which other previous Attorneys General have not acted. I accept that. I am sure that is so. But in the law of standing there are two opposing camps. There is the one camp that feels the law of standing should not be enlarged, because it can invite frivolous matters in an already clogged-up system—and there is justification for that point of view. But those people who take that position say the Attorney General is the one who should be acting in the best interests of all citizens of Ontario. You cease to have that argument available if the Attorney General is not acting in other than those areas where, with the greatest respect, he sees some political mileage to be gained from his activities.

I have been deeply disappointed in the Attorney General because he is a person for whom I have a high personal regard. It is quite possible for me to say that in a different context from almost any other person in the House, because I have observed him during a political campaign and came away from that campaign with an even deeper sense of respect for that person. I would like him to understand that.

He seems to believe if we have a difference in principle, it is a partisan difference. In the years I have been in the House, I have never lightly taken a position of this kind against any minister. I am not part of the usual cackle, "Resign," or any of that sort of thing, because to me that is not my position at all. It is serious; it is important to me the minister understand it. There has to be some way to get through to the Premier of Ontario (Mr. Davis) that to restore confidence he must remove the minister from the two ministries and the two portfolios.

The Attorney General has demonstrated in his role as Solicitor General a very real concern for those matters which properly fall within his domain as Solicitor General. I commend him for the very real dedication he displayed in the Mississauga crisis. I am not one of those who feels he is the author of disaster but rather that disasters lie within his jurisdiction to redress as best he can. I am not in any sense inviting the Attorney General out of ministerial responsibility.

I am aware that in this province we have very many difficulties. The police have difficulties in these times, the citizen has difficulty in these times and I am sure, with the dedication the minister is capable of bringing to those issues, we could seek some very real reform and some very real advancement which would be beneficial both to the police forces and to the citizens. I would like to make that point quite clear in speaking to these concurrences.

I don't suppose there was ever a time in history, unless it was during the Salem witch trials or something of that nature, when we have seen human problems surfacing as they have done today. I have been speaking with representatives of some of the ethnic communities who I feel certain wanted to see the bill put forward for amendment but did want to see some protection for their particular groups.

The black community had great difficulty with the bill and couldn't accept it in its present form. Definitely, I am sure that did not mean they would not like to have had the opportunity to make representation because, you know, Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General—and to me it is the Attorney General notwithstanding the police function—has believed in bringing this kind of legislation forward that if the police and the enforcement agencies would not accept it it might be unworkable and I believe he has a certain valid argument in that area. However, I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, if the public doesn't accept it, you are in very much the same position. I think the Attorney General is nodding approval.

What does he do as Attorney General when one has two basic rights, if you like; the police on the one hand, the citizen at large on the other hand? It seems to me one moves to try to bring in legislation which will be equitable for both.

I am so deeply saddened that we have dealt with other legislation and yet we really haven't had an opportunity to consider that fundamental legislation. The reason I am raising it in the context of a concurrence debate is that it does seem to me that an Attorney General concerned about the rights of citizens and the rights of the police—they too are citizens—should have had greater courage to ensure that this House had the ample opportunity to give consideration to that important piece of legislation.

I would like to make a comment too about the fact that I think there has been relatively little legislation lately coming from the Attorney General which he himself has guided. In saying that I want to reiterate that is no denigration of his very able, very responsive parliamentary assistant.

It does seem to me that when we were dealing with provincial offences and we were dealing with two very difficult bills in the last two days, we saw a great conflict between those of us who have some experience in the law and those who were really regarding the bills—and I think appropriately so—as agricultural bills. The Attorney General should have been here to assist in that debate and to respond to the very real problems and issues I think were raised, not in a partisan fashion but in a very concerned fashion.

In fairness to the Attorney General his parliamentary assistant advised the House and advised me personally that he had requested the privilege of carrying those two bills. I understand that. I also asked him if he had requested the privilege of carrying the Provincial Offences Act through and I must say, in fairness to him, he did not comment. He certainly didn't speak in the affirmative on that.

I don't believe that it is useful for me to continue at any greater length. The Attorney General is a very able person and is I believe, as I have remarked, by reason of the paintings which he does a man of sensitivity. I would implore him to review the conflicts and to advise the Premier that he does understand there are conflicts and that he wishes to be removed from a situation which is one of conflict—is one which is viewed as one of conflict, which is perhaps even more important—and that he put all of his very considerable talent, very considerable talent to the task of a Solicitor General in this province.

[12:45]

Mr. Warner: Not long ago I was given the opportunity to be the critic for our party for the Attorney General. Not being a lawyer—

Mr. Peterson: Enjoy it while it lasts.

Mr. Laughren: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere is going to be Attorney General next.

Mr. Warner: Yes, we'll have to change that little law that says you have to be a lawyer in order to be an Attorney General.

Not being a lawyer, I have struggled with the law books and with the various pieces of legislation that have come forward. I have listened intently on every occasion to the members for St. George, Lakeshore, Riverdale and others, to try to get a sense about the justice policy, to get a sense about how an Attorney General should conduct the affairs he is responsible for. I read carefully the documents he so kindly sent over. He gave me some documents written by an Attorney General from Great Britain. I read them carefully and I was quite impressed with them. That's why I am so saddened by the turn of events that has occurred over the last many months.

Unfortunately, I do not believe the Attorney General actually sees a conflict of interest. Unfortunately, I don't believe, despite the reasoned argument put forward by my colleague from St. George, the arguments put forward by other colleagues of mine and by my own arguments, that he actually believes there is a conflict of interest between the two portfolios he holds. To put it in the vernacular, he is the boss of the courts and the boss of the police. He cannot truly represent all of those interests, especially when they come into conflict as he is now painfully discovering through the process around the bill for citizens' complaints against police activity.

After the somewhat painful events of yesterday over the legislation, because I, too, felt quite exercised about the fact that Attorney General told us this was important legislation. He was bringing it in at the last minute. It was very important. It had to be dealt with. We had to get it through. We had to get it passed. And despite its great importance and the speed it had to be dealt with he didn't show up. I returned home last night to find a Christmas card from the same gentleman. I wasn't exactly thrilled with having received a Christmas card yesterday.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: You didn't tear it up?

Mr. Warner: I didn't tear it up. It will occupy a place of importance on the mantle by the fireplace for me.

It is with a great deal of regret that I indicate I will not support the concurrence. I don't know all the little ways in which one is able to do that in this place, but I'm registering positively that I will not support this concurrence for the very basic reason that, unfortunately, there are two very serious flaws in this Attorney General's ministry. One is the conflict of interest and the other and to be rather blunt about it—and I don't often do this and it pains me in a way—I feel that the Attorney General is putting headlines ahead of duty. That really bothers me.

In my own naive fashion I had some kind of thought that the position of an Attorney General was similar to that of the Speaker of the chamber. I believed there was a certain sense of independence about that position; it was the kind of duty that says, "I will give my opinion even when it's contrary to government policy or philosophy, because I owe a duty to the people to dispense justice, to ensure and guarantee that justice will prevail for our citizens." In my own naive way I felt that that's what the position was all about. I'm not a lawyer and I'm not learned in the law and maybe I'm wrong; maybe I've misconstrued the whole history of the Attorney General, but I think that's what it's all about.

Quite frankly, despite the tremendous capacity and the ability which the member for Eglinton possesses, I do not believe he is fulfilling that role of being independent and of being truly objective and of being like the Speaker.

I cannot support a concurrence in these estimates.

Mr. Lawlor: Just one thing, very shortly and briefly. I have a question I would like to ask the Attorney General. Having been absent myself I can only respond with mea culpas, I suppose. Nevertheless, not having participated greatly in the estimates—which is a blessed rest and respite for both of us for a period of time in any event—we will be back locking horns, I trust, before too long.

What, I'm asking, is going on? What strange machinations possess the Attorney General these days? I'm thinking of a number of bills; the two we just finished and the police bill. There are several factors about these things.

First of all, in each instance they are absolutely vital and have to be pushed through this House with great celerity. I can feel the panting of the breath down the back of the minister's neck. For some mysterious reason the impetus then goes out of them. The hot air expires and they sit gently and quietly without even roasting on their particular griddle.

That police bill was so critical and so important. Not only must it be put through at a particular time, but it was not to go out to committee. That's his second edict or mandate, which apparently emanates from some closet he has; this seems to be a general rule these days. That other series of bills came suddenly out of the blue and superseded the all-important police bill; they became even more important and had to be moved through in 48 hours. The whole of the province stood at attention pending the passage of this legislation.

Even as late as last night, against what had been agreed upon by the House leader, the Attorney General's representative in this chamber was ambivalent as to whether or not these matters were to go to committee. When the government House leader showed up it was directed that that be the case and that that had been an understanding we had reached.

Why this recalcitrance? Why this curious arrogation of bills in a certain direction and with a certain temper, a kind of meanness about it? When the minister first started as Attorney General he was generous, open-handed, reformist and wishing to leave his mark on that office. Suddenly there's a closing in, there's a tightening taking place and most tightenings in this life are muscular contractions, et cetera, that may cause death pangs, or at least strangulation of the hernia—and the Attorney General must be careful, this may be happening to him, even though he goes up on the roof in the dead of winter to run around three times, et cetera.

And while I am thinking of it, the second aspect about it, apart from the performance aspect, is the substance aspect.

What the Attorney General is bringing forward to the House is not in conformity with his office as we see it. As the member for St. George took some time this morning to point out, which I won't do, somehow—and I think the Attorney General will agree with this; he has said it himself—he is above his fellows in the cabinet. He has a wider gamut, a more sovereign view. He is protective of the overall liberties and rights and privileges of the people of this province. He sees it broader.

While the Minister of Agriculture and Food might very well bring in a bill that is framed along the lines of the Trespass to Property Act, I'm saying this is highly sectional—I used the word "sectarian" but I don't quite mean that. It's sectional; it's partisan; it's directed to a fairly narrow—certainly not the overall view of the community.

In the police bill—as I construe the Attorney General's bill—there is the same emphasis, orientation and arrogation on to special interest; that's not the Attorney General's function, as I see it and I have an obligation over here to say so to him.

He will transcend that. He has a wider point of view, and that's why there is some increasing problem. His Rubicon is the police bill, as it comes on for argumentation, as he crosses that particular river between those two portfolios, because the emphasis and quality of that bill gives a particular cognizance and a role to the police—particularly the chief of police—which was never dreamed of by Maloney, Morand, by all the civil liberties concepts operative in the world, the States along with them.

Why did the Attorney General go in that direction? What is the gravamen in this particular thing? What's pushing him these days? We all say, and we say it bluntly, that the Attorney General is blatantly political. Whether he is whistling for high office—higher than the one he has, there can scarcely be a higher office, in my opinion.

In a sense the Attorney General is above the Premier. He has a wider point of view which is not as tied down to partisan or sectarian causes as he perforce must be; that's the glory of his position. The Attorney General is a relatively free man but he's not exercising his freedom. He is not exercising his freedom. He is not exercising the plenary powers he is given and the ambit of his authority. He has just drifted into it recently. Why? I'm not quite sure.

If he doesn't do that he will bring the office into disrespect and do himself harm in the final analysis. It may be an immediate gain but in the big picture it won't help. That's as much as I wish to say.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, time is short and I will be very brief. In response to some of the criticism from the honourable members opposite, I can only say that I appreciate that much of what they say is done, not for partisan political purposes, but simply tongue in cheek. I am comforted by the knowledge that the members opposite are great admirers of the ministries of the Attorney General and the Solicitor General.

Once again, I'd simply like to conclude by stating that I have enjoyed and, of course, have profited from the contributions of all members during the estimates process. The matters raised today by the honourable members opposite have for the most part, been discussed at some length during the estimates in committee. I don't think there is anything I can usefully add at this time.

I want to conclude by stating that, so far as all of the members in this Legislature are concerned, my door will continue to remain open all the time for any issues concerning the administration of justice in this province.

Mr. Speaker: The resolution for concurrence in supply for the Ministry of the Attorney General has already been placed before the House at the beginning of the debate. Is it the pleasure of the House that the resolution be concurred in?

Those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Resolution concurred in.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

SUPERMARKET PRICING AND CHECKOUT SYSTEMS

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, for some time there has been a considerable amount of concern by consumer groups and individual consumers about computerized checkouts in supermarkets and about their ultimate effects on the prices people pay for food.

The Consumers' Association of Canada has voiced its concerns that if individual prices are not displayed on products, consumer awareness of prices will diminish and the ability of consumers to compare store prices and to follow price changes over a period of time will decrease. An additional concern is that prices in the system could change instantly and frequently without the need for repricing individual products.

The food industry, on the other hand, is convinced that increased cost-effectiveness will result from these technological advances and the end result will be savings for the consumer.

My ministry has been monitoring the area of computerized checkout and unit pricing from the outset in order to ensure that any system used in Ontario will not have any effects detrimental to the consumer. It is important to keep in mind that we are talking about the long term. I am told that the earliest such a system could be in place for extensive use is five to 10 years.

For those who are not familiar with a computerized checkout system, the features include a standardized coding and symbol system—referred to as the universal product code—and automated checkstand equipment.

The UPC provides a standardized method for identifying products according to name of manufacturer and product type including size and weight of packaging container. The system consists of a series of bars and spaces affixed to products at either the manufacturing, wholesale or retail levels, capable of being interpreted by automated checkstand equipment using optical scanners.

When a universal product code is scanned and registered at the checkstand, it is automatically linked with the corresponding product price from a company's computer file which appears on a window visible to consumers and also on a cash register tape. About 80 per cent of items on food-chain shelves now carry the universal product code.

By way of background, about four years ago food chains operating in Ontario were considering installation of computerized equipment. Apprehension by consumer groups towards this technology resulted in hastily prepared legislation in several states in the US and alerted us to the emerging problem. The industry, aware of the lack of consultation with consumers, labour and government south of the border, was eager to work with these groups towards guidelines under which the system would be operating in Canada.

Under the auspices of the Retail Council of Canada, three committees were formed to prepare such guidelines: a steering committee, representing food chains; a technical advisory committee, composed of computer manufacturing companies and store operation experts; and a public advisory committee, whose members were invited from groups having an interest in the computerized system, namely consumer groups, unions, academia and government.

The public advisory committee submitted guidelines to the steering committee of the Retail Council of Canada. Revised guidelines were then presented to the food-chain companies. The main thrust of the recommendations was to enter a test period to determine the benefits and inadequacies of the system. The guidelines also included procedures as to price changes, shelf labels and information on tape receipts.

In the spring of 1978 this House expressed its view in the form of an endorsement of item pricing. At about the same time, a number of American states passed legislation dealing with item pricing. As more was learned about the computerized checkout system, different legislative approaches were designed to deal with what has proved to be a difficult area for legislative regulation.

For example, stores have historically sold a significant number of goods without prices marked, such as candy bars, milk and baby foods. Therefore, when New York state passed its legislation it had to provide a page of exemptions from item pricing. In the state of Washington, the consumer acceptance of the computerized system resulted in the withdrawal of a bill designed to require item pricing while other states are extending their legislation. It therefore appears that a careful review of a legislative solution is warranted.

My staff has been studying the system, reviewing the potential benefits and shortcomings of equipment on the market and analysing consumer experiences with the equipment, both with and without individual item pricing. I have also had the benefit of discussions and correspondence with the Consumers' Association of Canada officials, who are monitoring stores operating with scanning. They are documenting for me their observations.

Members of my ministry have been closely observing three Loblaws stores which operate without item pricing in Ottawa, London and Stoney Creek, and we are assessing the popularity of these stores and the types of problems they are encountering. I have been informed by the president of Loblaws of his intention to operate three superstores without item pricing as a test—not only to test the system but to test consumer acceptance of it. I have been assured the results of the test will be made available to me. Loblaws has agreed not to proceed further until the evaluation has been completed and the ministry will be fully informed of any decision as a result of their test market.

I have contacted the officials of major food-chain stores to obtain their comments on their use or planned use of item-price removal. I have also asked for their comments on the benefits to consumers, what difficulties they are experiencing with the equipment and what improvements they are demanding from the equipment manufacturers to satisfy the concerns expressed by consumers.

This morning my staff began conducting an accuracy test in five stores equipped with scanning, in four Ontario centres. Fifty items were selected at random in each store and shelf prices were compared with those on the tape. We will compare the results of this test with the existing manual system to determine the relative accuracy of optical scanners.

In January the ministry will conduct a telephone survey of 900 consumers who use the computerized system in Ottawa, London and Hamilton, to determine their behaviour and attitudes towards the system in general and item-price removal in particular. We will also survey consumers to determine their price awareness and how well they remember prices on a selected number of products, both with and without item pricing.

At present there is no legislation requiring pricing on products. It is important we keep in mind that any legislation proposed so far would apply to all goods and stores. In my view, however, the ultimate decision on the operation of computerized checkouts lies with the consumer, not with the government, nor even with the industry. That is why we are going to extraordinary lengths to determine consumers' views on this matter.

In the process we will share this information with the Consumers' Association of Canada, labour and industry. Our goal is to develop a set of guidelines for the operation of computerized checkouts which will address the needs and concerns of consumers, so that all will benefit from technological progress.

ORAL QUESTIONS

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker: I took it from the Premier's answer to my question on Monday that while the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the minister are not satisfied with the present ratio of opted-out physicians, some 18 per cent or so, they are prepared to live with that ratio, at least for now. That is what I took from the answer the Premier gave me.

When the Premier gave that answer, however, was he and was the Minister of Health aware of the figures which show such very large numbers of specialists opted out, particularly in some parts of the province? When the answer was given that they could live with the present degree of opting out, even though they weren't satisfied with it, were they both aware of the very high percentage of some specialties which now consist of opted-out doctors?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think the member himself and all of us have been aware since the beginning of the health insurance plan there have been higher degrees of opting out or direct billing in certain specialties than in general or in other specialties. I think it is a little unfair to paraphrase the Premier's remarks to say we are going to live with it. What we have been trying to do is address the reasons behind opting out, rather than using arbitrary and what have been referred to at times by members opposite as draconian measures to bring those numbers down.

The member will recall that it is not that long ago that he was predicting we would have 40 and 50 per cent of the physicians in the province opted out. Of course, that has never occurred. It has been contained at slightly less than 18 per cent. I am confident the recent settlement with the medical association will go a long way to assisting us in bringing those numbers down further, rather than resorting to some use of clubs, as it were, which can only have a negative effect on the health-care system and on the services to the public.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Since the minister and the Premier continue to say they are not satisfied with the present level of 18 per cent of physicians opted out, and since the minister apparently says he was aware that in some specialties over half the people are opted out, and in some areas 90 per cent of some specialties are opted out—since he admits he is not satisfied with it and since it is also clear there is no expectation that the recent nine per cent increase will have any drastic effect in opting people back in, although it might possibly stabilize the situation—that is the Premier's word—therefore, can the minister tell the House what the Premier refused to tell us?

What targets does the minister have? What amount of opting out would be acceptable to the government and how much time is the minister prepared to give the medical profession to come back into the plan in those numbers so draconian measures, as he calls them, don't have to be taken?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, we simply have to take a look at the total picture. It is attractive to some, and obviously to the member, to take individual figures and say that indicates there is no accessibility, that all the services are opted out.

I would remind the member again that 91 per cent of all the claims on the health-insurance plan are opted-in claims. Notwithstanding the fact we have slightly less than 18 per cent of all physicians opted out and in certain specialties higher figures—in some cases much higher figures than that—the bulk of the services being provided to the people of Ontario are being provided at opted-in rates. The use of the billing groups in the hospitals, which has broadened this year to use all the clinical departments of all the hospitals, not just the teaching hospitals, has assisted in bringing that about.

Since the beginning of our health-insurance plan in the province, physicians have had a right to choose between direct billing as opposed to billing the plan. Today we have more opted-in physicians, specialists and GPs than when the plan began, notwithstanding that the percentage figure is different today from what it was at that time, or a year ago; I don't have a specific figure in mind. I believe the present system is one that has served the province well. We have every reason to believe accessibility and universality have been maintained without having to resort to measures which would in effect put the doctors on the payroll, as it were, and make them quasi or real employees of the government and drive a lot of them out of Ontario.

One of the things I have tried to do is to retain an atmosphere where the doctors feel they are welcome to practise medicine in this province and not to drive them away. This year the figures I have seen would indicate the number of doctors leaving Ontario has dropped by 40 per cent from a year ago. I don't think we want to reverse that again.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on April 14, 1978, the minister told the House, "We have the means, and we have been doing it regularly, to follow the distribution of physicians, not only just in numbers, in hundreds or thousands, but as between specialties and general practice and between opted in and opted out."

Has the minister been aware, since April 14, 1978, of the fact that opting out in some specialties in major communities in the province is as high as 100 per cent? If so, why has there been no action by the ministry to get the opting out down to a reasonable level, or to eliminate it entirely?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I seem to recall a number of years ago when the Honourable Dr. Potter was the Minister of Health—when I sat two rows back of the member in what was then affectionately known as the rump—various discussions about the question of opting out. We have all been aware, since the beginnings of the plan, that for a variety of reasons in certain specialties there have been higher than average levels of opting out. I would remind the honourable member yet again that to combat that and to retain accessibility and universality the government a number of years ago introduced the regulation that provided for billing groups—first in the teaching hospitals and in the emergency departments and more recently in all the clinical departments of all public hospitals.

Therefore, notwithstanding the fact that slightly less than 18 per cent of all physicians—higher figures in certain categories and certain areas—and only about nine per cent of the claims are opted out, there are very few problems, judging from the response of the public.

Mr. Conway: A supplementary to the minister: Are we to believe that the minister is not satisfied with the 18 per cent opted-out rate, and are we to believe the comments associated with the minister and the Premier that this is not a satisfactory percentage?

If the Minister of Health is not satisfied, what is he doing to bring that figure down to a more acceptable percentage? In that connection, has the minister finalized the government's presentation to the Hall commission on medicare? Would he be prepared to table his submission to the Hall medicare commission before the House rises later this week?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the submission has not been completed. I met with the honourable gentleman two weeks ago for a preliminary discussion—just to get acquainted and to discuss health care in general. I'm not sure of the dates being arranged for public hearings but they will be public. Any submission we finally make will be a public submission, but it is not completed at this point.

We would all like to see opting-out figures come down. We would like to do it in such a way that we are addressing the reasons behind it.

I would remind the member that we did go for about six or seven years with a relatively constant percentage level and an ever-improving availability of opted-in specialists as well as GPs. I again remind the member that we have more of them today than we had when the plan began. Over this year, the number of physicians opted out has come down slightly. It peaked in the first couple of months of 1979 at 18 per cent and has now fallen to 17.8 per cent.

I feel that by addressing concerns about income through the fee schedule, by addressing concerns about red tape and bureaucracy and by addressing concerns about the method of payment we can bring the numbers down without having to resort to measures which I think can only lead to a regression in the quality of health care in the province and which would, in certain communities, probably deny people access as physicians would leave.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Would the minister not agree that it is intolerable to have 3.5 million claims a year being billed by opted-out doctors at rates that are 42 per cent higher than the OHIP fee schedule will allow? Will he also not agree that because far more specialists are opted out than the proportion of general practitioners opted out, the value of claims billed on an opted-out basis will be far higher than the figure he keeps bringing back into the House?

Why won't the government come to grips with the problem and ensure that everybody in this province can get those medical claims paid at the OHIP rate, without having to pay extra?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the member assumes again. He takes the raw numbers and he makes certain assumptions that because a physician is billing his patients directly he is billing at 42 per cent or whatever. In point of fact a number of physicians who have always been opted out or in a position of direct billing have never billed higher than OHIP. There are many in that category who, on principle, have never been participating physicians. I think we have to respect that. The services are available. The people are not being denied. The point is that only nine per cent of the claims are being billed directly and that the health of the public is not suffering.

HIRING OF CONSULTANTS

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Community and Social Services regarding an item on page 48 of the provincial auditor's report. The minister will be aware that a former employee of the ministry became a consultant rather suddenly after leaving the employ of the ministry and was hired as a consultant by the Ministry of Community and Social Services. What I would like the minister to tell the House is first of all, who is this overnight consultant who left his ministry and then was hired as such? What was he earning before he left the ministry? Who is it that hired him as a consultant? And how many others were hired as consultants in the same type of situation by that ministry?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I am rather reluctant to name the person individually. I will certainly indicate his position and so on in the ministry. He was a long-time employee of the ministry in a senior position at an executive director level. He is a chartered accountant and had indicated to us in the ministry some time last year his intention to leave the public service and go into private practice. The situation that developed this year, particularly relating to the budget, in which area he had a great deal of experience and involvement, made it necessary under the provisions that are allowed in the administrative manual for purposes of continuity in program to ask him if he would stay on. This was not as a management consultant as I think the article in the newspaper stated but rather as a technical consultant and was simply to complete the process he was already involved in at that point, after he had set up his practice.

The important thing to bear in mind here is that the figure referred to both in the provincial auditor's report and more recently and erroneously interpreted by one of the Toronto journalists is not his salary by any means. That involves the salaries for three persons who are employed under that contract.

Mr. McClellan: Plus the overheads, I'm sure. Don't forget the overheads.

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, as a matter of fact the other error that exists there is the figure of $66,450. I believe it is the one that was used and it is referred to as being applicable to a four-month period. That is not correct, either; it was for a six-month period. The employee was employed in the ministry at a salary level of approximately $42,000 which, if one includes the fringe benefits that were part of the package that he was entitled to as a civil servant, totalled about $49,500. This would have been his total earnings from the ministry prior to his leaving the ministry.

Under the terms of the contract, when one takes into consideration the salaries that are paid to the two other persons who are working under that contract in addition to himself, his net salary from that contract, on an annualized basis, is $54,000. Under the period of the contract referred to in the auditor's report and in the newspaper article he received about $27,000, rather than $66,450.

I would point out the relevant comparison is between his former salary and fringe benefit package of $49,500 and the income he would receive on an annualized basis, if this were an annualized contract, of $54,000. That is the relevant comparison and puts the matter in perspective.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, do I take it that the minister is saying the provincial auditor is wrong in saying the agreement covered a four-month period—that somehow or other it covered a six-month period, but the provincial auditor is mistaken?

The second thing is the minister is saying there are two more salaries. If so, would he please tell us at what level those employees were hired and what their salaries would be in the civil service if they were working in the civil service, and whether he had people in the ministry who could have been giving that kind of help if it were merely secretarial work or the kind for which he has other people already there to perform? In general terms, since the name will have to be eventually given to the public accounts committee, doesn't he feel he should level with this House and say precisely what the situation was?

Finally, who hired him and why tenders were not called in this case?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, if I can remember the sequence of the questions, I don't know the names of the other individuals involved, I'm hesitant to name the individual but I'll name him. I suppose it's proper to do so. It's not a question of focusing upon the individual involved but the principle that is the important matter.

The individual involved is Mr. Barry Dalby, who has been an employee of my ministry for a number of years. I can't give the member the precise figure of the income of the other two. They are not secretaries, as I understand it. They are associates, people associated with him in the execution of carrying out his duties under the contract. They must be paid. If the members look at the figure of $66,450 of which he would receive $27,000, then they obviously must be receiving at least an average of something under $20,000.

The member asked why this matter was not tendered. The matter was not tendered because there was no one else we knew of who had the degree of involvement and expertise in what he had been doing. In order to ensure the continuity, it was necessary for us to ask him to extend his involvement with our ministry.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's rather an unsavoury practice.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It's not unsavoury at all. It's bloody good management, I'll tell the member for Gooch River.

This gentleman had been engaged for a lengthy period of time and involved with the development of the budget and working with children's aid societies.

Mr. S. Smith: Why didn't he stay on another six months?

Hon. Mr. Norton: He had already given us notice and had set up his own practice. He had made a commitment to begin his practice. We were asking him if he would vary his plans in order to provide the continuity necessary in the work that he was doing. It was not a matter of his setting up some straw man, some false company or whatever, and then carrying on doing his same duties. He was to leave. He had made plans well in advance to leave. We asked him to stay on because it was essential there would be that continuity. He agreed to comply.

I suggest to the member that if he looked at the figures comparatively, he will see he agreed to stay on at a level of income to himself that compared very closely with what he was making before. The member cannot, on the basis of the figures I have given him, allege there was any profiteering or ripoff or anything else under that contract. I think it was a very fair contract. The man made a sacrifice to stay on with us.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: The minister talks about the principle of the issue. What is the principle involved in his little buddy system over there where they give contracts in violation of the manual of administration procedures and give contracts to ex-employees who, in the words of the provincial auditor, "are one-man operations who, in the view of the audit services branch, have only one client, the Ministry of Community and Social Services." Where is the principle he's adhering to there, except for the maintenance of a cozy little buddy system within the ministry?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I suppose that is typical of the attitude of the honourable member opposite to express it in those terms. May I first point out that this contract we were just talking about was not in violation of the manual. As I understand it there is specific provision within the manual that under certain circumstances, when continuity of program is necessary and where alternatives are not available, these kinds of decisions can be made and have been made in this instance.

With respect to the number of consultants' contracts or whatever the member wishes to call them, he knows as I do that there have been a great many specific projects that have had to be done by the children's services division of my ministry in a very short time over the last couple of years.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, I have had the projects that were referred to by the auditor examined by our staff. I am assured each was distinct and separate in terms of their requirements. It was not a matter of maintaining individuals—

Mr. Cassidy: You've lost control of your staff.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's malarkey.

Mr. McClellan: Save it for the public accounts.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We certainly will.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We have no hesitation at all in justifying this before public accounts. I would point out to the member I believe and I think we can demonstrate that we are saving the taxpayers of this province money by using specific people with the skills and the expertise we require on a specific project basis, rather than building up a burgeoning bureaucracy within the division that we have a commitment to a long-term basis once these projects are finished. We could have many times the number of civil servants we now have in that division if for every project we had to get done we made a long-term commitment to a civil servant. This is a much more sensible and economic way to approach it.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: Wouldn't the minister agree that if this happened in the private sector where the president of a company found someone with their hands in the till like this, the man responsible for okaying the order should be fired? We haven't found out yet who was the one that approved the order to do this, the deputy minister or the minister. The gut issue or the bottom line is who approved of this, the minister or the deputy minister?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Formally, I suppose, my deputy did. I was aware of it and I assume responsibility. I'm the responsible person.

Mr. Sargent: So the minister okayed it?

Hon. Mr. Norton: May I just say one thing further, Mr. Speaker? It's important that I say this. The honourable member made a statement about somebody having their hands in the till. That is absolutely not true. I would ask him if he would like to step outside the Legislature and say that where the persons who were involved would have the opportunity to prosecute or to sue him in court for the aspersions that he has cast upon their integrity.

Mr. Sargent: Come on out; I will go out any time you please.

Hon. Mr. Norton: These are responsible senior servants of this government and I'm not going to sit here and allow the member to make such irresponsible statements. Please, step out in the hall and repeat it.

Interjections.

Mr. Sargent: Point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: There's nothing that constitutes a point of privilege.

Mr. Sargent: I don't like what he said.

Mr. Speaker: That's your problem.

Mr. Cassidy: They have problems, Mr. Speaker. This headline of the Ottawa Citizen says, "Ontario Liberals Don't Want Trudeau." They've got real problems.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. Now that the ministry has finally published this directory of opted-in and opted-out physicians which we were looking for as early as a year and a half ago, is the minister aware that according to the records of his ministry all of the urologists in Halton county are out of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan and more than half of the urologists in Niagara, Waterloo, York region, Peterborough, Toronto, Etobicoke, North York and Middlesex are out of OHIP?

Is the minister aware that half of the obstetricians in Halton are out and that the figure is more than half in Niagara, Sudbury, York region, Peterborough, Toronto, Scarborough and in North York? Is the minister aware that more than half of the anaesthetists are out of OHIP in virtually every centre which we were able to monitor in the short time we've had this particular document?

If that's the case, can the minister say why is it that for the last year and a half—when he allegedly was monitoring the opting out by specialists across the province—he has engaged in covering up the scandalous amount of opting out taking place by specialists in Ontario and the restrictions on medical service to the people of the province that entails?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all I would have to ask for you, sir, to have that particular aspersion to me be withdrawn which was the casting of the suggestion that I was covering up. I don't expect the honourable member to do that since I've sat here for eight years watching and listening to him do that kind of thing with great abandon. That's why he's over in that corner and not in this corner.

The point is—I have to keep re-emphasizing it—I'm not sure whether he said neurologist or urologist, but if you take it by county there might be one urologist in a county and there might be two or three obstetricians in a county, and because one of them has opted or the only urologist has opted, it comes out 100 per cent because there is only one of them. If there are four of a particular speciality and two are out, it comes out at 50 per cent. That's what you can do with figures, Mr. Speaker.

The fact is that 91 per cent of the claims on the plan are being paid directly by OHIP. The fact is we have more opted-in doctors today than we ever had at the beginning of the plan. The fact is the services are as accessible or more accessible to the people of this province than they ever were. There's the proof of it, close to 12,000 names of opted-in physicians and physicians who are members of billing groups.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the minister obviously is not aware of the situation which prevails concerning the opting out by specialists, since he maintains it's just a matter of one or two accidents of statistics, can he explain why it is half the psychiatrists, 122 psychiatrists, in the city of Toronto are opted out; 14 urologists, which is 50 per cent of the urologists in Toronto, are opted out; 23 of the orthopaedic surgeons, or 51 per cent, are opted out; 42 of the ophthalmologists, or 67 per cent are opted out; 77 of the obstetricians in the city of Toronto, which is 61 per cent are opted out; or 122 of the anaesthetists, which is 85 per cent, in the city of Toronto are opted out?

Is the minister not aware that those are the kinds of figures which prevail of the large numbers of specialists who are opted out? Would the minister explain why it is that senior officials in his ministry inform people in our party that the minister, despite all of the requests we have made over the last year and a half, has not asked his ministry to give him the figures on the proportion of specialists opted out in the counties of the province until we got them in this red book today?

Mr. Rotenberg: Why don't you opt out?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: He opted out of medical school, at one point apparently, but that's another thing.

Mr. Speaker, it reminds me of the time in the spring when a member—I think it was the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Smith—raised a question about one of the hospitals here in Toronto, where all the anaesthetists were then, and I assume still are, opted out and always have been. One can take those figures and say, "That must mean that all of the business is opted out."

In that particular example—I think it was the Toronto Western Hospital—70 per cent of their accounts were opted in through their billing group, notwithstanding that fact. One can do anything one wants with the numbers, particularly when there is this distribution of specialists. There are a couple here and a couple there by county and by region, and one can almost do anything one wants.

The fact is, when we come right down to it, people are getting the services they need. Ninety-one per cent—I repeat it again, 91 per cent—of the claims are direct to the plan. I invite the honourable member to tell me, when we consider that in Saskatchewan, his great Valhalla, 35 per cent to 40 per cent of the physicians are opted out, does that mean services aren't accessible in that province?

Mr. S. Smith: The minister points out that 91 per cent of the claims are still coming in in the opted-in manner. Does he not recognize that one of the reasons for that is his own ruling whereby doctors can see the less well-off patients in their hospital clinics and the better-off patients in their own offices? Does he not recognize that when he allowed doctors to be opted out in their own offices, but opted in in their hospital clinics, it allowed them for people who do not have much money to see the doctor in the hospital clinic instead of back in their own home office? Does the minister not recognize that that is a step back toward the two-level medicine, whereby the better off could be seen in the offices of the physician while the less well off are sent to line up in the hospital clinics? Does he want to return to that kind of system?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I think the honourable member does the doctors a great disservice when he makes that kind of a generalization or allegation. In every experience I have ever had as Minister of Health or as a patient, the physicians of this province have served every person with whom they come into contact as well as the last person they served, whoever they were, wherever they came from, wherever they are going to.

It's a great temptation, I know—and certainly that party jumps on it at all times and the honourable member seems to be sitting on the fence wondering which policy to have this week—to use the doctors as political whipping boys, to try to ride on them. It's not easy to stand here and not get angry sometimes at some of the crass political things that come from across the way.

I think we have been well served compared with any other jurisdiction, including Saskatchewan—and I'll come back to that if the members want—including Saskatchewan. The services here are as accessible, if not more accessible, than those anywhere else.

Mr. S. Smith: You're satisfied then, eh? Come out and say so. Don't be political, just say you're satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, one is never satisfied with less than perfection. We are not going to address problems and we are not going to solve problems by using the medical profession as the whipping boys.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Before the minister succeeds in his efforts to mislead the House, may I put on the record, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think the honourable member should change the record. There is a clear implication there that somebody is being less than truthful. I think the honourable member should withdraw that and rephrase it.

Mr. Cassidy: It was almost intended, Mr. Speaker, but I will withdraw the remark and simply point out to the minister that only 3.5 per cent of claims in Ontario are billed at over the Saskatchewan medical plan rates, whereas, in this province 18 per cent of the doctors are opted out. We do not know, because the minister has not put—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, will the minister explain how individuals can go to a specialist, in that specialist's office, and be able to receive care at the OHIP rate in such communities as Halton where 100 per cent of the urologists are opted out of OHIP, or Peterborough where 100 per cent of the urologists and the orthopaedic surgeons are opted out of OHIP, or Sudbury where the only ophthalmologist is opted out of OHIP, or other communities where the opting-out rate also reaches 100 per cent?

Can the minister explain how an individual is to get care at the OHIP rate if that individual goes to the doctor's office? Will the government now undertake to rescind the agreement between OHIP and the OMA until there is a clear agreement by doctors in this province that no patient will be billed any extra amount above the OHIP fees?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What the doctors would like us to do in this province is to introduce the Saskatchewan plan with the three billing modes, including mode three, under which, according to what I was last told, 35 to 40 per cent of the physicians in Saskatchewan are billing some of their patients for some services some of the time. That's opting out à la Saskatchewan. That's the point I was making before.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is misleading the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I am not in a position to know whether he is or not, but I know you don't have the right to say so. Now please withdraw it.

Mr. Cassidy: He should withdraw as well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a new question?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martel: The minister knows what he is doing. It's 3.5 per cent and the minister knows it.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister should resign, that's what he should do, for his coverup. He's been covering up. That's what's been happening.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the member has a new question, let him put it forthwith or I will recognize another member.

AUTO INDUSTRY LAYOFFS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Minister of Industry and Tourism explain why he stated on television last night that the situation with the auto worker layoffs in Windsor wasn't really so bad because laid-off workers were collecting supplementary benefits on top of their UIC cheques? Is the minister not aware that the Chrysler supplementary unemployment benefit fund actually ran out in late August and the only special funds now available are those to workers with 10 years or more seniority? Is the minister not aware that there are some 2,400 Chrysler workers who are on indefinite layoff and whose only benefit is their unemployment insurance cheque, which is only 45 per cent of what they were earning previously?

How can the minister claim he is monitoring the layoff situation in Windsor when he is so obviously misinformed about the suffering being imposed on the workers because of these layoffs?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I regret the member got so worked up over what he believes to be the context of my comments yesterday. I didn't see the newsclip, but the answer I gave was in response to a general question about the automotive industry. I was indicating a large portion of the layoffs in the auto industry was affecting people who were receiving the supplementary benefits I have referred to. I also indicated that was not the case for a large number of the Chrysler workers.

In the context of the question as it was asked and as it was answered, it is entirely consistent with the remarks the member has just made. That is, many of the Chrysler workers, most of them, are not in a position to get 90 or 95 per cent of what they were previously given. The member is quite right, the majority of the Chrysler workers are in the situation where they are getting about 45 per cent. We agree, and I didn't say anything differently yesterday.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I would like the minister to explain. Is he not aware there are close to 1,000 workers in the parts industry in Windsor who are getting no other benefits except UIC payments? Is the minister not also aware that by the end of the month there will be 1,400 Ford workers in Windsor who will have exhausted both their supplementary unemployment benefits and their unemployment insurance benefits?

How can we have any confidence in the way the minister would handle the situation if Chrysler is forced to shut down if he can't even keep track of the real suffering occurring in Windsor, not just with Chrysler workers but also with workers in many other companies?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member wants to keep saying our figures are different to theirs. We are monitoring the situation and we know exactly what it is.

The member disregarded the answer I gave to the first question, which indicated we were aware of which workers were receiving how much assistance in both cases. I don't dispute the figures he has just recited on Ford. We do agree on those figures and I will tell him his friends at the UAW will confirm we are in constant contact with them in order to get both their up-to-date figures and the up-to-date figures from Canada Manpower and the automotive companies. We do have those up-to-date figures. We are monitoring them and our figures are exact.

I will say to the leader of the third party, if he wants to talk about exact figures and if he wants to talk about fairness in terms of getting a good view on the picture, it does a disservice to do what he continually does—total the different layoffs when a firm lays off workers for a week at a time, as he did last week.

Twenty-four hundred workers were laid off one week in October; the same 2,400 were laid off the third or fourth week in October for another week and he calls that 4,800 layoffs in trying to paint a picture that the layoffs were of much more monumental proportions than they are.

They are serious layoffs and we are very concerned about them. But with respect, the honourable member does the situation very little justice by compounding those figures and treating them all as gross figures, instead of giving them as net figures and giving an accurate view on the situation.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: A very brief supplementary. We have spent 42 minutes on leaders' questions and supplementaries

Mr. Bounsall: But not much on this last one, Mr. Speaker.

Is the minister aware that besides the 1,400 Ford workers who will go off UIC benefits this month, there are some 1,000 Chrysler workers and 700 in the parts industry in the same position? Will the minister immediately impress upon the federal government—Lincoln Alexander, or de Cotret, or whomever—the need to establish immediately a transitional assistance benefit fund for those 3,500-plus workers whose only alternative at the end of this month is welfare, during what is really only a transitional period while Ford adjusts its production and while Chrysler recovers?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have stated earlier that, as the honourable member well knows, we can only make recommendations to the federal government. I must also remind him that my ministry has no programs whatsoever intended to look after workers in terms of supplementary payments.

Of course, the honourable member's questions are more properly directed to either the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) here, or more properly, to the federal minister of labour. The Ministry of Industry and Tourism is not set up for nor is it mandated for providing supplementary assistance to workers that are laid off.

[Later (3:00):]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege, I want to clarify the record. I have had an opportunity now to have clarified for me by the CBC that the context in which my comments were carried about the automotive industry yesterday were indeed totally in the context of the situation in the automotive industry generally and not with regard to the Chrysler situation. [Reverting 2:53:]

DISTRICT OF PARRY SOUND LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. Given the fact that Bill 100, An Act respecting the Local Government of the District of Parry Sound, passed last June; and given the fact that in section 12 of that act he has the right to incorporate two municipalities—two townships—into one municipality, could the minister indicate to the House whether he has received a request from either or both of those municipalities asking to be incorporated and, if so, what his response has been?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge I haven't received an official request from either of those municipalities. I say "to the best of my knowledge" because it may be in the mail I haven't seen—in my office somewhere—but certainly in any correspondence I reviewed up until yesterday I haven't seen any request from those areas.

Mr. Epp: Supplementary: If the minister were to receive such a request from either or both of those municipalities, could he indicate to the House whether he would incorporate those two municipalities before the first full term of three years had elapsed?

Hon. Mr. Wells: First of all, it is my understanding—and I am just recalling from the bill—that the councils don't actually come into being until January 1, 1980. Therefore, we wouldn't have received any request because there is no legally constituted council yet. That is what I understand.

The other answer to the question is that when I receive the request and the accompanying material with it, I will then consider it and make up my mind as to what my response would be.

SUPERMARKET PRICING AND CHECKOUT SYSTEM

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, as a result of the report he tabled today. Recognizing that that report is really a wait and see, and that in the interim he is going to do his own survey and use Loblaw's surveys to determine if he is going to do anything about seeing that the price tags remain on individual products, is he not aware that exactly such surveys and studies have been done in the United States? I brought one to his attention just last week. Those studies show irrefutably that there is a substantial loss of price consciousness on the part of the consumers. Doesn't the minister realize that the whole matter of the universal product code and the elimination of tags is handled so subtly that the consumers themselves are not often aware of the loss of price consciousness? Doesn't the minister really think the surveys during a test period are almost meaningless and that there is enough evidence now for him to make a decision and protect the consumers?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, in rough order. One, I never recognize any survey from the United States. Two, this is not a wait and see.

Mr. McClellan: Why?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Why? If I have to explain that one, there is a very fundamental difference between society and business practices in the United States and here. I do my own work. I don't copy it from the state of Mississippi or some other place where the member popped in to buy one of his specials again.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do you want a response?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I am not adopting a wait-and-see attitude. If the member can read—and I trust he had the statement available, because everybody else did—I already pointed out the things I am doing.

I am not relying upon Loblaws; I am not relying upon the industry. I said it very concretely, emphatically, bluntly and in words of one syllable. The consumers of this province are going to decide what is going to happen in the computerized checkouts. It is not an area for the paternalism so often expressed by the member, the subtlety that consumers don't know what is going on. The member has just insulted about eight million people across the province with that one.

The consumers of this province are very sophisticated, can deal with complex problems and have to make many decisions every day. One of the decisions consumers are going to make is how this technological advance—and believe me what is there now is only primitive to what will be coming in the ensuing years—is going to be handled.

The operative part of what we are doing is that this technological advance will be used to the benefit of all. What we are doing is unprecedented in North America. Ten states have tried to grapple with this. That gives you an idea how good the American surveys are, Mr. Speaker. Many of them have found that in their endeavours to grapple with it they have produced dreadful legislation that has to be constantly revised.

I went to great lengths in my statement today to say exactly what we are doing. For once the consumers of Ontario will decide, rather than have the customary paternalism of the member for Welland-Thorold who doesn't believe they are capable of making their own decisions.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, can I ask the minister, from his own report does he not recognize one of the major concerns of the Consumers' Association of Canada is the likelihood that supermarkets, when not using individual pricing, will be much more apt to raise their instocks prices?

How can the minister check this major threat? Doesn't he think the major supermarkets will be smart enough not to do this until the systems are in place and then they will sock it to the consumers? Why doesn't he recognize that the elimination of price tags by the supermarkets is simply a scheme to enhance their profits and bring in legislation to stop the elimination and, once and for all, protect the consumers?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of companies who found out this week you have to get up pretty early in the morning to get around this minister. I assure you, we know what we are doing.

[3:00]

HIRING OF CONSULTANTS

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Community and Social Services a question.

The minister will recall that in March of this year I asked him a question regarding the number of consultants his ministry has hired. With regard to the person who has been spoken of earlier, would the minister answer some questions?

Did this person, after he left the ministry and started the consulting business and came back to the ministry, still carry on his consulting business as well as his duties with the ministry? Why did he have to bring a couple of employees along with him on this particular consultation job?

Third, how is the minister going to explain to all the people the deliverers of children's services and the parents and the children of this province who have been so sorely restrained in children's services, these kinds of moneys to these consultants?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, once again I think it is important that the honourable member bear in mind what I said earlier. He is implying there is unnecessary expenditure here, that there is money being spent that would not otherwise have been spent. That's not the case.

I thought I went through it in some detail—and I'll get more detail if the member requires it—indicating that the man who was retained, for the reasons I explained in response to the earlier question, at most may have been receiving something like $4,000 a year more than he had previously made as an employee of the ministry.

It's not a matter of a ripoff or a great windfall for him. He was not able to carry on his own business. He had set up his business but he gave his full time to the duties he assumed in the ministry in order to carry out the duties under the terms of the contract. He is not working half time with the ministry or anything like that. It is a full-time commitment. And I can assure the member it is the kind of full-time commitment that means I have had meetings with that fellow during the time he has been working under the terms of the contract going as late as 11 o'clock at night. He doesn't get paid any extra for that. I want to assure the member of that. He is a very hard-working and dedicated employee.

If he had wanted to deny us access to the experiences and involvement he had had on an ongoing basis with the ministry and say, "No, I'm going into my private practice," I'm sure he could have benefited much more by devoting his time solely to other kinds of contracts. But he gave his full time under the terms of this contract for the amount of money paid to him which I have indicated is about $54,000 a year on that basis.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: If the minister had not been caught in this, would he do it again? How long has this been going on and to what amount?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think the amount of the contract was dealt with in the auditor's report, the only problem being there was an error in the length of the contract in the auditor's report. It was for six months instead of four. I can't verify this point—I will later—but I believe there has been an extension of that because his work is not yet complete. Would he do it again?

Mr. Sargent: No, would you do it again?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Absolutely. Without any apologies or reservations—

Mr. Sargent: At a rate of $200,000 a year?

Hon. Mr. Norton:—because there is nothing wrong with what is being done. That man is doing for the people of this province work for which he has become uniquely qualified and he is not going to continue to be an employee of the ministry. As soon as this work is completed his work with us will be completed and he will go back to continue with his private practice.

I have no apologies to make—I want to assure the members of that—for that man being there. He is doing good service to the people of this province and I would say he is bringing to bear upon his job unique qualifications I couldn't have found anywhere else, certainly not people with his experience. The members over there can try to create some kind of innuendo or misunderstanding or scandal if they like, but there bloody well isn't. There isn't. It's clean, I can assure them. I stake my reputation on that.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN WINDSOR

Mr. Mackenzie: A question for the Minister of Labour: Given the high unemployment rate in the Windsor area, would the Minister of Labour, as a matter of some urgency, attempt to get the federal authorities to separate Windsor from the relatively high unemployment areas of London-Sarnia for purposes of unemployment insurance to allow for a longer period of coverage for unemployed workers in Windsor; and will the minister also tell us at the same time what steps he's taking in terms of planning to protect the workers at Chrysler in terms of both wages and their pension credits?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, some time ago the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) asked me about transitional assistance benefits. I did take the opportunity to write to the Minister of Employment and Immigration in Ottawa with that question I have not yet received a reply, so that's one part of it.

Second, I will be glad to discuss the matter raised by the member with the Minister of Employment and Immigration as soon as I can get in touch with him.

PUBLIC HOUSING

Mrs. Campbell: A question for the Minister of Housing: Yesterday I asked him if he would make a clear and unequivocal statement in order to assuage the fears in the minds of Ontario Housing tenants in Metro Toronto. He gave a philosophical position. Would he today tell me in clear terms that the NDP is wrong in telling these tenants he will be selling or may be selling these projects and they will have to relocate? Will he give that clear statement?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, first of all I take absolutely no responsibility for the inaccuracy of NDP remarks either in this municipality or anywhere else in the province, because they are prone to do it on every occasion when they see some political advantages. If the member for St. George would read the Hansard of yesterday, my remarks were as explicit, clear and to the point as they could be.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, we have all read it and tried to find an answer. The member's Premier has boasted about his and his government's concerns for people. Does he not realize that right across Metro Toronto, OHC tenants are living in absolute fear because of these statements? Is he incapable of making a clear statement on this subject?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Yesterday, I thought I made the point very clear, explicitly clear.

Mr. S. Smith: You didn't.

Mrs. Campbell: You didn't.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Do the members want the answer or do they want to keep yakking?

I said very clearly and distinctly yesterday that we had a policy and a program that wasn't only provincial, but federal and municipal, and I said clearly that we recognized this day and forward our social responsibility in providing housing for the less fortunate in Ontario, not only in this Metropolitan Toronto area. There are other areas in the province that have similar problems.

I said clearly that if we have the opportunity of selling some of the single, free-standing homes currently owned by the Ontario Housing Corporation and they became vacant and someone made an offer to purchase them, we could very well find ourselves in a position of selling them. Obviously, in multiple-use facilities, whether they be garden homes, row housing, apartment buildings and so on, the opportunity of trying to dispose of those units doesn't exist.

I said yesterday we were going to try and change the social mixture we have in the public ownership in Ontario. We'll accomplish that, not only by bringing people of higher incomes into our social housing but, indeed, if we sell off some housing, or use housing for higher-income groups than we presently have been accommodating, we will have, and I said so yesterday—and I trust the member for St. George can read—I said clearly and distinctly yesterday that at least a similar number, if not a greater number of units, would be secured from the private sector under a rent supplement program by agreement.

PETITIONS

STORAGE OF RAIL CARS

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 378 people, mostly in Port Robinson, including the mayor and eight aldermen from Thorold, addressed to the Honourable, the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

We protest the spotting and storing of railway cars containing highly toxic, explosive and inflammable materials adjacent or close to one another in the railyard at Port Robinson. We urge the Ministry of the Environment to examine the products contained in the rail cars, including picric, vinyl chloride, propane and liquid petroleum, and publicly report on the interaction possible and degree of disaster which could ensue, and further, to ensure that there are plans in place to deal with any such disaster. We call on the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) to make forceful input to the federal bill, C-25, An Act to promote Public Safety in the Transportation of Dangerous Goods, so as to assure the bill's adequacy in providing full safety during transit and storage.

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: I have the following petition, Mr. Speaker. It is, in fact, an addition to the petition which I submitted to this House on November 20 which, as you recall, protested the government's program for health care, opposed extra billings by doctors and called on the government to ensure that everyone in Ontario has full health-insurance coverage.

There are 4,898 signatures in this package to add to the 275,000 signatures which have already been submitted and to the 75,000 forms which were given to the cabinet when the Ontario Federation of Labour met with the cabinet last Thursday. I call on the government to take heed of this petition, to stop extra billing by doctors and stop the cutbacks in health care.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition addressed to the Honourable, the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

We protest the government's restraint program for health care. The quality of health in Ontario is now threatened by deterioration of services in hospitals and associated agencies. We request that northern Ontario be recognized as a unique region. We pay the same premiums as residents in the south, yet do not receive the same services. In this respect, we insist the air ambulance services be reinstated for nonemergency referrals and greater assistance be given to specialists locating in isolated communities. We oppose the extra fees being charged to chronic and other patients. We already pay a lot in taxes and we insist the government act to provide needed hospitals and health services and to ensure that every one has full health-insurance coverage.

This is in addition to the previous petition I submitted on behalf of the residents in northern Ontario. There are 294 names bringing the total to 8,605.

I call on the minister now to have OHIP cover nonemergency referrals to southern Ontario.

REPORTS

STANDING GENERAL GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. McCaffrey from the standing general government committee presented the following report including therein a report of the commissioners of estate bills and moved its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments, section 5 thereof having favourably been reported by the commissioners of estate bills:

Pr25, An Act respecting the City of London.

Report adopted.

[3:15]

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Villeneuve from the standing resources development committee reported the following resolution:

That supply in the following amounts and to defray the expenses of the Ministry of Labour be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980:

Ministry administration program, $8,014,300; industrial relations program, $2,956,000; women's program, $653,000; occupational health and safety program, $20,429,300; employment standards program, $3,074,000; Ontario manpower co-ordinating committee program, $251,000; human rights commission program, $1,862,000; labour relations board program, $2,413,000.

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee recommends that the fees less the actual cost of printing be remitted on Bill Pr3, An Act respecting Young People's Theatre.

Report adopted.

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee recommends that Bill 19, An Act to amalgamate the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and the Ministry of Education be not reported and that the Minister of Colleges and Universities and the Minister of Education reintroduce the bill with a preamble thereto.

Report adopted.

MOTIONS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that tomorrow, Thursday, December 20, the House meet at 10 a.m. with the routine proceedings to be called at 10 a.m. and a luncheon interval from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs be authorized to travel to Thunder Bay and Atikokan, Ontario, and Whiteshell, Manitoba, in the period from January 15 to January 17, 1980, for purposes related to the committee's terms of reference respecting environment impact and health considerations related to nuclear power.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that all the government orders for resuming adjourned debates on motions for adopting reports from committees, except for the June 21 report of the standing resources development committee, and the November 1 report of the standing members' services committee, be placed on the Order Paper on the second sessional day of the fourth session of the 31st Parliament.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak to the motion, if I may. I'd like to point out to you that among the reports which will be put forward for the new session is the interim report of the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs, concerning our work on reactor safety during the summer of this past year. I find it ironic that at this time we're on a motion from the government, apparently supported by the Liberal House leader and the Liberal Party, putting off debate on this report.

I'd like to inform you, Mr. Speaker, because you wouldn't know unless you're one of those inveterate readers of the select committee transcripts—and not many people are—that during the month of November, when we were considering the interim report of the select committee on Ontario Hydro on reactor safety, we in this party put forward a very strong recommendation to our colleagues on the committee that the report not be presented to the House at this time. The committee's work involved in reactor safety was not complete and there were matters which had arisen from material tabled before our committee which had not been dealt with by the committee during its summer sessions and there were new matters which had been raised with us and brought to our attention, which must be considered before an interim report could be made of any substance. We had agreed on it, Mr. Speaker, members of the committee agreed that we would not make a report. Among the members agreeing with that was the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed), and as far as I know the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) was present at that time.

We had complete agreement on the committee that we were not going to have a report; because there were still matters outstanding we would continue our work in January and February of 1980; we would present what we felt was a substantial and, as far as we could, complete report after that period of work.

Then the procedure got changed around by the entry of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), a little late, into our meeting. I'm sure the member will recall how he arrived during our meeting, discovered that we were in the process of deciding that we would review our work up to that point but not submit an interim report to this Legislature and he decided that was not good enough for him.

As I recollect, at that point the member for Halton-Burlington left the committee. As he had been in agreement with our procedure, I think that that may have been part of his motivation for leaving the room at that stage. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk continued, in his hardheaded, hardnosed and determined way, to encourage the Conservative members of the committee to the point where the member for York West (Mr. Leluk) put forward a motion that in fact we should have an interim report.

At that stage, my colleague the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) suggested to committee members that this was not an adequate procedure for our committee, considering the significance of the work in which we were engaged. I'd like to read to you, Mr. Speaker, if I may just for a few seconds, what the member for Port Arthur said at that time because I think it's rather important. He said: "I would just point out to the committee the dangers of that motion." This was the motion by the member for York West to proceed with an interim report. "If you put your signature to this report in this shape, without even having gone through the thing, the committee not even having discussed the introduction, page three . . . —and it goes on—" . . . you are willing to sign the report and submit it to the Legislature, that means sitting once a week from now through the next six weeks and we still won't get it done before the end of December."

Here we are at the end of this session and I think the fears of the member for Port Arthur are fully borne out by what has happened. We went through the farcical procedure, nudged on by a strange combination of Liberal and Conservative members on that committee, of preparing an interim report which it is now obviously not important we discuss before this Legislature rises for the Christmas season.

As a matter of fact I have to support the motion from the House leader of the Conservative Party because I believe the report is not complete enough to be worth discussing in this Legislature at this stage. Therefore, along with my colleagues from the NDP on the select committee and my colleagues here in this House, I will support the motion of the House leader. I thought you should know those facts though, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: I really appreciate the compliments extended to me by the honourable member who has just spoken. I had no way of realizing that I could sway the views of the majority of the committee so effectively.

My colleague the member for Halton-Burlington is not here to defend himself against the imputations of the reasons why he left the room on that particular occasion, but I do well remember that after the NDP did not seem to agree with the views expressed by the member for Port Arthur as fully as he wished, that he stormed out in high dudgeon, only to return rather meekly a few minutes later when he reconsidered his position.

Mind you, those comments, Mr. Speaker, are as irrelevant as those that preceded them from the previous speaker.

I do want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that you will recall immediately following the news of the Three Mile Island nuclear accident all members of this House, properly expressing their concern, added to the terms of reference of the select committee on Hydro affairs an immediate investigation into the safety of our atomic reactors in this province.

Certainly I favoured that, and all members, without equivocation, felt that the committee should set aside all other business and use the undoubted facilities and expertise available to us, through our counsel and other people, to determine whether in our view our atomic reactors are safe.

We worked diligently and hard. We had many arguments about this. I don't want to draw conclusions that perhaps are not fair but, frankly, after careful consideration and endless arguments after hearing views from the Atomic Energy Control Board and others who were nonprofessional but extremely well-versed private citizens, we came to the conclusion, which really was fairly well-founded, that the reactors were acceptably safe. This is the burden of the report.

Having heard the members of the NDP who took part in these discussions for these many weeks, I was surprised to see when the report was published that the NDP had presented a dissenting view, signed by the chairman who certainly had expressed no dissenting view, nor had other members expressed a dissenting view, that the reactors are not acceptably safe.

It is quite appropriate for them to hold those views, but since they didn't form a part of the coherent discussions in the committee, I personally didn't feel the House should be thrown into a kind of a debate, such as would be required by the report before us, with this sudden dissenting view that came out of the blue and which must have come from a very hardnosed and determined member of the NDP delegation to that committee.

I don't know who it could be. But someone who was quoted in the Ottawa papers as saying she had given up trying to convince the members of the Legislature and, apparently, her own colleagues of the importance of this matter, obviously, was successful in convincing them. Whether or not they agreed with her, that we are all going to be blown to hell in a flash some time in the near future, or whether they agreed with her political connotation of the matter, I am not prepared to say. All I know is that the usefulness of the report has been practically nullified by such dissent.

I was particularly concerned that the chairman of the committee, who is not present, though I wish he were, particularly since he was so keen that the report be debated—I have a feeling that that keenness was probably dictated as well—he undertook to have himself interviewed on CBC on whether nuclear reactors are not acceptably safe. I felt that that was improper for him as the chairman of the committee. It was quite proper for the energy critic of the NDP to do so. I felt that the chairman of the committee, in doing so, had to a great extent nullified his usefulness as chairman.

I apologize in no way for discussing with my colleagues in the Liberal Party and informing the House leader of the government and the House leader of the NDP that we felt to take a day, or as long as it would require, to debate the report in its present form would now not serve a useful purpose. I would say I believe that because of the irrational dissent put forward by the NDP.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise to support the views expressed this afternoon by the senior member of the Liberal caucus in the committee.

I think it was imperative that the report we have tabled before us was presented at the time it was. As the member has pointed out, since the events of the Three Mile Island incident the people of Ontario have been, to say the least, most apprehensive and concerned not only about the total ramifications of that incident but whether the nuclear component in this province had any similarities to, or any superiority over, the type of reactors that are operating in the United States, of which the Three Mile Island reactor is one.

[3:30]

There was a great deal of apprehension expressed in the news media. As a consequence thereof, I think it was imperative and a priority responsibility of this Legislature that we made known to the people of Ontario in an official capacity that the reactors operating in this province under the supervision of Ontario Hydro and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited are acceptably safe. I think it would have been totally irresponsible for this committee to have continued without making any official statement whatsoever more than six months after the event; it would have been totally irresponsible to keep the people wondering how safe the system was in Ontario.

The debating of the report is secondary. I suggest, to the important consideration that a formal official report was tabled so the people of Ontario could rest easier and be more certain that we do have an acceptably safe nuclear power program in this province.

I also must comment on what I consider to be a highly irregular feature of the report in that the chairman has seen fit to sign a dissenting report. I won't comment further on the fact that he has seen fit to make public statements that have been something less than neutral, as would normally be the position taken by a chairman of a committee.

I think the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has made the point well and it doesn't need to be reiterated. I do support the views he has expressed here this afternoon.

It is regrettable that we did not have the opportunity to debate the interim report in the House before the session was concluded. I was looking forward to participating in that debate. That is not to say that a most useful purpose has not been served by the tabling of the report. It was important and imperative that an interim report was tabled in the House, and—

Mr. Speaker: It is really very difficult to discern whether the member is debating the motion or the report itself.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I am using no more latitude than the members on the opposite side of the House used in discussing this matter, if I may say so.

I might conclude by stating that the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, by entering into the discussions that day, did indeed do a service—not only to the members of the committee, but to the people of the province as a whole—by probably turning the thinking around to the point where the importance of an official report being presented to the House at the earliest opportunity was realized.

For that reason, I am pleased the interim report was tabled. I look forward to participating in the debate on the report in the spring, but I think the most important consideration was that an interim report was prepared and tabled in this House.

Mr. Foulds: I want to speak to the motion because my name has been taken in vain in previous discussion.

Mr. Eaton: Tell us why you blew up in the committee that day.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, I think I will take time to discuss that. I would like to speak to the motion rather than to the report. It is important that the motion pass, because I do think it is important for this Legislature to debate at some point, the findings of the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs as it affects nuclear reactor safety in this province.

I want to make a couple of remarks about what has been said previously. It is true that on the day that has been cited, I did storm out of the committee in some anger. I must confess that once every five or six years I do lose my temper. When that happens, it is much more productive for me to absent myself from the discussions going on than to engage in them in what might be a non-productive way. So I went out for a few brisk turns around the circle in Queen's Park.

On a point of privilege, in response to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, I returned because the work of the committee is important and even in the botched kind of way he tried to force through the work of the committee it is important to try to get as good a balance in the committee as possible. It is obvious that when you have an alliance between the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk and the member for Oriole, the committee needs some balance.

The dissenting report referred to previously in this debate, which I signed, did not say—and I wish the members would understand the importance of language if they don't understand the importance of signing their names to a report—did not say the reactors in Ontario were unsafe.

What we said was we did not yet have enough information to make a firm declaration they were "acceptably safe." In other words, we had additional information we had not considered which we felt we should consider and for other reasons we felt we could not make the categorical statement the members for Oriole and Brant-Oxford-Norfolk wanted to make, for reasons I know not, that they are safe. In other words, they wanted to rush through a judgement by the committee to get that concept firmly embedded in the minds of the public of Ontario. That does a disservice to the people of Ontario.

I want to use the title of an article about the British nuclear system in a magazine called the New Statesman. What we can say about the reactors in Ontario is that so far we have had no accidents, no serious accidents, that have resulted in large-scale devastation or death. The title of the article in the New Statesman was, "So Far We Have Been Lucky."

Mr. Speaker: You are really straying from the motions.

Mr. Foulds:—"So Far, So Good."

Mr. Speaker: You are even off the continent now.

Mr. Foulds: One last comment. The chairman of the committee has not been here to defend himself, but anyone who knows the chairman of the select committee on Hydro affairs knows two things. First of all, he is a man of complete independence who will not be dictated to by any member of the committee, whether it is the member for Carleton East, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, or the member for Oriole. No member of this assembly should make such accusations about the member for York South. The second thing about the member for York South is that he has, in his long and honest and honourable parliamentary career, held many strong opinions, but in his role as chairman of the committee he has never been less than objective. I challenge any member of this assembly or of that committee to say the chairman of the committee has been less than objective in conducting the affairs of that committee.

It does not seem to me that just because a man accepts the responsibility of chairmanship that makes him a eunuch and that is what the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk and the member for Oriole are complaining about. Because the member for York South had the courage to say what he believes they object, because he is the chairman of the committee. They do themselves, the member for York South, this Legislature and the committee a disservice when they do that.

Report adopted.

AGGREGATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the standing resources development committee be authorized to sit during the interval between sessions to consider Bill 127, An Act to revise the Pits and Quarries Control Act, 1971, and that notwithstanding the prorogation of the House, Bill 127 remain referred to this committee for clause-by-clause examination and upon commencement of the fourth session of the 31st Parliament the bill shall be deemed to have been introduced and read the first time, be deemed to have been read a second time, and referred to the standing resources development committee.

Motion agreed to.

OCCUPIERS' LIABILITY ACT; TRESPASS TO PROPERTY ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that notwithstanding the prorogation of the House, Bill 202, An Act respecting Occupiers' Liability, and Bill 203, An Act to Protect against Trespass to Property remain referred to the standing resources development committee for clause-by-clause examination and upon commencement of the fourth session of the 31st Parliament, the bills shall be deemed to have been introduced and read the first time, be deemed to have been read a second time and referred to the standing resources development committee.

Motion agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the standing general government committee be authorized to sit during the interval between the sessions to consider Bill 3, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974, and that the committee be authorized, notwithstanding any practice or order of the House, to report its observations and deliberations on the bill or the subject matter of the bill, and that notwithstanding the prorogation of the House, Bill 3 remain referred to this committee for clause-by-clause examination, and upon commencement of the fourth session of the 31st Parliament, the bill shall be deemed to have been introduced and read the first time, be deemed to have been read a second time and referred to the standing general government committee.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Wells moved the following standing committees be continued and authorized to sit during the interval between the sessions:

Standing general government committee to consider Bill 3; standing resources development committee to consider Bill 127, Bill 202 and Bill 203 and the annual report of the Minister of Natural Resources for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1979; standing public accounts committee to consider the report of the provincial auditor, the sittings of the committee to take place during the month of February 1980; standing members' services committee to examine the operation of constituency offices as approved by the Board of Internal Economy, the sittings of the committee to take place during the month of February 1980.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Riddell moved first reading of Bill 208, An Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to prohibit unfair practices in the marketing of farm products in Ontario. These unfair practices include the arrangement of price advantages in the form of rebate, discounts or allowances between some sellers of a farm product and some buyers of a farm product to the exclusion of other buyers and sellers of the same product. The effect of these practices is to work hardships upon the buyers and sellers who are excluded from these arrangements and eventually to reduce the level of competition in the market for the farm product.

Provision is made in the bill for orders of compliance, assurances of voluntary compliance and enforcement of orders and assurances.

Mr. Speaker, I had Mr. McGuigan second the motion as he is a man who has a great deal of knowledge and experience in the area of production. He was one of the few farmers who had the intestinal fortitude to appear before the resources development committee and he certainly had a great deal of input into the consultation leading up to this legislation.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the member and his colleagues will have an opportunity to say that during second reading.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Elgie moved first reading of Bill 209, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I have some remarks to make about this bill and about a paper I would like to table with the Legislature.

Over the past few months it has become apparent from the ongoing review and study of workmen's compensation—

Mr. Speaker: How long is that? That should have been done by way of a ministerial statement.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: My apologies, sir. Do I have permission of the House to do it now?

Mr. Speaker: Proceed.

[3:45]

Mr. McClellan: Just this once.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Just this once; just this session. We've got the rules of the game straight anyway.

Over the past few months it has become apparent, from the ongoing review and studies of workmen's compensation taking place not only in this province but elsewhere, that major changes in the present system should be considered. In order that all aspects of possible changes could be considered, I instructed the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board to prepare a paper for distribution to interested parties, a copy of which I am tabling today.

I am also establishing a committee which will accept written submissions from interested parties with respect to the proposals and the committee would be prepared to receive other options or suggestions for change. I shall be announcing the precise terms of reference of the committee, its composition and the expected date of its report early in the new year.

Keeping in mind the long-term proposals, I am also introducing an amending act which will provide immediate changes in many important areas.

1. An increase in the ceiling on earnings, from $16,200 to $18,500, effective July 1, 1979. This means that the maximum weekly rate of compensation payable will increase from $233.66 to $266.83.

2. Recognizing the need of injured workers who have received temporary disability benefits for prolonged periods, an amendment is included which increases their benefits by a factor of 10 per cent after they have received temporary disability benefits for 12 consecutive months.

To give full effect to the $16,200 ceiling which was introduced on July 1, 1978, and to recognize the full change in the cost of living index, I am recommending that the sections previously affected by the six per cent figure be adjusted upward to a figure of eight per cent as of July 1, 1978.

This will affect the following areas: (a) The minimum for temporary disability will be adjusted to $117 per week; (b) pensions awarded for accidents occurring on or before December 31, 1977, will be increased to an adjusted figure of eight per cent, and to recognize accidents occurring during the period from December 31, 1977, to June 30, 1978, a factor of eight per cent will be added to pensions arising out of those accidents; (c) permanent total-disability pensions will be increased to $519 per month and permanent partial-disability pensions will be raised proportionately; (d) pensions for dependent spouses will be increased to $372 per month. (e) pensions for dependent children will be increased to $101 per month; (f) orphans' pensions will be increased to $115 per month.

4. Disability pensions awarded for accidents occurring prior to June 30, 1979, will be increased by a factor of 10 per cent effective July 1, 1979.

5. Permanent total disability pensions will be increased to $571 per month, effective July 1, 1979. Permanent partial disability pensions will be raised proportionately on the same effective date.

6. Pensions for dependent spouses will be increased to $410, effective July 1, 1979.

7. Pensions for dependent children will be increased to $112 per month, effective July 1, 1979.

8. Orphans' pensions will be increased to $127 per month, effective July 1, 1979.

9. Pensions for dependents other than spouses and children will also be increased proportionately to those increases granted to dependent spouses.

10. The minimum for temporary disability will be increased to $129 per week, effective July 1, 1979. This means that on or after that date those workers earning $172 or less per week will receive the minimum of $129 per week and all workers earning $129 or less will receive tax-free compensation equal to their full earnings. This will include part-time workers.

11. The burial allowance will be increased from $800 to $1,000 for deaths occurring on or after July 1, 1979.

12. The initial lump-sum payment to a dependent spouse will also be increased from $800 to $1,000 on the same basis.

13. Clothing allowances will be increased from $219 per annum to $240 per annum with respect to lower-limb prostheses and back braces for permanent disability, and from $110 to $120 with respect to upper-limb prostheses.

The changes recommended are intended to provide more equitable levels of compensation pending receipt of the further report which has been requested. The cost of the recommended changes is substantial, having a total capitalized value of $120 million for existing pensions and $75 million in respect of future awards and existing claims. I therefore seek support for the amending act and the proposals put forward.

CITIZENS' COMPLAINTS PROCEDURE ACT

Mr. Warner moved first reading of Bill 210, An Act to provide a Procedure for Reviewing Citizens' Complaints concerning Police Conduct in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide a procedure for reviewing citizens' complaints concerning police conduct in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. The bill places every police officer under a duty to exercise his authority as a police officer in a manner consistent with the diligent performance of his duty and respectful of the rights, liberties, inherent dignity and reputation of every citizen. Complaints concerning police conduct are to be dealt with by a registrar of citizens' complaints and the citizens' complaints tribunal appointed by the council of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. The bill provides for mediation concerning a dispute or for the hearing of a complaint by the citizens' complaints tribunal. After holding a hearing under the act, the tribunal will report its findings to the police chief, the Metropolitan board of commissioners of police and the Metropolitan council.

LEGISLATIVE PAGES

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day it's customary, when we have a group of pages leaving us, for us to express our appreciation. One of the ways in which we do that is to have their names and their ridings read into the record. They are as follows:

Leigh Bates, of Hastings-Peterborough; Ray Boehm, of Waterloo North; Sean Brett, of Don Mills; Peggy Breen, of Scarborough West; Gregory Brown, of Quinte; Eleanor Casson, of York Mills; Suzanne Coles, of Etobicoke; Colette Coughlin, of Windsor-Riverside; Michael Gollob, of Oriole; Natalie Horlatsch, of High Park-Swansea; Jennifer Hurtubise, of Erie; Alexander Leslie, of Algoma; Peter Maclean, of Northumberland; Troy Manary, of Huron-Bruce; Craig Martel, of Sudbury East; Patricia McCarthy, of York West; Kevin Rizun, of Hamilton East; Trevor Robertson, of St. Andrew-St. Patrick; Cathy Schick, of Mississauga East; Patricia Sherson, of Grey; Al Strathdee, of Perth; Ryerson Symons, of Peterborough; and Cynthia Vanbodegom, of Simcoe Centre.

Will you join me in thanking them for their service here?

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 386, 395, 397 and 398 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 5777.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 204, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

CITY OF LONDON ACT

Mr. Van Horne moved second reading of Bill Pr25, An Act respecting the City of London.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY

MINISTRY OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, we were somewhat limited in the estimates of this particular ministry as a fair amount of time was used up in a particular and very worthwhile discussion related to the Boise Cascade involvement. Notwithstanding that, I want to get on the record a couple of concerns that I would have liked to have put in place at that time but was not able to.

I have a concern in two areas that I would like to relate to the minister in these concurrences. I would like him to deal with them as he sees fit and perhaps at some future date to respond in a way that is going to deal with the problems.

The two problems specifically are arson and vandalism. It doesn't come to mind exactly when I raised the question, but we had a particularly serious rash of arson-related incidents in Niagara. From time to time, it seemed to take on proportions that were way beyond what could be expected as reasonable numbers.

In following that up, we got some statistical information from the intelligence officer in the office of the fire marshal. In response to invitations from local fire departments throughout the province to investigate fires that the local departments suspect to be of an incendiary nature, he indicated such requests are often turned down due to lack of personnel qualified to conduct such investigations.

The investigative techniques used to determine the fire's cause are becoming more and more sophisticated and, to some extent, may account for the very difficult time the ministry has in sending these kind of people to investigate incendiary fires.

It seems there has been a great change in the type of incendiary fire over the last few years. Where arson for profit used to be the major motivation, in the past few years it seems that vandalism has become the major cause of arson. There seems to be a major increase in incendiary fires in that particular area.

While in other jurisdictions they are combating this problem with awareness programs and seminars, it seems we have to address ourselves to the problem when we view the numbers. In 1965, approximately two per cent of the fires were deliberately set, and by 1977 that had risen to 16 to 17 per cent. The honourable members can see the reason I was so concerned in my attempts to get this on the record. I'm sure the minister is aware of these figures.

It's always difficult to address ourselves to increased commitments in various areas in the light of increases in cost to the ministry. The numbers speak for themselves. I'm not going to try to put on the record the research that I had done. It's somewhat of a disappointment to me that we took the time to do the research, but it doesn't seem appropriate to go in depth into these two issues. I hope I have put my message across in that particular matter.

The other area of concern in many municipalities, which I had hoped to get into in some more depth, is vandalism. It's another area in which we had given notice that we were going to go into in depth, but I don't think we can because of time considerations. In passing, it seems the figures there are also astronomical. I hesitate to project what they might have been if local school boards right across the province hadn't put in mechanisms of their own relating to burglar systems, increasing of night watchmen and such efforts as they could make because of substantial increases, not only in insurance premiums, but in the deductibles allowed because of the huge losses.

As I say, there are many other areas I would like to have dealt with in some kind of depth, but we are somewhat restricted. I don't think this is the time or the place to go into them in concurrences, but I wanted to get those two matters of concern on the record. I'm hopeful the minister will address himself to these two serious problems and share with us now or in the future what his proposals might be relating to these two concerns I have.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise to give a synopsis of the Solicitor General's estimates. We had an opportunity to speak about particular issues during the course of the estimates, but I would like to raise in a relatively short period of time some of my concerns in relation to policing and certain issues which have been raised during the course of estimates or during question period in this House.

I want to stress the concerns raised by members on this side of the House in relation to the roles of the Solicitor General and the Attorney General. It seems we have clear evidence that concern exists on the floor of this House, not just from the New Democratic Party, but also from members of the Liberal Party. We conveyed such concern to the Solicitor General during the course of his estimates.

I hope the Solicitor General will take this issue seriously and will convey this concern to the Premier in order that concrete action will be taken to correct this situation in relation to the conflict of interest which exists between the role of the Solicitor General and that of the Attorney General by holding the same portfolio.

During the course of the estimates, I raised this concern. It's time the Solicitor General understands that by holding the two portfolios he won't have so much time available to look after all the issues which affect one or the other portfolio.

By talking about the Solicitor General, I express my particular concern that we don't need a part-time minister in Ontario, especially when we are dealing with the $174-million budget he has to look after.

It's time the Solicitor General takes this task seriously. He has a lot of issues which he has to look after, and we don't need inaction coming from his ministry. We need comprehensive and legislative action to cover the loopholes which exist in our system and are affecting citizens of this province as well. It's no time to gamble on this amount of money, $174 million. Because of major concerns expressed by the Solicitor General during consideration of his estimates, we need a full-time minister to look after those concerns as soon as possible.

Also during the estimates, I raised the issue of racism in Metropolitan Toronto. It's a vivid and strong issue that must be dealt with as soon as possible. I realize the Solicitor General has been undertaking studies to solve certain problems affecting ethnic communities in Metropolitan Toronto, and I have to convey my dismay to the introduction of the citizens' complaints bill by emphasizing the fact that police complaints are supposed to be investigated by the police.

By introducing this legislation, I don't think such a bill is going to relieve the apprehension that exists among the ethnic communities in Metropolitan Toronto. I don't think the new bureaucratic process being set up as a result of this bill is going to solve the concrete problems which the ethnic communities are suffering from.

I'm urging the Solicitor General to revise, in some way, the contents of the bill he introduced in this Legislature. I am aware that such a bill is going to be sent to a committee of the Legislature but, by doing so, I hope the Solicitor General is going to keep his mind open to be flexible enough that the needs and concerns of the interested groups concerned about these problems are going to be incorporated, not just within the principle of the bill, but also within the sections of the bill as well.

I would like to raise the issue of the Cardinal Carter report. The report has been appraised and, when presented to the Ontario Police Commission, it seems that members of the commission were quite happy about the contents and the spirit of the report to alleviate the racial apprehension created as a result of the concrete confrontation between ethnic people and the police force in Metropolitan Toronto.

I would like to emphasize what has been done so far in relation to the report presented by Cardinal Carter. By emphasizing that again, I would like to express my particular concern that the Ontario Police Commission has at no time taken seriously the particular task of implementing the recommendations.

In particular, I would like to give a synopsis of what has been done, and I am sure the Solicitor General is keeping an eye on the whole process. For example, only four recommendations of the Carter report have been implemented to date. The police commission has established a committee with minority groups under Etobicoke Mayor Dennis Flynn. The Metro Toronto police chief, Harold Adamson, has ordered officers to avoid verbal insults to any citizen or face dismissal. The Metropolitan Toronto Police Association president has agreed to provide closer editorial supervision of the News and Views, an unofficial police publication that has printed racist remarks in the past. All six Metro school boards have instituted programs of different intensity to combat racism in the schools. The six other recommendations are under study.

Again, if the report has been overwhelmingly accepted by the Ontario Police Commission and by interested groups here in Metropolitan Toronto, I guess it is understandable enough that some sort of speed is going to take place in relation to the general concerns that have been expressed through the contents of Cardinal Carter's report.

The bill introduced in the Ontario Legislature on Wednesday proposes a three-year pilot project and a civil review procedure for complaints against police. In relation to that I don't want to miss in some way the particular concern I have raised in previous estimates, that one of the major problems affecting the citizens of this province when they are in contact with the police officers is the behaviour of police officers.

I guess a lot of problems can be eliminated and completely excluded if the police in some way are going to change their behaviour when they are dealing with or when they are in touch with the public as a whole. In the past I have said that the Ontario Police College should play an important role by making sure that such behaviour is going to change to ensure that relationships between police officers and the public are going to greatly improve in the future.

One thing should be said to the Solicitor General. There is no structure that can be effectively implemented in Ontario if the police behaviour won't change. Again, I don't want to accuse all the police forces about their behaviour. There are bad apples, as the Solicitor General and other members have said, in the past and at the present time. But it is the bad apples with the police forces that are causing the problems, and sometimes really serious problems.

It is foolish in a way that the public has been waiting for the citizens' complaints bill, and here we are confronted again with the same issue, that the police force has to investigate the complaint first and then other components are going to look after the citizens' complaints.

The attitude expressed by the Solicitor General through the presentation of this bill urges us to present a bill in the Legislature dealing with this issue. We know there is a growing concern in our society about this bill. Dismissal of the main issue, that investigation should be independent and should be seen to be independent, is again incorporated through a bill which won't solve the problem at all.

I don't understand why Metropolitan Toronto is faced with this concern. I remember during the course of the Solicitor General's estimates there was talk about police forces and the Ontario Provincial Police being used as strikebreakers in Ontario, and the Solicitor General was clear in stating that the OPP are not used as strikebreakers in Ontario. But when someone—I don't remember who—raised the issue about regional police officers, the Solicitor General said, "I don't know anything about that." I can't quote the Solicitor General exactly, but the main concept he expressed was that the OPP is not used; there is a possibility that police officers belonging to regional police forces are used, although he was not aware of it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, that is not what was said. Perhaps the honourable member misunderstood what was said, but we certainly didn't say that.

Mr. Lupusella: The minister said he was not aware of police officers belonging to municipalities, or something to that effect.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I certainly have no information of that nature.

Mr. Lupusella: I agree with the minister. I was trying to state the general principle.

The point is that the Ontario Police Commission in some way falls under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General. The province appoints members to the police commission, and the police commission in turn has full responsibility to report to the Solicitor General all the activities which take place in the regional municipalities. I am sure the Solicitor General should be aware of and should make an attempt to clear up situations like the racial tensions which have developed in Metropolitan Toronto, by making sure the Ontario Police Commission in some way introduces new methods to solve these local problems.

The reason I am saying that is to emphasize two things: Either the members sitting on the Ontario Police Commission do not have a clear and concrete perspective of what is going on in Metropolitan Toronto or they are not interested in solving the problem. My assumption in making this allegation is that there are other municipalities more concerned about local problems, in particular those relating to the general makeup of the ethnic people living in certain municipalities.

As an example I would like to report to the Solicitor General what is happening in Windsor. That municipality has always been concerned about the problems affecting ethnic communities. The police commission in Windsor has been studying, for I don't know how many years, the makeup of their society by taking into consideration the needs of the ethnic communities as well as of the general populace.

Just a few days ago, for example, I was going through clippings of newspapers, and I was able to find one dated November 24, 1979, from Windsor Star. I want to point out that in Windsor, after 125 years of erratic growth and occasional social turmoil, racial attacks on individuals, or examples of racial discrimination in the work place in Windsor, have been few and far between in recent years—at least those incidents that reach the courts or draw headlines.

What have they been doing to solve this particular problem? This comparatively benign situation—and I am just quoting from this article, Mr. Speaker—can be attributed in part to those agencies preparing to defuse problems before they arise—groups and individuals dedicated to preventing the rash of problems that Toronto and other Canadian centres have experienced recently.

For example, the Windsor police department includes studies on ethnic attitudes and sensitivities in its annual training program and refresher courses, and is preparing to participate in seminars with new arrivals next year. This is a concrete action, a concrete interest, from the Windsor police department, to try to take into consideration the special lifestyles expressed by different ethnic communities living in that particular area.

If they have been doing that for years, I don't understand why the Ontario Police Commission is not trying to incorporate or implement concrete studies which defuse this overwhelming problem affecting lots of ethnic people living here in Metropolitan Toronto.

"Windsor now"—just continuing the quote from that article—"has become a byword around the world for its harmonious environment. Windsor can be a mean city right now. It is a mean city because the old economic anxieties are here again."

The recent problems in Toronto between police and black immigrants—violent, sometimes fatal, confrontations—have led to investigation by Gerald Emmett Cardinal Carter of the treatment of racial minorities in that city. Other Canadian centres are examining their own attitudes to new arrivals. The police department here has attempted to stay ahead of potential problems by training its personnel to better understand foreign customs and attitudes.

We have actively sought to recruit from among the ethnic communities in this city. Just two weeks ago, I received a few phone calls at my office from some people belonging to the ethnic community who had applied to the Ontario Police Commission to become police officers; it seems their applications have been turned down. I don't know the reason. It seems the Ontario Police Commission has said it would be open to the public. But applicants are receiving a simple letter thanking them for their interest in becoming a police officer, but saying their application has not been accepted. I would like to know what is the matter. What is going on when someone tries to apply? I am sure the Solicitor General is going to receive a few letters in relation to that. I hope he will be able to give me an explanation why ethnic people's applications have been turned down. Maybe there are reasons; I don't know, I am not aware of them. I would be interested to know why their applications have been turned down.

The police chief of Windsor stated it took some time before fully understanding that some immigrants enjoy standing on the street corners on a hot summer night and that such action does not indicate preparation for a riot. At least, Windsor has been prepared to take some concrete action, as I stated before, to understand the lifestyle of ethnic people. Sometimes the presence of police officers might create problems among the different ethnic communities.

Concluding this particular concern, the point I would like to raise is that the Cardinal Carter report was praised when it was introduced but to date it seems there is little action going on aside from the studies that are going to be completed—I don't know when. I hope the Solicitor General will see some sense of urgency in relation to these particular issues in order that those studies can be finalized as soon as possible.

I am sure the Solicitor General is aware that the citizens' complaints bureau also has been criticized in an editorial in the Toronto Star. By emphasizing the principle of that investigation or investigations which are to be conducted by the police force, they won't be seen by the public as being independent.

As I stated before, I am trying to be relatively brief, but I don't want to miss the opportunity to raise the issue of the Ontario Police College. The Ontario Police College at present is a waste of time and money, because the police officers are going there. I had the opportunity to visit such a centre a few years ago with the then Solicitor General, and it seems the prime objective of recruits' spending time there—before, it was 12 weeks, and now it has been extended to 15 weeks—is simply to do physical exercise and to learn how to shoot.

My prime concern is that the Ontario Police College should be the university of the police forces in the province. If we are going to revamp and restudy the programs that are conducted in 15 weeks, an overall study of what the Ontario Police College can be in the future would also be a good investment for the efficiency of the police officers. In turn, the police officers will show such efficiency in our society as well.

I hope the Solicitor General will take me seriously when I state that an overall study should start immediately to make sure the money currently spent at the Ontario Police College is worth it and the programs are of prime importance. I want to re-emphasize the principle that, as far as I am concerned, the way I sense and view the Ontario Police College is that it should be transformed into a place in which the recruits are going to take full advantage of their training and not just be there and spend their time only in physical activities and training to shoot. We need more than that.

There has been a concern lately about increasing the number of OPP officers as a result of the carnage taking place on the highways. I share the Solicitor General's concerns. I share his prime objective to reduce fatal tragedies on the highways; so the only solution for him is to increase the number of OPPs.

I had the opportunity to go through the contents of a letter sent by the Premier to the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke), in relation to this issue. The Premier expressed just concern about this problem.

As a result of the restraint program, there is no way action will be taken to make sure some money is going to be allocated so the number of OPP officers will increase.

I can accept in general terms the Solicitor General's view. It might be true that, with more visibility on the highways, the number of fatal accidents will be reduced. I don't know. For me, it's just a dilemma. But I don't understand why the government is so persistent, as a result of the restraint program, not to share the concern of the Solicitor General.

The Premier, instead of following the route of increasing the numbers of OPP officers, wants new methods implemented to make sure such a decrease eventually will take place. I don't know if such a system of new methods is going to work. The OPP has been trying to experiment with new methods. Even the last one, eventually suggested by the Solicitor General, to increase the visibility of the OPP on the highways, I don't think that situation changed.

My last concern—I don't want to spend one hour expressing this concern to the Solicitor General—is that in the past I have been critical of police officers spending 75 per cent of their time in issuing traffic violation tickets.

The Solicitor General is aware that crime is increasing in Ontario. When I talk about crime, I am talking about serious crime as well. With the present system, the police officer has an obligation under the Police Act to make sure that any offender appears before the courts. There is no problem about this, but there is one thing which is so anachronistic. I want to share this concern with the Solicitor General.

When people are appearing before the courts for traffic violation tickets, when the judge is stating whether or not the offender wants to pay his fine or wants to go to jail, it seems the only position that is pursued is to make sure the offender is going to pay instead of going to jail.

The reason I emphasize this particular problem is that I received a letter from a constituent of mine who was inclined to go to jail instead of paying the ticket. Since his licence was suspended, there was no option open to the offender but to go to jail. I hope the Solicitor General in his capacity also as Attorney General is going to correct the situation, at least when the verdict is stated in court. Why is the judge asking the offender whether he wants to go to jail or to pay the ticket? At least, the option is open. If the final result is that the offender has to pay the ticket, why is the judge asking the question if he wants to go to jail? It's something which the Solicitor General should take a look at.

Serious crime is of great concern to our society. A survey has been taken lately asking the question of the public what its main concern was. They all answered that crime was the big problem. Even though I realize that OPP officers, in co-operation with municipal officers, are carrying out certain tasks to fight crime—and I am making particular reference to Operation Alpha, which has been a successful one—I would like to see Operation Beta and Operation Gamma. Eventually, I would like to see Operation Omega. I hope this type of co-operation is going to increase. I hope the Solicitor General is going to emphasize more the role of the police officer to combat crime instead of spending time on traffic violation tickets.

I hope the Solicitor General in the course of meetings with municipalities—and I am making particular reference to one which took place in Sudbury—expresses his particular concern about the time that is spent by police officers in court and outside to catch traffic violators and about the frustration they feel by going to court when offenders are not paying the tickets. We understand that. I don't want them to be on the streets.

I know the Solicitor General and I are concerned that the law enforcement process is taking place. As I stated before, the public is more concerned about serious crime and that something should be done. Realizing that 75 per cent of police work is spent on the streets just to issue tickets, I see something that is really anachronistic.

I also read articles that organized crime is a problem. The Solicitor General is aware that the figures show almost 1,000 people—I hope not all are in Ontario—almost 1,000 people who are involved in organized crime are living here in Canada. I don't know what kind of activities they are performing, but I hope the Solicitor General is also emphasizing the need to solve this serious problem.

None the less, something else should be said about white-collar crime. Computer crime now is something to which we have to devote our time to make sure new techniques and new programs are going to be implemented to ensure that society is going to be protected.

The motto of the police force is "To serve and protect." If we are going to undertake the task of fighting serious crime in a very serious and concrete way, then I will be sure the public is getting in return the protection for which the public is looking.

I would like to conclude my statement to the Solicitor General by saying that I hope some of these concerns are going to be taken into consideration.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I have one brief item I want to raise on the concurrence.

First of all, I want to thank the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) and the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) for the courtesy they extended me during the debate on the estimates in committee, because I did take a considerable amount of time. I thought it was worthwhile, but I really appreciate the courtesy that the Liberal Solicitor General's critic extended in the committee.

I want to raise one item with the Solicitor General as it relates to the matter of search warrants which I raised during his estimates but involving a subsequent event. I know this is not a committee debate so we can't have questions back and forth.

I've been disturbed because for the last three or four days in northwestern Ontario there have been rumours—and I say categorically they are rumours; I have no substantiation on this but when I checked back with Thunder Bay today the rumours persisted—that 20 to 30 new search warrants have been issued through sworn information by the OPP involving individual homes in northwestern Ontario, either in connection with the dispute of lumber and sawmill workers and Boise Cascade Canada Limited or the so-called bombing threats or spite incidents.

Frankly, I hope such warrants have not been issued, certainly not in that blanket way where apparently 20 to 30 have been so issued. I would hope I could get from the Solicitor General the assurance that, if such warrants have been issued, they will not be used in the way the six warrants issued on October 5 were, to harass individuals and trade union members. That is a blatant misuse of a search warrant.

I want to get a categorical assurance from the Solicitor General that search warrants will not be used to harass either trade union members or the officers of a trade union who are engaged in a legitimate strike. I want to suggest to the Solicitor General that if the OPP are considering issuing further search warrants in connection with the incidents to which I refer, they had better be far more sure than they were the last time that they have substantial evidence before they go ransacking either through union offices or people's private homes.

I found the rumours disturbing. I state that they are only rumours as far as I know. I would like to know if the Solicitor General has been informed by the Ontario Provincial Police of their actions in this regard. I would like the Solicitor General to let the House know whether, as a matter of policy he is informed ahead of time when such action is contemplated by the OPP, particularly in a sensitive situation like this one.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) is concerned, I'm not aware of these search warrants. I will certainly convey his concerns to the OPP. I think they will obviously be interested in the concerns of any member of the Legislature. I will be happy to do that.

There were a number of matters raised by the members opposite during this concurrence, much of which had been raised during the estimates, so I don't propose to deal with them in detail now. I'd simply like to say once again that their concerns have been noted.

I would like to express to the members opposite my appreciation for their contribution to the estimates process and to say, as I said to the Attorney General's critics this morning, that my door is always open. I'm always very happy to discuss these matters with the honourable members at any time. I think it comes with the duties of the Solicitor General which largely relate to effective and fair law enforcement. We all share the same desires and the same goals in that respect. I want to assure them I'll be happy to deal with these matters further at any time that is considered appropriate by them.

Resolution concurred in.

Resolution for supply for the following ministry was concurred in by the House:

Provincial Secretariat for Justice.

MINISTRY OF HEALTH

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the minister to something that is a continuing problem in my own area and maybe in many other areas. Brought to my attention quite often is the problem of finding nursing-home beds for people discharged from hospitals on the recommendation of their doctor or the doctors in the hospital, if they're assigned to a certain division of a hospital.

What we're finding in some cases is we're removing people from hospitals and putting them in lodging homes that are not equipped for nursing-home care, although these patients have already had approval given for nursing-home care. I want to draw that to the attention of the minister. I know he has been waiting and has had some recommendations about nursing home beds in Essex county and the city of Windsor. However, I want to draw that to his attention today. It's a recurring problem and I think it's getting worse. I would hope that something could be done soon.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak for a few moments to the concurrence in the Health estimates and to note, among other things, the travels of the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) in these recent weeks where he is clearly going around with his new-found financial resources. This morning I noticed a story in the Toronto press about the visitation of the honourable minister to east Hamilton, where he has announced another capital project which no doubt has been greeted with a great deal of local and regional applause.

It wasn't too long ago that I read he had visited Mississauga and blessed that particular community with an addition to one of their large hospitals. It wasn't very long ago when I read in the Scarborough press—which I read with great regularity—that he had announced another project which had been promised some time ago to the citizens of Scarborough. It is interesting in this connection to reflect upon how this particular year began for the Minister of Health.

When we give concurrence this afternoon, it is worth reflecting upon the circumstances under which the putative Premier, the now Minister of Health, came to the social development committee with his estimates and projects for the year 1979-80. He came to the people earlier this year offering the message of restraint, offering new active-treatment bed ratios that were going to have the practical effect of restricting growth in the public hospital sector in this province. In fact, he had announced other related projects which were going to materialize from his restraint ethics.

We had the opportunity in this past year to look at the particular program he was offering, and in particular to assess the active-treatment bed ratios that were going to be the hallmark of his projects and program in the active-treatment sector. I must say I feel a great deal of credit is owed to all members of the social development committee. While it hasn't been too public, the effect of that particular exercise this May and June has been a significant one.

We can't prove it, but those of us given to the direction of revelation know that some time, probably early in June, it was a plaintive and, some tell me, a pitiful Minister of Health, who knocked on the door of the present Premier (Mr. Davis) and simply said: "I refuse to be the bum-boy for this government any longer. I cannot abide the kind of assault that is being continuously waged against the program which I cannot defend." The social development committee of May and June made it very clear that the poor, beleaguered, ambitious, the rumoured upwardly mobile Minister of Health was being put in an increasingly untenable position.

I understand from very good sources that his friend the Premier, the man who on a regular basis he supplies with medication here in this question period, was understanding, recognizing in the member for Don Mills certain images of his earlier days, did grant what the press reported were rather significant supplementary estimates in the order of $60 million to $80 million.

I just want to take this opportunity to congratulate my colleagues in the social development committee, for in that one limited initiative they stopped the destructive Ministry of Health from realizing what it wished to earlier this particular year. I expect and fully anticipate I will never again see a minister of the Treasury come before this House and expect us to allow a 3.5 per cent increase in Ontario Health Insurance Plan premiums. I never again expect a Minister of Health—this one or a successor—to come before the House generally, or the social development committee particularly, and try to put over the kind of ill-devised scheme, such as the one that the Minister of Health had dissected before his very eyes this past spring in the social development committee.

I congratulate him for extracting more money out of his cabinet colleagues to stop an assault on the public hospital sector in this province, and I wait with great interest to see some indication of a similar success in the medical sector.

It was interesting to hear the Minister of Health pontificate in question period today about the initiatives and views of his friend the Premier and himself on the medical question. We never did get an answer as to what, if anything, the government is going to do to redress its own admitted public dissatisfaction with the 18 per cent opted-out physician rate in this province.

Can he confirm or will he deny the reports in the press the other day and the statements in this House that the Premier and the minister and the government generally are unhappy and are not satisfied with the rate of opting out? If it is the case that they are not satisfied, will he undertake to indicate before the House rises this week what strategies he is going to apply to deal with this dissatisfaction?

I want to see something more than the kind of sleazy politics that have taken place here over the past six months with private members' bills, where the government has played a sleazy game in finding it necessary to block recorded votes on certain initiatives from certain private members but being so duty-bound as to allow votes to take place on other matters of related interest. I don't hold the Minister of Health responsible for that. It is his junior colleague, and that's the kindest word I will ever offer to the member for Mississauga East (Mr. Gregory), the government whip, who I suspect was responsible for the rather anomalous way in which those two private members' bills were dealt with.

I want to know from the Minister of Health what his dissatisfaction, if any, is with the present situation. He knows there is in this province a body of opinion which reflects very unhappily upon the present situation. We have discussed it in estimates, and I was interested to hear from him today. I wasn't satisfied in my interest as to what he plans to do to redress the alleged dissatisfaction of his government in that regard.

I am going to be most interested to see what this government has to say to the Hall commission on medicare. I await, from the present Minister of Health, a leadership which I might respond to in something other than press releases which indicate his ongoing pleasure and personal satisfaction, if not in kissing the babies, certainly in cutting the ribbons at these new hospital projects, expansions or whatever.

Mr. Ruston: You mean he has stopped kissing babies?

Mr. Conway: It is rumoured that it happened a short time ago. But I do want to hear from the minister at a not-too-distant opportunity what it is he is going to tell the Hall commission. Is he satisfied with medicare as it's currently funded and controlled by the federal authorities? If not, what is he going to suggest to his friend from the federal administration as to remedial action?

I expect this government will take a forward, progressive and a leadership role in that inquiry struck by the federal government, an inquiry which is very appropriate and very timely.

I conclude by recommending to the Minister of Health that it might be time to exercise some leadership in issues in health where I feel he has not done so in the past. He is, as I said earlier, never so happy as when he is piling bricks upon mortar and smiling for the cameras across the province. In his travels, his resilience in the cheque-handing-out process is unequalled. There are many across the way who would do well to enroll in the Dennis Timbrell school of political advancement.

[5:00]

In conclusion, I want to suggest that the Minister of Health owes it to those of us who supported the recommendation we signed in the select committee report on health-care costs and financing to analyse thoroughly the impact in the first year of the chronic-care copayment scheme. I have increasing reason to believe that in some restricted categories we are advancing, allowing and supporting an intolerable discrimination which is a particular hardship for senior citizens.

Both publicly and privately, I have spoken to the Minister of Health of my concern in this connection; I, for one, will be looking forward, in the early part of the new year, to seeing from him some kind of statistical analysis and general policy assessment of that particular initiative in terms of the impact financially and, more important, in human, social terms.

Unlike others in this chamber, I do not retreat from or retract my earlier commitment. I fully believe in the principle of proper incentives in those areas, and that is well known by the minister. But I will not support, and I will not allow my colleagues to be drawn into supporting, some kind of selective discrimination of those on fixed incomes in particular. They are not in a position to deal with the kind of discrimination which appears to be implicit in some cases, and explicit in others, in that particular program.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, there are three issues I want to deal with, and it will come as no surprise to the minister that the first issue is the Etobicoke General Hospital and the shortage of beds we have been having there.

The minister will recall his own study showed that in November 1978 the borough of Etobicoke was in need of 130 beds.

The Peel study similarly showed the need for beds at Etobicoke General. The minister wasn't content with that. He gave various excuses, after giving us some beds in the psychiatric ward and some obstetric beds; somehow he seems to think we could put our medical-surgical patients in the psychiatric ward. He then sent it to the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto. That council has come out and said Etobicoke General definitely has the need for beds. I would like to know when the administration of our hospital is going to get written confirmation from the government that it is prepared to fund those beds.

I understand that the deputy minister has been telling the hospital to go ahead and organize because they are going to have those 36 beds; however, they have no written confirmation of adequate funding for those beds. We would simply like to know when they are going to get that little piece of paper that will give them the security to go ahead.

Needless to say, in this particular case, the Etobicoke General has been turning patients away. I have confirmed that with the ministry. Without in any way wanting to be provocative, or wanting to use a personal example, I have to tell the minister that I experienced the effects of this in a very direct way.

Very recently my mother had a growth that needed to be removed. It was an open sore and had to be removed, but it was not deemed to be emergency surgery. She is 75 or 76 years old and was in a certain amount of discomfort with this sore. She had to wait a couple of weeks to get into Etobicoke General, even though her surgeon was prepared to perform the operation at the earliest possible date. I know there are a number of people who have experienced similar discomforts.

Admittedly, there was no danger of my mother dying as a result of this open wound on the top of her head which had resulted from a skin growth. She was in no kind of danger but it was a painful experience, one of concern not only to her, but also to those of us around her who saw the unnecessary discomfort and suffering which resulted from the shortage of beds. I am sure there are many other cases I could have used. I simply used this because it is a case that was very personal to me. I don't in any way feel my mother is any more of a martyr, or that I am or that my family has in any way suffered greatly as a result of it, but it was something that really impressed on me in a very real gut way the problem of the shortage of beds.

I would like to bring up a second matter with the minister, and I would like him to answer only in a way that will in no way reveal the name of the physician or the people involved. A number of months ago, I brought to the minister's attention some allegations and a sworn statement concerning a particular doctor who had an interesting way of overbilling by putting ads in a newspaper advertising for help and then doing medical examinations on people who applied for the position and sending the bill to OHIP.

I understand some charges have been laid. If the minister cannot answer at this time because he doesn't in any way want to affect the case I will understand that. If he can give me an answer, either on the record or simply the promise of a letter, I will be happy to learn what is going on in that particular situation.

There is another matter I would like to deal with, which is a matter on which I wasn't sure whether I should deal with this minister or the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman). I expect this minister can bring the matter to the attention of his colleague and perhaps come to grips with it. It concerns a bid for the Mississauga Hospital contract. I am in no way suggesting the bid was improperly awarded. It simply poses a problem to which I would like the minister to address himself.

Isolation Systems Limited is a company in the Queensway area that manufactures hospital equipment. It put in a bid for the Mississauga General Hospital contract. The components of the bid were for 72 active-treatment units, 22-bed intensive-care and coronary-care units, four floor-ceiling isolation power columns, eight ceiling columns with isolated power and one neonatal service strip. Under the terms of the bid on the contract the suppliers were requested to supply a lot price, which was broken down by individual elements of the total.

We can look at the bidders. As per the specifications, Isolation Systems were the base bid, the preferred product, and they prepared a bid. Isolation Systems is a Canadian manufacturing company recently purchased, incidentally, from an American ownership—with facilities in Arnprior and in Toronto. Other manufacturers in the action included Canadian Liquid Air, which is Canadian—owned; Amsco, which is a US-owned distributor of wall systems manufactured by Quebec-based Paramedico, which is privately owned and subsidized by the Quebec government; Borg-Warner, a US-owned company which came in with a high bid; Hill Rom, which came in with no bid; and Ohio Medical, which offered no bid.

The bidders' prices were given to five competing contractors. The winning contractor was Ellis-Don Limited, but the projected costs were approximately 50 per cent over budget. At the close of tenders for wall systems, Isolation Systems and Amsco—that is, the American Sterilizer Company—were extremely close. The proximity of the bids was in the nature of less than five per cent on a bid of $211,000. To date this company has not been able to discover just how close these bids were, but hearsay has provided the following comments: Amsco submitted solely a lot price on the date of the close of the bid. I am informed the company in my area was beaten slightly on every component of the total bid. Subsequently, various sources inform us that Isolation Systems had indeed provided lower prices on portions of the total bid. While we are unable to identify the exact total bid figures, the two bids were extremely close.

The problem is not that this Quebec-based firm got the bid. The problem is, I have here another contract or an application for contract to the Verdun hospital in Montreal. We can see when we go over the contract that our Ontario competitors, which include this company that was outbid very slightly, by less than five per cent, for a contract in Mississauga, in fact lose the bids in Quebec because of Quebec's policy to penalize out-of-the-province manufacturers.

The Amsco and Isolation Systems bids reflect the strong competitive nature of both of the manufacturers. They are both quality manufacturers. However, this US-owned manufacturer distributes a product subsidized by a provincial government. This Quebec manufacturer has a virtual stranglehold on the Quebec market, and is able to come in and ever so slightly underbid an Ontario-based manufacturer who cannot have access to the same kind of bidding in the Quebec market.

It seems to me we had a problem with chickens and eggs a while back. Both this government and the Manitoba government responded very quickly, as well they should. If we have a Confederation, if Quebec is still a part of Canada, then surely they have to behave in the way the other provinces behave. If not there should be certain consequences to that. If we are able to respond on behalf of our farmers, as well we should have, and as well the Manitoba government should have, then surely there must be some answers to protect some of our Ontario-based manufacturers from what amounts to unfair competition from Quebec when the Ontario manufacturers cannot have the same access to competition in that market.

I realize it is a difficult problem. I would hope the minister can discuss it with the Minister of Industry and Tourism. However, if he has any comments or insights at the present time, since much of the financing of the hospitals does come from his ministry, I would appreciate hearing his comments.

Mr. Ziembra: I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Health the Ontario Drug Benefits Plan and some of the problems that exist with the plan. I am sure he realizes that the way the Tory government has administered it this is one of the most wasteful plans. It is buccaneer free enterprise run amok.

This plan was originally designed for people on welfare but it was extended to people who receive old age pensions. The billings have gone up from $69.8 million in 1976 to $86.6 million in 1977 and $108 million in 1978. There wouldn't be any 1979 figures yet, but the figures are up from $69 million to $108 million in three years of operations. People on welfare receive it as well as those receiving family benefits, vocational rehabilitation assistance and people in extended-health facilities.

When the Ontario Pharmaceutical Association agreed to opt into the plan they insisted they maintain their 30-day dispensing fee period. This might have made some sense back in 1975 when welfare recipients were receiving Ontario drug benefits. The argument then was somebody might go back to work; so why put them on benefits for any longer than 30 days; keep them coming back. But the pharmacists had another motive, and that was they liked the $2.82 dispensing fee coming in every 30 days.

I learned about this when I was first elected. A woman wrote to me from west Toronto and I'll read her letter into the record.

[5:15]

"I am inclined to have slightly elevated blood pressure and have been taking two 25 milligrams of hydrochlorothiazide tablets for the last two years. My doctor then gave me another prescription for the same kind of tablet. I decided to use, for the first time, my privilege card for drug benefits." She had just received her drug benefit card.

"Since I was determined to get the best deal possible for the government, I took my prescription to three different local pharmacies and asked the price of 100 tablets. I received three quotations: $3.60, $3.65, and $3.31.

"When I presented my privilege card I was promptly informed that I could have only a month's supply. Since I needed the tablets I had the prescription filled for nine tablets. I asked the pharmacist what he would charge the government for that prescription. It was $2.35. I multiplied $2.35 by 12 and obtained $28.20. Then my blood pressure really rose.

"I could purchase a year's supply of my needed tablets for $3.31, but under the drug benefit plan the taxpayers would have to pay $28.20, a bonus for the pharmacist of $24.89, minus the cost of 11 plastic containers." That would just add to our pollution problem.

She concludes: "Most citizens are delighted that such a plan has been implemented and do not object to supporting it with their taxes, but this is no reason they should be asked to pay exorbitant sums to a business group that has been doing quite well financially, even before the drug benefits plan came into effect."

Earlier this year I contacted 19 pharmacies across this province—pharmacies in Toronto, Scarborough, Burlington, Windsor, Thunder Bay and Barrie—and only one of those 19 pharmacies offered to fill a three-month supply. Most of them didn't know that this was allowed under government regulations.

Two of the pharmacists stated: "If we put through an extra two-month's supply the government will only pay for one month." That's the confusion that exists in the minds of most of the pharmacists. The remaining 16 pharmacists flatly refused to dispense for more than 30 days, stating that this is a government regulation.

The provincial auditor had a look at the way the plan was administered, and he talks about the 30-day dispensing period.

"It is estimated that in the 1979-80 fiscal year approximately $49.5 million will be paid by ODB for dispensing fees alone. If the number of prescriptions were reduced by 10 per cent as suggested, almost $5 million in savings would result. However, no basis was provided for the 10 per cent reduction."

I would suggest that the cost of this plan could be reduced by more than the $5 million the provincial auditor suggests by simply extending the 30-day dispensing fee to the normal dispensing fee period. Why should someone who receives an Ontario drug benefit card be discriminated against by the pharmacist simply because they have the card? Why can't they get their prescriptions in the same way they were getting their prescriptions before they came on the plan?

I have received some mail on this issue that I would like to read into the record. This was written by somebody in Arnprior, Ontario.

"The report of your concern with the abuse of the Ontario Drug Benefits Plan certainly was welcome. I have been fighting this unsavoury practice on a personal basis for some time and so far have succeeded only in having my doctor prescribe for 100 tablets to be taken as directed. Prior to the inception of the plan, I was able to get pridinone tablets by the 1000 from the Vanguard Prescription Drug Store Limited in Toronto. The last order was returned marked, 'We cannot send prescription drugs through the mail.'"

Even this, I don't believe.

"I am obliged to take three separate drugs daily for the rest of my life, and this refusal by the druggist to dispense more than a month's supply could leave me with an obligatory visit to the drug store monthly for 20 years."

This man has to go back every 30 days for the rest of his life. Here he talks about letters he says he has sent to Honourable William Davis, Honourable Frank Drea, Honourable D. Timbrell, Paul Yakabuski, Mike Cassidy, asking all of them to please put a stop to this costly, wasteful and inconvenient practice which seems to make it as difficult for those over age 65 as possible.

"Thank you for your efforts, do keep up the good work." Well that's as it should be.

Here's a letter from someone in Weston: "Early last week the drugs and pricing department of the Ministry of Health contacted me by phone and asked if one of its liaison officers could call. He arrived later in the day and explained that many complaints came from senior citizens who would find it very difficult to journey to the department's offices on Overlea Boulevard. He explained that one of the conditions in the drug benefits plan was that prescriptions would be filled by the month. In reply I stated that the government shows irresponsibility with the taxpayer's money and weakness in allowing such a condition to be imposed.

"I pointed out that many senior citizens, whose health is obviously not the best, are forced to walk a considerable distance to have a prescription filled. Under wintry conditions, especially those we have recently experienced, such a person's health would suffer more than it gained by the prescription. A six-months or even a three-months prescription is not only far easier on the citizen's health and safety but also on the government's pocketbook.

"He then pointed out that oftentimes a doctor will change a prescription. I countered that the doctor would or should know of that possibility and therefore stipulate the smaller time limit on the prescription form.

"Finally, he mentioned the government is constantly seeking ways and means to improve this service in all of its aspects and some thought has already been given to extending the monthly prescription period. Like so many political statements and promises given these days, this is so nebulous as to be meaningless."

I received a number of letters as well, Mr. Speaker, from pharmacists who supported the 30-day plan. Why not? They are getting $2.82 every time someone comes in.

"Dear Sir: As a third-generation pharmacist, I resent very much your accusation that the pharmacists are ripping off the drug benefits plan. The government of Ontario agreed to the 34-day supply at the time Parcost was introduced and seems to prefer that the pharmacist submit their accounts once a month. The up-to-date thinking re health care for the elderly is that loneliness is the biggest problem. Therefore, if they visit the pharmacy once a month they have at least one social contact. For example, long before the drug benefits plan was thought of I had a customer who telephoned twice a month for half of her prescription. The reason was that I would visit her after hours, twice a month, instead of once a month.

"Pharmacists are now expected to keep drug profiles of customers and once-a-month monitoring is good. It also reduces the supply of drugs for accidental or improper use and encourages patient compliance."

He makes an argument for social contact, but that social contact, Mr. Speaker, is costing the taxpayers over $50 million a year. The letter also makes a few other arguments that I won't go into because they are just self-serving. I believe this free enterprise approach to the Ontario Drug Benefits Plan is improper. I have complained about this since April 1976 and the government still continues to mismanage this program. The provincial auditor has finally twigged to this scam. He is strongly urging the minister to do away with the 30-day limit for dispensing. I hope the minister agrees to the provincial auditor's suggestions.

Mr. Warner: Just briefly; today's answer in the House, and to questions posed regarding the number of opted-out physicians, particularly the specialists, certainly confirms what I suspected from the outset of this serious issue. I think perhaps it's the most serious social issue we have grappled with in this province for some time. The minister, from the outset, has been on a course of premeditated destruction of the health-care system.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, privilege or whatever: We're here to consider the estimates of the Ministry of Health and not to consider some kind of ridiculous fiction being created by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere. It's patently ridiculous.

Mr. Warner: It's hardly a point of privilege or order as the Speaker certainly recognizes.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Will the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere continue with his arguments?

Mr. Warner: Yes. I was attempting to be brief; so I certainly won't be provoked by the irresponsible remarks of the Minister of Health.

The debate that went on in the estimates, the questions which were asked and the questions which have been asked consistently in question period by my leader and others, have indicated very clearly, and we've read the answers back to the minister, that the minister is allowing the health-care system in the province of Ontario to deteriorate. He does that; he does it deliberately.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Oh come on. I'm ashamed to even think you represent a Scarborough riding and talk like that.

Mr. Warner: I didn't quite catch that last comment.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Will the member ignore the interjections and just proceed with what he wishes to say?

Mr. Warner: I'll ignore the interjections. The government would love to return to those days of insurance company involvement. That's what it's all about. Members opposite know that and I know that, and that's why they allow it to deteriorate. Otherwise they wouldn't sit on the sidelines doing nothing, they would attempt to solve the problems which exist in the health-care system instead of allowing it to deteriorate, but they sit idly by.

Perhaps the minister is right and my allegation is unfounded. It isn't a premeditated destruction; it's simply his incapacity to be the Minister of Health. He isn't able to solve the problems.

Whether the minister is willing to admit it or not, there are problems in the health-care system. That should come through to him at some point: there are problems. There are doctors who are upset with the system and yet he is unable or incapable of finding an answer to it, or he is simply allowing it to deteriorate. In either case, I don't find that acceptable. I think it's incumbent upon the minister to find an answer to the problems, to ensure that our citizens have the health-care system that they deserve, which is the best health-care system, instead of sitting on the sidelines.

It gets worse. He wasn't alarmed, obviously, he showed no particular concern about it; but I'll tell him I'm alarmed when I learn that 85 per cent of the anaesthetists in Metro Toronto had opted out. That doesn't bother him, he really doesn't care about that; I do, because I happen to know there are constituents of mine for whom that will pose a problem. But you see, Mr. Speaker, that doesn't mean anything to the minister; if it did he would do something about it, he'd solve the problem. I wish he would solve the problem, but I hold no hope for it.

In conclusion, I certainly enjoyed participating in the collection of one part of the 275,000 signatures on the petition we presented. Of course it's beyond that now. I found in my own area, as I went about the shopping centres and door to door, that people are deeply concerned. They know what the minister is doing and they do not understand the inaction, they just don't. They are losing faith in the Conservative government.

Whether the minister wants to believe it or not, the health-care system is the most important social gain we have made in this province. It shouldn't be removed.

Mr. Conway: I have a brief point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: You have already spoken.

Mr. Conway: It is a point which I think you'll allow if you'll just give me a moment or two. It just dawned on me when I concluded my remarks earlier, Mr. Speaker—and I know you would not wish the opportunity to pass—that we will not have an opportunity prior to the great event in the spring to wish our good friend the member for Don Mills (Mr. Timbrell) all the happiness marital bliss is going to bring him early in March. I'm told that on March 8 Dennis ceases being a menace and that he will become a reformed and more positive personality. I know, Mr. Speaker, you'll join with me in wishing him well, and that in depth.

Mr. Speaker: Is that from one who knows?

Mr. Conway: Yes.

Mr. Foulds: First let me join in the remarks of the previous speaker in wishing the minister well in at least one area of this life. I'm told that as long as either one's personal life is in a satisfactory condition or one's professional life is in a satisfactory condition, or one's financial life is in a satisfactory condition, if one of those is all right one can maintain one's hold on sanity. I'm sure all of us wish the minister well in his personal life and even his financial life; occasionally we have some questions about his professional life.

I just want to speak very briefly on one issue that has been raised largely by my friend and colleague the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman). That's the question of transportation costs for people from northern Ontario going to southern Ontario for health services, particularly when they are not emergency services.

I might first of all relate a personal experience. I have a young son who has a minor hearing problem that we had referred to a specialist in Toronto. When we got to the office we got very good service. We found the doctor had opted out, but we went through with the examination, in spite of my ideological preferences, because there's no doubt that when it comes to one's own family health comes first, it comes before ideological preferences. It is important to all of us just how much that affects us.

The interesting thing was that the doctor happened that very morning to have a patient who had a minor skin cancer whose operation he had to postpone three months, this was during the summertime, simply because a bed was not available. I put it to the minister that in that case—first of all in the case of transporting my own son, that's relatively easy for me.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Was he at Sick Kids?

Mr. Foulds: No, he was sent to the Wellesley. He has a hearing problem.

As I was saying, the transportation part of it is relatively easy for me because I'm down here fairly regularly. I'm fairly well off. A member's salary is no great shakes but it's not bad; it's not as good as a cabinet minister's but it's not bad. I can afford the fare.

The service we got was excellent. There's no doubt about that. I have no quarrel with that.

However, it did strike me that it was unfortunate we had to bring my son to Toronto. It occurred to me there are a lot of people who would not have done so for the relatively minor problem he has. In other words, there would be a block to access to medical services in different circumstances. He has a slight hearing impediment for high notes. It means he can hear normal conversation perfectly well.

We are relatively well off because I come to Toronto regularly. That's easy for us because as a member I maintain an apartment here in Toronto, I don't have extra accommodation costs for my son. But every other person who comes from the north for care incurs those costs and is inhibited from complete and total access to our health system.

It is important that in more serious but not emergency cases the minister take a look at the situation. Maybe he has to discuss this with the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) and bring in other ministries involved, but I believe that someone who has a detached retina—I had a case like this I spoke to the minister about; the doctor in Thunder Bay, who is a very good eye specialist, did not think he should do the operation himself, maybe because he didn't have the backup staffing or whatever. He arranged for a specialist in Toronto to do the operation within five days because he felt, and I had a letter written to the effect, that if the woman did not have the retina re-attached very quickly she would go blind in that eye. That was not considered an emergency operation when it was appealed to the minister through his ministry so no part of that woman's fare was paid.

I know the family involved. The couple is retired. They're not broke, they can probably absorb the cost, but they should not have had to. I feel very strongly about this issue, I feel the cost of transportation from northern Ontario to the specialist centres—Toronto or Winnipeg, because in some cases it is cheaper to go to Winnipeg when the service is available—should be met.

I know it is a difficult problem for the minister because unfortunately this government, although I don't think this applies to the minister personally, has a narrow view of the responsibilities of each of its ministries. That's why I'm glad the Provincial Secretary for Social Development is here, because I saw the letter the minister sent to my colleague from Algoma regarding the case of Lesley Voznek, in which the minister talks about the cost involved being a social cost, not a medical cost.

I put it to the minister that that is a very narrow definition. In a large number of cases he is extending that definition of social cost much too widely, because in the case I raised with the minister by correspondence, and that I've referred to here, there was not just a social cost involved. There was a legitimate medical cost even with the minister's narrow definition, because the doctor in Thunder Bay was concerned that if the operation was not done quickly—it didn't have to be done tomorrow but it had to be done within a very short period of time—she would have suffered permanent damage. That may not be an emergency in the fashion we immediately rush people to a hospital in an ambulance because of severe trauma as a result of an accident, but it sure is an emergency to that person.

I want to leave those thoughts with the minister. I really hope that in the new year, when it comes to making his New Year's resolution, if there is any single problem he undertakes to solve, besides the big problem of the hospital beds and all that difficult area, it will be this problem of transportation so people in the north truly have legitimate access to our health-care system. I hope that problem is solved.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would like, as briefly as possible, to respond to—

Mr. Peterson: Take your time.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Is that right? I didn't realize you had a second. By the way, that's a great card that came the other day.

Mr. Peterson: Aren't those handsome children?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: They are; whose are they?

The member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston) raised the question of the number of nursing home beds. He sent me details of a particular case which I will be glad to have my staff look at for him to see if we can be of some assistance.

I can't recall exactly, but I believe we anticipate having a report from the Essex District Health Council within the next couple of months outlining, as a result of a review of long-term care needs in the county, some recommendations with respect to nursing home beds. I would only point to a number of other areas of the province, such as Timiskaming, Peterborough, Lindsay and so forth, where we have in the last six months approved additional nursing home beds based on local studies, and indicate to him that assuming there are no problems with the study I would anticipate we would be able to address that situation in the not-too-distant future.

It is possible, of course, to bring nursing home beds on stream much faster than institutional hospital beds. The construction costs are considerably less, and also those costs are borne by the private sector so we don't get involved in having to get in the queue for the available capital funds, even including the recent infusion of lottery funds. That doesn't mean we can do everything in a short period of time; it means we can catch up a bit but we still have to stretch our capital program out over a number of years.

The member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) compared the beginning of 1979 to the end of 1979. I wouldn't mind taking the opportunity to talk about what we set out to do and what we have achieved. There is no denying it has been a tumultuous year, professionally as well as personally; as the member so kindly interjected, though it was unbeknownst to me he was going to do that.

We obviously set out to do two things. First and foremost to maintain the quality of the system at a time when the pressures on it are enormous. There are pressures of change in the demographics, and they are accelerating in almost geometric proportions, as well as pressures of changes in technology. Ten years ago who had ever heard of a CT scanner, or what it could do or what it would cost to operate?

Mr. Foulds: Especially the latter.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Especially the latter, right.

There were changes in medical personnel; both in numbers, where we have continued to see a tremendous growth in the total of physicians and allied professions in the province in the last number of years, and in addition all the host of other pressures of change which have been exerted on the system.

At the same time, in doing that we set out to do it within our ability to pay, within our means.

We set out, in early 1979, to limit the growth in spending by the hospitals to 4.5 per cent on base budgets for active treatment; 5.3 per cent on chronic care and on outpatient care; and overall to keep the increases in spending on hospitals to something of the order of about seven or eight per cent, as I recall.

We have during the year, as part of that process, seen a number of hospital beds in the province converted to chronic care, that has been one of our goals as well. We will end the year, I think, with around 450 beds having been converted from acute care to chronic care, which obviously is not taking them out of service. I would argue that in most of the communities where this has occurred it has improved service. Previously, a number of people were actually chronic patients but were lost in acute-care programs, in acute-care wards where they were not getting the proper attention persons with chronic ailments, diseases or injuries require.

When we approve the conversion of these beds, it is not just a matter of changing the label at the foot of the bed. When a conversion occurs the hospital must submit for our approval a program to go with that conversion. If it is a case of establishing a chronic-care unit or expanding one, either way they have to justify the program they are going to provide to the chronically ill patients. That is one thing we set out to do, and that is one thing I think we are being successful in doing.

We have certainly gone back to cabinet during the year. I have said, "I need some more money." I will be magnanimous and share the credit with the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway), or whomever, on that; but I would point out that, as I have before in previous years where I found I needed more money, whether it was for additional nursing-home beds or to allow appeals on budgets to maintain usually agreed-on levels of service, I went to cabinet for more money and I got it.

I don't know whether the member was in the House the Friday morning in March when $66 million in supplementary estimates for my ministry went through virtually at the snap of a finger. I was amazed. I thought I was going to be here the whole morning and I was here for 10 minutes getting that approved. I don't know whether the member wants to take credit for that too; I will share it, he can have that too; and for the year before and so forth.

We do watch very carefully in the ministry, through the area teams, what's happening with the accreditation reports and various other indices to be sure we are maintaining an acceptable quantity and level of care. All through the year I have been visiting various parts of the province to engage in the process I have always engaged in as a minister, and that is to keep in touch with what is happening around the province. The member would agree if he was on this side, or ever happened to sit on this side, that it is important to get out and around to find out what is happening in his area of responsibility.

I have also made it a point that where we are approving new projects I am available to go and take part.

Mr. Nixon: You heard it here first, he's available.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That's right, but only until the first part of the new year.

It is important to emphasize, particularly in the area of the capital program, that we are constantly approving new projects, although not as many as some would like. I remind members we have had the lottery proceeds allocated to us so we can catch up with some of our capital program.

The member also raised the question of the submission to the Hall commission. As I indicated during question period today, the hearings of Mr. Justice Hall's commission will be public and therefore, our submission will be known. I will be interested at the same time in seeing the honourable member's submission.

We will certainly emphasize the accomplishments of the last 21 years since universal hospital insurance and then universal medical care insurance were introduced, as well as some of the difficulties being faced at this time and some ideas that we have on them.

The member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) raised the question of the beds at Etobicoke General Hospital. I can tell him, and I think it was on Monday if not, late last week, that staff has been meeting with officials of the Etobicoke General. All we are discussing now is the budget, it is not a question of the beds.

The Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto has agreed we will go ahead and open the 36 medical-surgical beds at Etobicoke General, over and above the—what was it, 19 psychiatric beds and 10 obstetrical beds, or was it the reverse? I can't recall which is which now, but we will take another look at it as part of the overall review of beds for Metropolitan Toronto the first part of which we should have in the first quarter of 1980. That deals specifically with the chronic and extended-care needs of Metropolitan Toronto. The big pressure in Metropolitan Toronto, particularly in the west end, is in the area of chronic care and extended care.

If we can get a handle on those two areas, that will take the pressure off the acute-care beds, because there are all kinds of people backed up into acute-care beds and chronic-care beds—

Mr. Philip: Not in Etobicoke General.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes, even in Etobicoke General. It is part of the problem. I am not saying it's all, and we have acknowledged that, because this will have added 65 beds in total this year to the Etobicoke General. This is in addition to the 130-bed addition which is being added to the Mississauga General Hospital, the 60-bed addition which has been approved for the Peel Memorial Hospital, and the completely new hospital approved for west Port Credit area. I can assure members that once we have the hospital council's review we will be acting on it as well, just as we did on the review done three years ago that resulted in conversion of the Grace to chronic care and private care.

Mr. Philip: You stalled for months. When are they getting their money? That's all I want to know.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We are negotiating on the budget. I am not going to give them a blank cheque, because I don't get blank cheques from the taxpayers. They have submitted a budget which is under discussion, because what they submitted is in our opinion far too high when you consider we should be talking about incremental costs, not total baseline costs per bed; however, that will be sorted out very quickly so they can get on with it.

With regard to the physician about whom the member wrote to me, I can't give him any information right now in this forum, but I will give him what I can. It was followed up immediately by us and everything possible is being done in reviewing that particular physician's practice and involving the medical review committee. I will communicate further.

Mr. Philip: I understood criminal charges were laid. Is that true?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I don't believe we have laid criminal charges. I don't believe so, but I will check on the current status.

With regard to the problem the honourable member raised about his constituent firm's bid at the Mississauga project and his description of the situation in Quebec, it is very tempting, and this is a problem which was drawn to my attention a number of years ago when I was first a member here. A printing firm, the head of which lived in my constituency at the time, came to see me about some work involving forms for the Quebec government, on which he had bid in Quebec. Even at that time, and there was a Liberal government when I saw it, he faced the problem that the Quebec government, throughout the entire system, gives—what is it, a 15 to 20 per cent advantage to Quebec firms?

Mr. Philip: Ten per cent.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Well in some areas it is 15 or 20 per cent. In this particular case, in the printing area at least, I recall 15 to 20 per cent.

We have not, as a government, fallen into the trap of retaliating. To be sure, it is very frustrating and it makes it very difficult for Ontario firms to compete there. It is even more maddening for the affected individual or firm when a Quebec firm comes in here and gets a contract.

I suggest, though, that if we were to retaliate that would be the signal to every other province that they should do the same. The principle of free access and transfer of goods and services in Canada would be destroyed; it would be a nail in the coffin of Confederation.

I think we have to attempt to work out these kinds of problems, and we must try to do this with Quebec. I really can't see any particular benefit to Canada in Ontario retaliating in kind to that kind of policy; that can only lead to heightened tensions, which would be to fall into the well laid traps of some of our separatist friends.

The member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziemba), who has apparently left the chamber, referred to the Ontario Drug Benefits Plan and the comments of the Provincial Auditor. I would only say, sir, I wish he had read that portion of the auditor's report containing our response to those comments of the Provincial Auditor in which we indicated what action is being taken. We are moving to do something about this 30-day prescription period in negotiations with the pharmacists' association.

Discussions have already been carried out between the medical association and the pharmacists' association resulting in an agreement that if a physician's note on the prescription is not to be altered—I forget the exact wording but what it amounts to is if the duration of the prescription is not to be altered it will not be. I anticipate we will be able to resolve that problem in 1980.

Mr. Warner: Disagree.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sorry. The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere and I apparently and obviously are never going to agree philosophically on most things.

Mr. Foulds: If you did he would resign.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Don't tempt me.

Mr. Warner: We'll make an exception.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With respect, I appeared on his television program about seven or eight months ago. We sat there and I went through the facts about the health-care system and what is happening: the fact, for instance, that we are ending up this year with approximately the same number of beds in the province as when we started—we are about 600 beds in total ahead of about four or five years ago; the facts about the number of services. I remember well we had a very honourable discussion, and being the host of the television show he said, "There you are, medicare is in crisis. Good night." Before I could get another word in, there we were.

With respect, the member, for his political purposes, has started out with the conclusion which he has been trying to sell and which the people aren't buying, they are just not buying.

As I said to Ontario Federation of Labour representatives last week, when we had a very good discussion, if you go to people and ask do they support medicare, they are going to sign a petition. If you say to them If you don't want all the doctors to opt out please sign this, they are going to sign the petition. There is no question, health care is the most important service which this government funds, bar none. If you were to do a poll every other service funded by the government would fall way back in the pack.

Mr. Nixon: What about reforestation?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Reforestation? Well, that may be close.

Mr. Peterson. What about fisheries?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Well especially around Lake Erie that's right, that would be front and centre, the most important.

My gravest concern, of course is always to retain public confidence in the medicare system, which for the member's political purposes he has been trying to attack. I don't think he is being successful because the facts deny the kind of message he is trying to put across.

Reasonable people, by far the majority of the population of this province, understand that in a massive system there are going to be problems, particularly at a time when this country is beset by so many problems of living within our means. They know too that the basics of the medicare system are sound and that the kind of message the member is trying to put across just doesn't synchronize with the facts.

I want to finish off on the question of transportation costs. I sympathize entirely with the kind of situation the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) has described. I haven't always lived in Metropolitan Toronto, in Don Mills. I come from rural eastern Ontario where the nearest hospital was 25 miles away. Quite frequently people in our village had to travel to Toronto or to Montreal or wherever for services.

Mr. Peterson: Was it a log cabin, Dennis?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, it was stone, limestone as a matter of fact.

Mr. Peterson: But it was small and poor and you did walk to school.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, it was big; but there was a hole in one window or somewhere, I forget.

The fact is that in the Ministry of Health we have a great many demands on us for a variety of health programs, and we do everything possible to ensure that we are in fact funding necessary and required health programs.

When we have nonmedical costs, I'm sorry I have to draw the line at what I can consider funding through the Ministry of Health. That isn't to say that in those cases where people have difficulty with transportation costs or accommodation costs in getting to resources, whether it's in Toronto or London or Kingston or Ottawa or wherever, that we shouldn't do something about it.

I outlined in my letter to the member's colleague, the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman), the fact there are programs available to look after those cases of hardship. Nobody is being denied access.

I'm sorry I can't agree that nonmedical costs should be covered out of OHIP.

I think the time has concluded.

Resolution concurred in.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

FISH STOCKING PROGRAM

397. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry outline details of any fish stocking programs that have taken place at Rufus Lake, Torrence Lake and Guylfoyle Lake in Kapuskasing district since 1970? What was the cost of each of the stocking programs for each of the lakes for each year. (Tabled December 6, 1979).

Hon. Mr. Auld: Rufus, Torrence and Guylfoyle Lakes in Kapuskasing district have not been stocked with any species at any time since 1970, and indeed since 1950. The lakes support cool and warm water species fisheries.

TORONTO OHC HOUSING

398. Mr. Duksza: Would the Minister of Housing indicate what is the current number of vacant units in the Metro OHC portfolio; specifically, how many vacant units are there, in which projects are they located, how long have they been vacant, and what is the project-by-project rate of occupancy; and what efforts are being made to ensure that vacant units are being filled speedily. (Tabled December 7, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Bennett: A list indicating the current number of vacant units by municipality in the Metro OHC portfolio is attached.

When a project manager receives a notice from a tenant of his/her intention to move, the tenant placement section is immediately notified. The unit is then offered to an applicant who has indicated a preference for the particular location. Allocations are made in accordance with the point rating system which gives priority to applicants in the greatest need.

Under the Landlord and Tenant Act all residents are required to give 60 days notice prior to termination of tenancy. In the majority of instances OHC residents provide less than the required notice. This creates difficulty, as many applicants feel obligated to give 60 days notice to their present landlord and are therefore unable to accept short notice vacancies. Of the 198 vacancies listed herein, 94 of these units are presently on offer and all units listed have received at least one offer. A period of approximately seven to 14 days is required for maintenance in order to prepare units for the new residents.

SALMONELLA LEVELS

386. Mr. Isaacs: Is the minister in possession of any information concerning the incidence and level of salmonella in fresh and frozen chicken on the retail market? If so, will the minister provide that information in so far as it compares the incidence and level of salmonella in imported chicken with that of chicken from domestic producers? (Tabled December 4, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Results of a survey conducted by federal authorities indicate that at the retail level salmonella was present in approximately 52 per cent. of the chicken tested. We are advised that there is no significant difference in the salmonella level of frozen and fresh chicken. Freezing does not materially decrease the number of salmonella organisms. In the tests conducted to date, there has been no distinction made between domestic and imported chickens; however, based on information from the US meat inspection authorities their testing at plant level reveals a situation comparable to that in Canada.

Committees have been established which are actively involved in efforts to reduce the incidence of salmonella. A key committee is comprised of members of the federal health protection and health of animals branches and representatives of the poultry industry, which plans to put forth, early in 1980, a proposal for salmonella control in Canada.

In addition to the federal government's efforts, staff of the veterinary services branch of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food are working closely with industry on the problem. We are confident that the long-range program being developed for salmonella control will significantly reduce the incidence of this organism.

As long as proper precautions are taken in the kitchen in the handling and cooking of poultry, salmonella should pose no problem for poultry consumers. In preparing the bird for cooking, appropriate sanitary measures should be exercised to prevent contamination of counter surfaces, utensils, et cetera. Proper cooking destroys salmonella organisms. Cooked leftover meat should be maintained in refrigeration.

SPRUCE FALLS PERMIT

395. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry table copies of the land use agreement and the land use permit issued to Spruce Falls Power and Paper Company by the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources for the Fred Flatt Road, between Highway 11 and the Kapuskasing River, and north of the Kapuskasing River to the Old Smokey Line? What public moneys have been spent on any or all portions of the Fred Flatt Road north of Highway 11? (Tabled December 6, 1979.)

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

NEW PLANNING BILL

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, at this time I am pleased to table a draft of a proposed new planning act for Ontario. As members may recall, this draft act follows publication, earlier this year, of the white paper on the planning act.

The draft legislation translates into legislative terms the conclusions contained in the white paper. Some changes have been made resulting in part from preliminary concerns expressed on the white paper and from technical implementation of some proposals. These changes are clearly identified in the explanatory notes that accompany the legislation. These modifications are a clear indication of the effectiveness of our public participation process and of the willingness of this government to give expression to the views of the community in these important matters.

To further clarify how the revised planning system would work, the second part of the document contains summaries of the main provisions of the key procedural regulations which will be issued at the same time the new act comes into force. Also included is an explanation of the nature and purpose of the new provincial policy statements proposed in the white paper.

One area that has not been covered in the draft legislation deals with the transitional provisions that will need to be included before the act is introduced into the Legislature. This is seen as a specific technical aspect that should not hinder an understanding of the new act itself.

Beginning late in January 1980 senior staff from my ministry will again conduct a series of workshops across the province for municipal representatives and those in the private sector so that further questions and concerns arising from the white paper and the draft act may be addressed before final submissions are made to the ministry. The deadline for such submissions we have now set as March 31, 1980, and a list of the meeting dates and locations will also be provided to all members.

Finally, I would stress that this document is a proposed act for discussion purposes only. While it represents as closely as possible the content the proposed legislation may take, it is still in draft form. Copies of the draft legislation are now being forwarded to all municipalities and to individuals and groups which have participated in the public review process over the last number of months. All members of this House are of course cordially invited to attend any of the meetings to be held with municipalities throughout the province over the next number of months.

Copies of the draft legislation will be in the mail box of each member. In addition, I would like to say we are again prepared to brief both opposition caucuses on the draft legislation and its implications.

MENTALLY RETARDED FUNDING

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House today of the government's intention to increase the provincial funding for the development of community services for the mentally retarded in Ontario by eight per cent in the 1980-81 fiscal year. A news release giving details of this increased funding and what it will mean at the community level is being distributed to members of the House and members of the legislative press gallery this morning.

PEACE BRIDGE ASSOCIATION FOR THE MENTALLY RETARDED

Hon. Mr. Norton: I must regretfully inform members of the decision taken by the Peace Bridge Association for the Mentally Retarded in Fort Erie to cease operations on December 31 and in so doing to withdraw community residential opportunities and training programs for approximately 50 developmentally handicapped children and adults. I want to emphasize that I remain hopeful this unfortunate decision can be rescinded.

The Peace Bridge association, which has granted its staff extremely high salary awards in the last six months, is contemplating closure as a result of its inability to pay for those increases. I would encourage the association's board and the staff to search diligently for ways within their current allocation to avoid a complete cessation of services.

The Peace Bridge association currently operates residential services for 27 adults and children. The association also provides vocational programs for 37 clients, some of whom live in the community.

It is with considerable consternation, then, that I report the closure action contemplated by the Peace Bridge association. This ministry has been and continues to be strongly supportive of community-based programs for the mentally retarded. Our commitment to this concept will continue, as will our policy to promote and to provide for an expansion of community residences and programs for the developmentally handicapped.

In so far as the Peace Bridge association's decision is concerned, the association's current difficulties stem from the fact that recent salary awards greatly exceed ministry guidelines and the association's ability to pay. On April 1 this year we, the ministry, allocated funds which permitted the association to award a 15 per cent salary adjustment, which was agreed to by the ministry despite our general five per cent guideline on salaries that had been brought to the attention of all associations. In doing this, we recognized there were large inequities between what employees of one association are being paid and what those in other associations are receiving.

Following that agreement, the Canadian Union of Public Employees was certified as bargaining agent for the association's staff. The association's board of directors and the union signed an agreement on October 15. The terms of that new agreement included a 19 per cent increase retroactive to January 1 of this year, plus an additional 12 per cent increase on April 1, 1980. This was in addition to the 15 per cent salary increase awarded by the association in April of this year.

In summary, this settlement and the earlier award combined to give staff a 36.5 per cent increase in 1979 and by April 1980 they would have received considerably in excess of a 50 per cent increase in 15 months.

As I indicated earlier, it is recognized that inequities exist among certain associations in terms of the salaries they pay their staff. It was in that context that we provided in our 1979-80 funding additional allocations to pay extra moneys to those associations whose staff salaries deserve special consideration. Peace Bridge was one association given extra money for that purpose. Overall, the association received a general increase of 12 per cent in 1979-80 over the previous year's allocation. That allocation included provision for the salary increase of 15 per cent.

As I indicated at the beginning of my statement, it is with deep regret that I announce the association's decision to end its operations. This termination of services is particularly painful for the mentally handicapped who have benefited by their presence and living in the community. For those people who will be denied community living opportunity I want to assure them, their families and friends, that alternative accommodation has been arranged in our provincially-operated facilities for the mentally retarded. This will only be a short-term solution while we pursue vigorously alternative arrangements for these adults and children.

The only other solution proposed by the Peace Bridge association would be for the employees, the Canadian Union of Public Employees local and the board of directors to review their situation within the context of available resources. I strongly encourage those involved to do so.

The ministry has reviewed a number of possible program changes with the association, but it was jointly determined that the program changes alone could not permit the association to live with such dramatic salary increases. It is possible that program adjustment in combination with the review I've suggested above could resolve the problem.

I hope, of course, for a positive resolution of this problem. Whatever the resolution, our commitment to community-based care is well known and will continue to be a priority of this ministry. In this era of slower economic growth, it is incumbent upon all of us to recognize fiscal realities and to accept the responsibilities of working within reasonable financial parameters.

ILLEGAL ACTS BY POLICE

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I want to inform you and the members of the Legislature of the results of my review of the transcript of some of the testimony during the recent trial in Barrie of a criminal charge against Gerald Stevenson and Robert McLean of the Metropolitan Toronto police department arising out of their use of a fictitious affidavit during the investigation of the shooting death in Toronto of one Bruce Lorenz.

I undertook to the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) and others to make a complete statement on this matter before the House rose.

One of my agents, Robert McGee, deputy crown attorney in charge of the downtown Toronto office, was called as a character witness by the defence in this trial and some of his testimony was the subject of considerable comment in the press. I indicated earlier that I wanted to review the transcript before commenting.

During my term of office as Attorney General I have repeatedly emphasized that equality before the law is a principle of fundamental importance in our society and that one part of that overall concept is the very basic principle that no person is above the law. Recently, the activities of police officers in this country have been the subject of considerable public scrutiny and debate. Throughout this analysis and discussion we have maintained the self-evident principle that the police are not above the law. No responsible person has questioned that principle.

Notwithstanding consensus on this issue, it is sometimes difficult to apply this important general principle to specific cases which arise from the very nature and necessities of police work. For example, may an undercover police officer, investigating an allegation that a highly organized criminal extortion and blackmail operation is being carried on in an hotel, further his investigation by registering under a false name at that hotel, notwithstanding the provisions of the Hotel Registration of Guests Act? This act makes it an offence for any person to register under a false name.

Are apparent breaches of regulatory laws, or even on occasion criminal laws, by police officers necessary in order to ensure that crime is detected and prosecuted? In some cases, what may appear to be a breach is not a breach because by legislation and at common law, police officers have wider powers than ordinary citizens in many areas such as the power to arrest and the right to carry firearms.

In addition, the law of Canada affords special protection to police officers and in limited circumstances to private persons in the work of law enforcement. Whether couched in terms of defences, exemptions, excuses or justification, those involved in the work of law enforcement are, under certain circumstances, protected by our law from prosecution.

To the extent that the law does not explicitly permit the act in question, is it possible for society to permit its law enforcement officers to do the act and yet, at the same time, maintain an honest adherence to the principle that the police are not above the law? If not, is legislation necessary? The question is what degree of protection our laws should provide for police officers acting reasonably and in good faith in the administration and enforcement of the law. It is a very old principle of our law that the state owes protection to those to whom it entrusts the duty of enforcing the criminal law.

The establishment of and the proceedings of the McDonald commission should have put these questions in very sharp focus, not only with respect to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, but also indirectly with respect to every other police force in Canada. Unfortunately, the provincial Attorneys General in Canada have not been afforded the access by the Solicitor General of Canada and the McDonald commission to factual information that we must have in order to fulfill our constitutional responsibilities as the chief law officers of the crown in our respective jurisdictions and in order to have participated in a meaningful way in the McDonald commission hearings.

In June 1978 my officials were advised by the McDonald commission, through its counsel, that the commission would be concerning itself with some of these very questions and would welcome submissions from provincial Attorneys General in addition to the submissions it was expecting from the Solicitor General of Canada in his capacity as the elected official responsible to the people of Canada for the conduct of the members of the RCMP.

Earlier in the spring of 1978, the RCMP in Ontario had provided me with a report to the effect that the criminal investigation branch of the RCMP had conducted no "intelligence probes" in Ontario similar to those identified before the McDonald commission as having taken place in other provinces.

The Solicitor General of Canada did not permit the RCMP to provide me with a similar report with respect to the activities of the security service branch of the RCMP in Ontario and, despite an early request, the McDonald commission refused my request for observer status for one of my senior officials during the in-camera commission hearings regarding such activities.

I wrote to the Solicitor General of Canada in July 1978 and said in part: "As the chief law officer of the crown in this province, it is my view that, over and above what may take place by way of submissions to the McDonald commission, it is essential that you and I attempt to arrive at some mutually satisfactory agreement on these questions.

"I suggest the following general outline for your consideration and for the purpose of further discussions:

"(a) Subject to the possible effect of contractual arrangements in some provinces, you, as Solicitor General of Canada, have the political responsibility for the RCMP as an institution and therefore are politically accountable for the action of its personnel in both criminal operations and security services branches.

"(b) As Attorney General of Ontario I have the legal and political responsibility to ensure that the law is enforced in this province and therefore that any breaches of the law that take place here are properly dealt with.

"(c) The expression 'ensuring breaches of the law are properly dealt with' does not mean that an Attorney General of a province should review, either in advance or after the fact, all of the activities of the RCMP. Rather it means: (1) If there are to be guidelines for the RCMP, the provincial Attorneys General should have some opportunity to participate in the formulation of the guidelines. (2) If there is to be a mechanism for reporting acts apparently outside those guidelines to the attention of the relevant provincial Attorney General, the provincial Attorneys General should similarly have some opportunity to participate in the formulation of that mechanism. (3) Notwithstanding any such guidelines and mechanism, neither you nor I can interfere in any way with the right of a citizen to swear an information before a justice charging a police officer with an offence or with the duty of that justice to decide whether process should issue. (4) Similarly, no guidelines or mechanism can alter the fact that I have the ultimate responsibility, as chief law officer of the crown, in this province, to prosecute or stay any proceedings where process has been issued.

"I do not pretend that the answers to the many questions in this area are easy. However, I do want to make it clear that I reject the idea that because something allegedly concerns national security it should be of no concern to a provincial Attorney General. To accept that suggestion would be inconsistent with my responsibilities as chief law officer of the crown in this province for the reasons which I stated above."

The then Solicitor General of Canada declined to discuss these matters with me. In October this year, the current Solicitor General indicated he was willing to discuss them and I am hopeful these discussions can take place at an early opportunity.

Although we have had no substantive discussion with the federal Solicitor General's ministry with respect to these matters and although the prospect of being able to participate in a meaningful way in the McDonald commission is still not very encouraging, we have nevertheless discussed the matters at length with our counterparts in other provinces and with our police personnel in Ontario. These discussions indicate that although there is a consensus the overriding principle must be that the police are not above the law, there may be a need for some legislative change to clarify the application of that principle in relation particularly to provincial regulatory restrictions such as those contained in the Hotel Registration of Guests Act.

In addition, it is clear the police are entitled to the fullest possible information and assistance from crown law officers with respect to the extent of police powers, such as under section 25 of the Criminal Code, which provides generally that a person acting under lawful authority in the administration or enforcement of the law is entitled to use as much force as is necessary to carry out that lawful purpose and with respect to the applicability of the relevant common law defences in those fact situations where the police are at all in doubt as to the propriety of any proposed action.

Hopefully the McDonald commission will ultimately provide some guidance with respect to what legislative changes are appropriate. In the meantime, we in Ontario shall continue to do our best to ensure the overriding general principle is followed and the police are given as much guidance and assistance as possible.

In addition to possible legislative change and the fullest reasonable reliance on existing statutory and common law defences, it is important to remember the proper application of prosecutorial discretion may dictate that a particular case ought not to proceed to court even though there may be prima facie evidence tending to indicate an offence has been committed.

In early 1978, I had occasion to advise this House of the results of a police investigation into certain events involving a former federal Solicitor General. I said at that time and wish to repeat now:

"A prosecution is not automatically launched in every case where there is some evidence to support the laying of criminal charges. Police officers and the crown law officers who advise them have broad powers to decide whether or not to launch a prosecution taking into account all the circumstances surrounding the case.

"Henry Bull, the late crown attorney for York county, a highly respected prosecutor, stated that the crown's duty in deciding whether prosecution is justified is twofold. The first duty is to determine whether a criminal offence is disclosed by the facts in the sense that a prima facie case is made out. The second duty is then to determine whether prosecution would be justified in a particular case.

"This exercise of judgement was best put by two Attorneys General of England, Sir John Simon and Sir Hartley Shawcross, both speaking in the House of Commons: 'There is no greater nonsense talked about the Attorney General's duties than the suggestion that in all cases the Attorney General ought to prosecute merely because he thinks there is what lawyers call a "case." It is not true, and no one who has held the office supposes that it is.'

"Sir Hartley Shawcross supported Sir John Simon's position: 'It has never been the rule in this country . . . that suspected criminal offences must automatically be the subject of prosecution . . . the public interest . . . is the dominant consideration.'"

Mr. Speaker, I would stress that not merely is this the law of Canada as well as of England, but it also reflects very accurately the responsibilities of the Attorney General of Ontario as I have experienced them during the last two and a half years at that time.

It is obvious that there will be cases where evidence is presented to a crown law officer which tends to show that a police officer has committed an offence in the course of his duties as an investigator, but in the proper exercise of prosecutorial discretion it will be the crown law officer's view that the public interest would not necessarily be served by proceeding with a prosecution. A police officer, like any other citizen, is entitled to have a potential prosecution against him considered by the appropriate law officer applying long-accepted principles of prosecutorial discretion.

The exercise of prosecutorial discretion must however be something done with individual cases, not on the basis of general exemptions or immunities. The exercise of such discretion must never be allowed to interfere with the fundamental duty of the Attorney General and his agents to see that the administration of public affairs, including law enforcement, is conducted in accordance with the law. The exercise of prosecutorial discretion in individual cases does not mean that the police are entitled to come to the crown in advance to obtain permission, let alone encouragement, to breach the law.

After reviewing the transcript in the Stevenson and McLean case, I am satisfied that none of the witnesses called by the accused advocated that the police should be above the law or immune from the same sanctions as any other citizen absent, some saving statutory provision.

I am also satisfied that it is clear from Mr. Skatfeld's testimony that there is no instruction given at the Ontario Police College which would tend to encourage a breaking of the law such as the use of illegal tricks or stratagems in the conduct of investigations. I regret that on the part of some witnesses there was a failure to distinguish between "tricks or stratagems" which are legal in the sense of not being proscribed by any statute and those that are illegal.

In my statement, Mr. Speaker, I have set out the cross-examination of Mr. McGee, the crown attorney, who was called as a defence witness and who was asked certain questions and gave certain answers. Now these are set out on some four and a half pages and this statement has been provided to the members. I do not intend to read this portion of the statement now, in the interest of time.

Mr. Renwick: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is that in view of the importance of this statement, the fact that it has been distributed to the members is not a reason for dispensing with the reading of any part of it.

Mr. Speaker: That's at the discretion of the minister as to what he wants to put on the record.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, when statements of the ministry are provided to the members of the assembly, those parts that the minister wishes to put on the record should be in the statement and nothing else, so I would suggest that because of the importance of the matter, the Attorney General do us the courtesy of reading all of the questions and answers that were put to Mr. McGee in the case.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: During cross-examination, Mr. McGee was asked the following questions and gave the following answers:

Question: "If they had come to you and said to you that they wanted to do that, to make up a false affidavit, to put her signature on there without authority, what appears to be her signature without authority, to indicate that a JP had sworn that and signed it, what would you have instructed them?"

Answer: "Well, you told me you were going to ask me this question sooner or later."

Question: "Out of fairness."

Answer: "I told you it was a very difficult question to answer. I would have to phrase my answer in the context of the type of case that these officers were investigating. As I understand it, they were investigating a man who they believed was a diabolic, hardened, clever criminal and a man who they had great difficulty in getting evidence against. I would have to phrase my answer in the context of those circumstances.

"If they came to me and told me that the only way they could obtain any evidence against this man that they knew to be the murderer was by the use of a document such as this, I think that my advice would be to them that they would have to recognize the risks they were running, the possibilities of legal consequences against them, but if this is what they wished to do and this was the only way they could see to do it, then they should."

Question: "You would advise them to do it?"

Answer: "I would advise them of the risks they were running in doing it and I would advise them that if they felt as police officers that this was the only way they could gain evidence against a man who had committed a diabolical murder on an innocent young person in a shopping centre in my area, that would be the advice I would give them, quite honestly, Mr. Murphy."

Question: "Well in effect, Mr. McGee, then what you are telling us is they have to make the decision?"

Answer: "They have to make the decision. I would advise them of the risks they were running, as I am sure you would. But, I, as I say, I can't control them. They are not controlled by us. They are controlled by their superiors."

Question: "I am not asking you this as an expert because you are not qualified as one before the court and you are not called as one, and it would be unfair to do so, although I am prepared to admit you are an expert. You, as crown attorney, a crown attorney, are of the opinion that an officer should and is entitled to break the law of our land?"

Answer: "Should and is entitled to break the law of our land? No. I don't think he is entitled to break the law of our land. But I think it is our duty certainly to advise this jury, Mr. Murphy, that you know very well illegally-obtained evidence is admissible in our courts. The Supreme Court of Canada has indicated that."

Question: "I am not talking about that; I am talking about breaking the law. I am not defining law; that is why I said I am not asking you as an expert. I am not asking you the very thing this jury will have to decide later. I am asking you, as a crown attorney, do you believe it is a proper thing for a policeman to break a part of a section of the Criminal Code in order to conduct a prosecution?"

Answer: "Well, I certainly don't think it is in most cases; but in a case where this was, as I explained to you, a highly unusual case, such as this appeared to be, assuming what you have asked me, Mr. Murphy, is"—and then the next question intercedes:

Question: "I am not asking about this one. Don't answer a question I didn't ask."

Answer: "Pardon?"

Question: "Don't answer for the question. I didn't ask a question, I said, 'Do you generally think—'"

Answer: "You are talking generally."

Question: "—that police officers should break the law—"

Answer: "No, I don't generally. No."

Question: "—in order to further his investigation?"

Answer: "No, I don't."

During re-examination, Mr. McGee was asked the following questions and gave the following answers—that was re-examination by counsel for one or both of the police officers.

Question: "Just to pick up on that, if I may briefly, Your Honour. You would not advise a police officer to break the law?"

Answer: "I certainly wouldn't."

Question: "No. You told us that in a peculiar circumstance of this case, with a caveat you would tell them to proceed?"

Answer: "I would tell him to proceed and I would advise him of the risks he was running."

Question: "And by virtue of section 21 of the Criminal Code you would be encouraging him under the circumstances?"

Answer: "I suppose I would."

Question: "And be guilty yourself?"

Answer: "I suppose I would. I suppose I would, but—I will leave it at that."

That is the portion of the testimony I believe to be relevant, Mr. Speaker.

I think it can readily be seen that some press reports of Mr. McGee's testimony were incomplete because they tended to isolate and emphasize one part of his answers without fully reporting the qualification he included in those answers.

Notwithstanding that caveat, I wish to advise the members of this House that I have communicated with Mr. McGee and have made it clear to him that his answers did not reflect what my policy and that of my ministry has been and will continue to be. I am satisfied now that Mr. McGee did not intend to say he would ever advise the police to break the law.

However, in my view a mere instruction to the police as to what the law is, followed by an invitation to them to go ahead and do what they think they should, does not amount to a proper fulfilling of the function of local agents of the Attorney General. I hope in a situation such as that presented to Mr. McGee and the questions asked of him in court that crown counsel consulted by the police would advise the police in the strongest possible terms not to proceed with such a course of action.

It is important to remember that in this very case the investigating officer who laid the charge against Mr. Stevenson and Mr. McLean received extensive advice and assistance from my senior law officers before they made their decision. Mr. McGee's answers to the hypothetical questions put to him were not consistent with the advice given by my senior law officers prior to the laying of the charges, and I have made my concern about that known to Mr. McGee.

As I have indicated above, I found myself in some disagreement with a part of what Mr. McGee said, and perhaps more so with what he did not say. But he has made it clear to me that he is in full agreement with the policy I believe must be followed. Mr. McGee has been a dedicated and capable servant of the public for a substantial period of time and will, I hope, continue that role for many years to come.

With respect to the ultimate disposition of the case, I wish to advise the members of this House that there will be no appeal by the crown against the disposition. As the members of this House are undoubtedly aware, my agent, the local crown attorney Mr. Murphy, an experienced and competent crown counsel, took the position that an absolute discharge was the appropriate decision.

In Rezina v. Arsozino, the Ontario Court of Appeal has made it clear that it is unfair to an accused for the crown to launch an appeal against sentence on a basis inconsistent with the position taken by the crown at trial and that, accordingly, crown appeals in cases such as this will not be entertained. Although I personally might—and I stress the word "might"—have taken a different position than what was taken by Mr. Murphy—and I emphasize the word "might" because I was not there in court hearing and seeing the witnesses—I support not only the right but the duty of my local agents to exercise their discretion in accordance with well-established principles and traditions of the office of crown counsel.

TORONTO ISLAND HOMES

Hon. Mr. Wells: I wish to inform the members of the House that I have written today to the chairman of Metropolitan Toronto Council, Mr. Paul Godfrey, to let him know that we will not be proceeding with Bill 153, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act during this session of the Legislature. As members know, this legislation deals with residences on the Toronto Islands. However, I want them to know that it is my intention, and the government's intention, to introduce a new bill which will be essentially the same as Bill 153 during the next session of the Legislature in the spring.

In my letter to Mr. Godfrey, I also made the following observation. I asked that in the interval between now and the introduction of the new bill the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto refrain from any action under the writs of possession which were issued in October 1978.

AID TO CHRYSLER

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I have stated on numerous occasions, our government is deeply concerned about the future of Chrysler Canada, its employees, the city of Windsor and the impact that closing down the company would have on Ontario. We are pleased with the recent actions of the US House of Representatives and the Senate in responding positively to a request to support the Chrysler Corporation. At this time, the House and Senate are meeting in an effort to finalize the package of financial assistance for Chrysler. We look forward to a positive resolution of this issue within the next few days.

The actions of the US Congress are of particular importance to Ontario, since our estimates indicate that the failure of the company could result in the loss of 23,500 direct jobs and between 20,000 and 40,000 indirect jobs; an increase in the unemployment rate in Windsor to between 30 and 40 per cent; and a cost to the federal and Ontario governments totalling up to $1 billion including forgone tax revenues and costs associated with existing UIC programs.

We have not only remained in constant contact with the government of Canada and the management of Chrysler, but I have conferred regularly with the Honourable Robert de Cotret, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. My deputy minister has met with his counterpart in Ottawa on several occasions, and we have also met with the union members representing the Chrysler locals of the United Auto Workers.

We have reviewed the various studies which have been carried out, including those of the US Treasury, the American consultants Booz, Allen and Hamilton, and Data Research Incorporated. We have also reviewed the draft bill forwarded to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of the US, by the secretary of the US Treasury.

We have, naturally, reviewed the Chrysler submission to the government of the United States and their proposals for the Canadian company. I will repeat what I have said previously. We are willing and anxious to assist Chrysler Canada. However, we are seeking commitments from the company with regard to new investment and employment, as well as the assurance that any assistance provided by the province will be adequately secured.

Contained in the Chrysler proposal for the development of its Canadian activities are two items which will allow for the updating of operations in Windsor for the manufacture of new generation commercial vehicles and engines. We want to see those established in Ontario, together with appropriate provision for research and development and the manufacture of in-house parts and components, possibly plastics.

These operational changes would substantially increase Chrysler's employment in Ontario. The company is in a position where it must update products to compete in the North American market place. However, given the current financial status, incentives will be required to develop those facilities. Manufacturing locations for the new products are dependent to some extent on assistance available. We know that various states in the USA are prepared to commit loans or grants to the corporation. Much of Chrysler's supplementary financing, apart from US government aid, will be from various jurisdictions that have an economic stake in the future of the corporation. Those states are our competition.

In the general consolidation of Chrysler's activities, Ontario will not risk losing Canadian operations as the corporation rationalizes its production facilities. We have an opportunity not only to maintain the company's presence in Ontario, but also to expand that presence, with a resulting increase in the company's payroll.

There is an opportunity for Ontario to take a major step toward strengthening and restructuring the auto industry in this province. We intend to capitalize on that opportunity, while at the same time negotiating safeguards which will protect the province and the public interest, until such time as public funding is no longer required or has been reimbursed.

Presuming the details of American government assistance to ensure Chrysler's continued existence are completed within the next few days, we are ready to undertake immediate negotiations to achieve the objectives I have outlined in this statement this morning. We will be meeting with the federal government within the next few weeks to co-ordinate our efforts. I would like to take this opportunity to assure both the members of this Legislature and the people of Windsor that we will remain on top of the situation and seize every opportunity open to us.

I am confident the federal government, together with ourselves, will be able to ensure every job in the Chrysler Corporation that can be saved will be saved.

EMPLOYMENT DEVELOPMENT FUND

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce today that the Ontario government has approved an Employment Development Fund grant of $10.5 million to assist Domtar Incorporated in a five-year, $112 million program to modernize its pulp and paper facilities in Ontario.

The federal government has allocated an additional $5.25 million in assistance over the next three years. This will be one of the largest capital expenditure programs ever undertaken by Domtar at its pulp and paper operations in this province, and will involve major improvements to three of its mills.

Approximately $62.4 million will be invested in the Red Rock operation; $43.3 million will be spent in Cornwall; and $6.3 million will be invested in Trenton. A portion of Domtar's expenditures will be directed towards environmental improvements at the three mills. The Red Rock, Cornwall and Trenton operations employ approximately 2,570 people and have an annual payroll of $46 million. The company's investment in modernization is expected to stabilize these jobs and add a small number of new jobs. While there will be some job changes at each facility, it is expected that they will be achieved through on-the-job retraining. No layoffs will result from the program.

Domtar anticipates that 85 per cent of the goods and services used in this modernization project will be purchased in Canada. The company will be working closely with both the federal government and our government to ensure that their shop-Canadian commitment is met.

The Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) is in Cornwall this morning to conclude the agreement, the third to be signed under a program in Ontario to encourage improvements in the province's pulp and paper industry through incentives for mill modernization, energy conservation and pollution abatement investments. The governments of Ontario and Canada expect to offer a total of $150 million to Ontario pulp and paper producers. Our government will fund two thirds of the incentive program, with the federal government providing one third.

While he is in Cornwall, the Treasurer will also be announcing our decision to provide Employment Development Fund grants to two additional firms in that area. Atlas Hoist and Body Incorporated of Cornwall, a major producer of original equipment bodies for off-highway earth-moving machines, will receive an EDF grant of $300,000. In the interests of time I will not read the balance of my statement relating to Atlas Hoist and Body Incorporated but the details of the program are contained in my statement.

As well in that area, an Employment Development Fund grant of $140,000 has been approved for Heuga Canada Limited. Details of the employment program and the investment program are also contained in this statement.

I would add the Heuga Canada Limited program typifies the kind of development we are looking to support through the fund. It will provide stable long-term employment, foster the development of needed job skills, stimulate export development and contribute to export replacement.

Finally, I would also like to announce our government's participation in a major investment project in Sarnia. As the members of this Legislature know, in December of last year, the Prestolite Division of Eltra Corporation closed its Sarnia plant, laying off 220 employees. This division manufactured automotive electrical accessories and fractional-horsepower motors.

Since that time, the Ontario government, former employes of the Prestolite Division, the plant's previous owner, an outside investor and the local community have all been involved in active negotiations to put together a financial package that would permit the plant to be reopened. I am pleased to announce today that our government will be providing an Employment Development Fund grant of $200,000 to Sarnia Electrical Motors and Appliances Incorporated. As a result of this grant, the former Prestolite plant is expected to reopen early next month. There will be 99 new jobs created in the first year of operation, increasing to 296 jobs by 1984. The project will result in an investment of $3.7 million and fractional horsepower motors will be manufactured for the North American market. Approximately two thirds of the projected production will ultimately be exported to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, our early discussions with the parties involved clearly indicated that our government's participation would be key to the success of the project. For $200,000 we have ensured the reopening of the Prestolite plant, levered significant private sector investment and created much-needed new jobs in the great city of Sarnia.

REFUGEE ASSISTANCE

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, Christmas is always special, but this particular Christmas is more special than most. The fact that makes it so extraordinary is the presence among us of thousands of dispossessed men, women and children from southeast Asia.

During the last 12 months the compassion and goodwill of the people of Ontario have paved the way for a remarkable refugee settlement here. More than 10,000 refugees, sponsored privately by more than 2,000 community groups, have come here to settle in more than 200 communities across this province. The provincial government is helping in this resettlement both directly and indirectly. I would like to report very briefly on what we have been doing during 1979.

Before I do that, though, let me simply re-emphasize that the goodwill of the people of Ontario has been the key factor. Our government has had a role, but that role would have been irrelevant without the deep commitment of individual citizens. As honourable members know, the Ministry of Culture and Recreation has primary responsibility for the long-term resettlement of newcomers to Ontario. Given that, it has been assigned the lead role for co-ordinating the provincial government's response to the refugee movement from southeast Asia. It is fulfilling that assignment in two ways.

First, it is working with such other ministries as Health, Labour, Education, Housing and Community and Social Services to try to ensure that the government as a whole is playing its part in this resettlement in the most effective way possible.

Second, my ministry is undertaking its own initiatives. The focal point of its activities is the Indo-Chinese refugee settlement unit which runs out of Ontario Welcome House in Toronto. The unit has been set up since the summer and during the last three months it has been providing direct services, information, education and community support.

In the direct service area, it is doing such work as translating documents for refugees and teaching English as a second language to people who are not in the school system. The ministry is also training volunteers to teach English as a second language.

In the information area, my ministry is providing basic background on the refugees to individuals and organizations who are dealing with those refugees. And in community support, it is providing both professional time and money to help deepen the services that community agencies offer to refugees.

All in all the Ontario effort during 1979 and particularly the volunteer effort has been a very substantial one. I take great pleasure in acknowledging that volunteer effort and the outstanding human qualities that have driven it. I know all members on both sides of the House will want to join me in extending deep thanks to all those people who have given so selflessly to help the dispossessed of Southeast Asia take their place in our society.

TRIBUTE TO CLERK OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: Before we get to all the questions, I would like to remind all honourable members of the House that we are reaching a milestone in the history of this House that I think is worthy of note, namely that on December 20, 1946, our present Clerk was appointed Assistant Clerk of this House. On October 18, 1951 he was appointed assistant chief election officer. On January 1, 1955, Mr. Lewis was appointed Clerk of the Legislative Assembly, succeeding his father, Major Alex Lewis. On January 1, 1955, he was appointed the chief election officer for the province of Ontario, which means that effective January 1, 1980, he will have served us a total of 33 years, and 25 years as a Clerk of this assembly.

I'm sure that all honourable members would like to join with me in paying tribute to Mr. Lewis for his long and dedicated service and to thank him most sincerely for that service.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you will seek the indulgence of the members of the House and allow the Clerk to take 20 minutes to reply. Knowing him as I do, he won't.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, before we go on to oral questions, I had expected that the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Au'd) would be making a statement about Atikokan in response to a question from myself earlier in the week. I know he had a statement with him yesterday. I don't see him in the House. I wonder if the Premier could indicate if he would be here and when he does, would we be able to revert to statements at that time?

Mr. Renwick: I have a similar concern with respect to a question I asked the Premier last week about the allocation of emergency oil supplies in Ontario, in the contingency of an emergency. The Premier at that time said that early this week there would be a statement either by himself or by the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch). I notice that this was conspicuous by its absence this morning.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In an attempt to accommodate the time frame and also the concern with respect to the length of time of statements, the Minister of Energy was going to deal with the question the member for Riverdale raised briefly during the discussions on concurrences of his estimates. He will be here to do that and has something to say on that matter.

With respect to the question raised by the member for Rainy River, I will check with the Ministry of Natural Resources. My information is that the minister intended to issue a press release related to that, but I will check that out and let the honourable member know.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ACCESS TO OHIP SERVICES

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. Does the minister recall his commitment to me and to this House in March of this year, March 30 to be precise, when the minister was asked how people who are coming into hospital for operations would have a right to choose an opted-in versus an opted-out anaesthetist? He said that if a person insisted he could get one who was opted-out and he said there would be a mechanism. His exact words at the time, Mr. Speaker, were, "The medical association and the hospital association have undertaken to come up with a mechanism by which this could occur."

Could the minister tell us what this mechanism is?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will just correct the member's question. It was to have access to the services at the OHIP rates.

Following those discussions in March with the medical association and the hospital association, they have had a number of discussions between them. They have circularized all their members and essentially it's been left in the hands of the individual hospitals and their medical staffs to ensure this access. We are all of us—the medical association, the hospital association, the ministry—watching it very closely. To date I am not aware of any difficulty in any of the hospitals that would indicate there is not access to the services at OHIP rates.

So the mechanism has been a continuing consultation between the associations and keeping their members apprised of this need and this requirement. To date every indication is that it's working.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, does the Minister of Health not know what the mechanism is? In most of the instances is it a box that someone ticks off as to whether they wish to have opted-in or opted-out rates when they come into hospital? Is it somebody who comes to them the night before the operation saying, "Do you insist on not paying my full bill?" Is it a question of the anaesthetist deciding who can pay and who can't; or his or her secretary deciding this? What is the mechanism and will the minister share it with this House? Why has he not reported it to us?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it varies. The finite details will vary from hospital to hospital. For instance, a hospital in London has a member of the staff who goes around and sees the patients on admission. In another hospital the patients are seen afterwards; that's the case with the president of the Ontario Medical Association. It will vary, but the principle of access, to be seen by the anaesthetist or a member of his staff and—

Mr. S. Smith: And he will make the judgement as to who can pay.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, no, Mr. Speaker; the principle in question here is the right of access to services at OHIP rates, and every indication is that that is being applied and is working.

Mr. Breaugh: It is true that anaesthetists have taken to notifying people, but quite contrary to what the minister just said in that field it's very difficult to notify ahead of time. Isn't it really time that the minister brought in some form of legislation like private member's Bill 169, which requires that in a publicly-funded hospital, using publicly-paid-for equipment, and with publicly-paid-for support staff in the form of technicians and nursing staff, that at least in that one clear circumstance the work should be done at the OHIP rate?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, Bill 169 sort of goes both ways. It talks about the services being available at OHIP rates and it talks about opting out as well; maybe the member didn't intend it to come out the way he drafted it, but Bill 169 goes both ways. If there were indications that services are being denied at the OHIP rates, yes we would have to look at something like that, but I have to tell the honourable member there's no indication whatsoever that sort of thing is required. The community hospitals, in his community and in mine, working with their medical staff are ensuring the services are available.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I must ask, by way of supplementary, that the minister clarify this matter. Do I take it that the minister is satisfied with a situation where the patient, either pre-operatively or post-operatively, is visited by an anaesthetist and then somehow out of that meeting there comes a decision as to whether the bill will be an OHIP-rate bill or something above that? I take it he's satisfied with that without knowing whether the decision as to whether to pay the OHIP rate or not lies in the hands of the patient or in the hands of the doctor. Surely that's the essential matter. Can the patient simply state, without having to beg, without having to stand up against any implied threat or any implied bad feeling, easily when he or she enters the hospital, that they insist it be at the OHIP rate and hear nothing more about it; or do they have to engage in conversation with a doctor, does the doctor make the decision as to whether they have to pay above the OHIP rate? Could you please clarify that?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it couldn't be any clearer than in the March 29 statement I released. It says the services will be available at the OHIP rates where the patient is—

Mr. S. Smith: I asked the minister a fair question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am giving the honourable member a fair answer, but he never listens. It's very clear that the patient has the right to insist, and the medical association and the hospital association have agreed they will ensure the patient has the right of access to all services at OHIP rates. When the member talks about anaesthetists, that is the most difficult area because they aren't always assigned ahead of time, sometimes it's on call and that sort of thing. That's why the president of the medical association has suggested that in those cases where it's not possible, because the patient is in great pain or is partially sedated or whatever, to make the arrangement in advance that the anaesthetist at least talk to the patient afterwards before billing. To my knowledge, and I have discussed this extensively with the hospital association as well as the medical association regularly since March, there have not been any difficulties in ensuring that is being carried out. It is being monitored by the hospital board, the administration and the medical staff of the hospital.

Mr. Cassidy: Given that more than half of the specialists are opted out in many specialties, and in many communities across the province and not just in isolated instances, is the minister aware of the proportion of claims that are charged on an opted-out basis by specialists across the province? Is the minister also not aware of the fact that a general practitioner will generate many more claims which will tend to be opted in than a specialist because a specialist's fees for each service will be much higher?

Is it not, therefore, the case that the material filed in this House up until now may not give a truly accurate position in terms of the amounts that people are having to pay to opted-out specialists? Does the minister have the information on the proportion of claims by specialists on an opted-out basis and will he provide that information to the House?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I don't have the information broken down. I'm told that the bulk of opted-out claims do come from GPs and anaesthetists, they make up the majority. I've not seen them broken down by specialty in making up the nine per cent of the claims that are billed directly to the patients.

EMIGRATION FROM ONTARIO

Mr. S. Smith: I have the last question initiated by yours truly in the 1970s, the Davis decade in Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: Don't count on it. We might be here tomorrow.

Mr. S. Smith: That's right, we might be here tomorrow, but I'm assuming we won't. Does the Premier find it ironic that now, at the end of this decade, for the first time in living memory the net migration figures show 5,000 more people have left Ontario than came here, despite a very large migration here of anglophone Quebecers? The boast, "Is there any place you'd rather be?" has, under the Premier's leadership, been answered embarrassingly in the affirmative by thousands of people who would rather be somewhere with a better opportunity of working or owning a home. Would the Premier agree that his policies have taken "a place to stand and a place to grow" and turned it into "a place to leave"?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I won't become provoked this close to Christmas by the rather immature, facetious and non-serious question being asked by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: Don't be condescending.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not condescending at all. I'm just telling the facts the way his party, if it were honest, would express them.

Mr. S. Smith: When you engage in personal insult you make a personal fool of yourself.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not being personally insulting by saying I think it's an immature question, I do think it is.

Mr. S. Smith: Migration from Ontario has been disclosed for the first time in living memory. Why doesn't the Premier comment on it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, with great respect, it is not the first time. It all depends how long one's memory is. If the Leader of the Opposition is saying that in his view the strength of this province, the opportunities that are available here and the potential that exists are significantly less, that's fine. I'm sure that happens to be his point of view. It doesn't happen to be mine. I have no quarrel with the fact that some people have left this province, whether on a permanent or part-time basis, to travel to western Canada, particularly Alberta as a result of the economic growth that is taking place there.

Mr. S. Smith: To work.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, they're going for some other reasons too. Some have even gone to British Columbia. If one traces the economic history of the United States, one will find that certain people have moved to the state of California. There has always been a tendency to move in a westward direction. That's why our policy of "GO east" with respect to the Toronto-centred region has been in defiance of historical tradition even within this province. I'm just speaking for Brampton. There has been that tremendous growth in that direction.

I really could become almost enthusiastic over the way the Leader of the Opposition has worded the question. It really does indicating a degree of cynicism and pessimism on his part. This province represents, in terms of the economy and in terms of the social and educational programs, which he doesn't think are so hot, still represents the best place to do business, the best place to raise a family, even the best place to be involved in the political process. This still happens to be so in the province of Ontario, and will continue to be so into the 1980s; and I expect it will be a Progressive Conservative administration that sees us through the 1980s, as it has been in the 1970s, the 1960s, the 1950s and part of the 1940s.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the question has nothing to do with the great potential of this province but rather the sad waste of this potential because of the poor leadership it is now receiving. This province has a very great future, but a future it will only enjoy properly once it is given proper leadership to use the human resources intelligently rather than squander them in the way that is the case at present. Since very shortly, as we go in the 1980s, that responsibility will lie with members on this side of the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the member have a supplementary question?

Mr. S. Smith: Yes I am getting to the point of it.

Mr. Speaker: Put it forthwith.

Mr. S. Smith: Given that Ontario, as a partner in Confederation, entered the 1970s as a lion and is going out as a lamb with the lowest rate of growth in manufacturing, would the Premier explain to us how, during his leadership, manufacturing growth in Ontario fell to 10th among the provinces of Canada, and exactly what it is he intends to do to make Ontario something other than the sick old man of Canada, which it has become under his dreadful and dreary leadership?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am a very modest person, I certainly wouldn't want to quote back to the leader of the Liberal Party of Ontario the views of the leader of the Liberal Party of Canada on how he sees the Premier of this province, especially now that the member has endorsed him so enthusiastically. What he has been inferring here this morning is in contradiction to what his leader said. I know that would be hard for the member to accept now that he has become so enthusiastic again about his federal leader.

When he made that commitment the other day, did he know that Pierre was going to be the leader again, after the member advised him at OISE he was doing the country a great service by resigning?

However, I won't get involved in a political debate. I would just say to the Leader of the Opposition if, when he asked the question the way he did, in the rather sarcastic and cynical tone he uses, he would just look around at some of his colleagues as he asks those questions and see the smile upon their faces as they listen to their leader asking a question they know themselves is totally silly.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh come on, Patrick; you know better, I know better.

Why doesn't the leader talk to some of his colleagues in his own caucus on occasion? Why doesn't he let them share in some of the decision-making? Why doesn't he take their advice and assistance? His political life would mature more rapidly if he would accept some of their judgements.

The member agrees with me; I know he does.

In relation to the economy of this province, the Leader of the Opposition is concerned about the manufacturing sector. I can only tell him once again that in terms of the jobs created there is not another province in Canada that has done as well. There hasn't been another jurisdiction in North America in the past two years that on any comparative basis has created as many jobs within the manufacturing and service sectors as has taken place here in Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: The dollar fell off just like that; more layoffs, more bankruptcies.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on; what does the member mean more layoffs? We have made better progress economically in the manufacturing sector than anywhere else on a comparative basis, and the member knows it. This is in spite of his opposition to our assistance to the pulp and paper industry. It is in spite of his opposition to our assistance to the automotive industry. The Leader of the Opposition totally embarrassed the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) for months by his opposition to the Ford contribution. Of course he did; I read the Windsor paper more regularly than he does. My in-laws send it to me. I know what he says back home and what he says here.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh come on, I know how you supported the Ford deal. Mr. Speaker, I would only say to the Leader of the Opposition, for once, show a little enthusiasm, show a little confidence. I would urge him to join with us as we move—

Mr. B. Newman: I would like the Premier to tell the House just exactly what I say back in the Windsor area if he knows so much.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I know on a very personal basis that the member for Windsor-Walkerville was very enthusiastic about the involvement of this government with respect to the assistance to Ford Canada. Is that not correct?

Mr. S. Smith: We supported it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In support of my leader's question, I would like to ask the Premier, being the modest man that he is, if he can recall over the years—the 1940s, 1950s, 1960s and 1970s—anywhere in the history of the free world where there has been a contract let for $7 billion such as he signed against the recommendations of a committee? When is he going to get that money back for us? What is happening to Ontario when he can do that; arrange a $7 billion contract for a scandalous deal with Denison Mines Limited? When is he going to get that money back for us?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if the member for Grey-Bruce is looking for any personal contribution he certainly is not going to get it from me. I must tell him I did not—

Mr. Sargent: Don't be smart, you know you are wrong.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh I know the member is smarter. I mean that has been clearly demonstrated in this House for the past number of years, I do not quarrel with that. I mean he demonstrates it with great affection every time we meet in the press gallery. I will not tell people what he says to me on these occasions, which is totally different from what he says here in the House.

Now I am about to answer the question.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of privilege. Every time I see the Premier in the press gallery it is a joy to be with him. But every time he sees me he offers me a deal to cross the House.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, the member for Grey-Bruce has invited me to lead his party and I had to reject that invitation. I had to reject that invitation.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to make it very clear to the member for Grey-Bruce that I did not sign any contracts. It is fair to state that members from his own party on that committee ultimately came to the decision that it was in the best interests of the public of this province and some—

Mr. S. Smith: It is false, you know it. Why do you keep saying it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh come on, it is.

Mr. S. Smith: It is false. You made a false statement just now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: False? Oh, well, all right. Mr. Speaker I will rephrase it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish the Leader of the Opposition would rephrase his interjection, because it is clearly out of order.

Mr. S. Smith: The interjection was, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier has just made a false statement. If that is out of order I will say then that the Premier has made a statement which is factually incorrect? Is that better?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will certainly accept the Leader of the Opposition's judgement as to what his members genuinely felt. I find it difficult sometimes to translate what people really think and what they express in documentation. I will say, then, that his party is not enthusiastic, he did not think it was in the public interest and we will let it rest there. I just happened to know there are a lot of people who feel it does. I just emphasize to the member for Grey-Bruce I did not sign any contract.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am just sending over to the Premier some figures, which we prepared yesterday, on the amount of opting out by specialists across the province. My question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: does the government remain committed to universal access to health care in Ontario? If so, now that the Premier is aware of the various high rate of opting out among specialties—such as psychiatry, anaesthesia, obstetrics, orthopaedic surgery, otolaryngology, urology, ophthalmology, and plastic surgery—will the Premier undertake to rescind the fee agreement with Ontario Medical Association until these specialists agree to stop billing their patients over the OHIP rates?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Heath has really dealt with this rather extensively, not only in the past few days but number of months. If the member is asking if we're going to terminate the agreement, the answer to that, of course, is no. I am sure the leader of the New Democratic Party would understand that answer. I think it's also fair to state that all doctors who opted out don't in fact do what he suggests.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the Premier explain why it is that the government tolerates such high rates of opting out among certain specialties, when those specialties in fact, are the areas where medical incomes are already the greatest? If I can be specific, why allow a high degree of opting out when psychiatrists are earning an average estimated income in 1980 of $60,000; when anaesthetists will get $66,000; when it will be $80,000 for orthopaedic surgeons; when it will be $76,000 for the otolaryngologist; and when it will be $71,000 for the ophthalmologist?

When those figures are the estimated net incomes for those specialties, for those who remain within OHIP, why is it the government tolerates those specialists adding a 42 per cent surcharge to incomes which are already extremely high?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The government doesn't tolerate them adding because a lot of them do not add. As I explained to the leader of the New Democratic Party, who I know would terminate the agreement, legislate everybody in and put everybody on salary, that is not the approach we're taking. We're trying to encourage the profession, some of them, to move back onto the OHIP schedule.

Mr. Lupusella: That is not the approach we're taking.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Of course he is advocating it. There is no other alternative the way members opposite present it. He wants a confrontation with the medical profession, we want to see solutions and we think we are achieving them in a much better fashion than the leader of the NDP and his people would.

Mr. Conway: I'd like to ask the Premier, since he has been reported and since I have heard him indicate a personal dissatisfaction with the present rates of opting out, would he indicate to this House today the basis of his personal dissatisfaction with present rates of opting out and what he plans and proposes to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that I've registered a personal dissatisfaction in that sense of the word. I believe I was asked a question about whether I was content with it and I think my answer was, "We would, as a government, obviously prefer to have more doctors within the plan." That's not news. It's something I have stated on a number of occasions, as has the Minister of Health.

I said in answer to a question, I believe from the leader of the New Democratic Party, although it might have been the member's leader—

Mr. S. Smith: Why are you not content? What is the basis of that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: If he will listen. Is he going to let his health critic ask the question?

Mr. S. Smith: That's the question he asked.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I intend to answer it. Don't get so excited; relax, enjoy life a little bit. Have a bit of fun.

Mr. S. Smith: Why? What is wrong with the present situation? Every word you've said indicates satisfaction.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What does the member mean why am I not content? I would prefer to see more doctors in the plan, that's why I'm not content. It's as simple as that. If he wants it as simple as that, that's the way it is.

Mr. Breaugh: A supplementary to the Premier, who I understand takes great pride in being a reasonable person. Does it seem reasonable, as a taxpayer as well as being Premier of the province, that we, the people of Ontario, pay the overhead; we, the people of Ontario, pay for the equipment; we, the people of Ontario, pay for the technical and nursing staff; but the doctor has no obligation, particularly if he functions in a hospital as most of the specialists do, to charge the approved rate? The Premier is a reasonable man, would he try to give us a reasonable response on that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, a lot of people who are involved in a form of public service have certain amounts of the overhead paid. I'm not going to argue with the member for Oshawa that some members of the medical profession don't utilize the hospital for which the public has paid, no question about that.

But let's be very honest with one another. As a private member, he gets—and I wouldn't say for a moment too much by way of compensation—but a constituency office, which is overhead; an office here in the building, which is overhead, and secretarial assistance, which is a form of overhead. We all get this.

Mr. Foulds: We are all on salary and don't levy surcharges.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's fine, but this is all in addition to salary. All of us in the public sector have a portion of our overhead paid. It's always easy to single out others in terms of their overhead being paid by the public sector, but let's acknowledge that some of our overhead is also being paid in addition to the modest salaries we receive.

MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact that the Premier is prepared to see specialists averaging $80,000 a year opt out and get extra net income, I would like to ask him a question about the lowest paid people in our society, the hundreds of thousands of people across this province who are forced to go through Christmas this year on the minimum wage of Ontario, which was set at $3 an hour in January 1979.

Since the Workmen's Compensation Board benefits have just been increased by 10 per cent in line with the cost of living, effective in July of this year, since the increase in wages and salaries has been about 10 per cent this year; and since corporate profits are apparently running about 45 per cent ahead of last year; does the government intend to increase the minimum wage in Ontario from its present rate of $3 an hour? When will that increase take place and by how much?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The minimum wage is not being altered by the province at this particular time.

Mr. Cassidy: After the Premier's compassion for people in medical specialties, who are earning hundreds of thousands of dollars a year in some cases, would the Premier explain why it is that this province has no compassion at all when it comes to the people who do the dirty jobs in this province, who have been earning $3 an hour since January 1979 but whose rate was only $2.65 back in March 1976? While there has been only a 13 per cent increase in the minimum wage since March 1976, at the same time that there has been a 30 per cent increase in the cost of living, why will the government not act now in order to bring the minimum wage somewhat closer to a decent standard for working people in this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I thought my answer to the first question was clear in that the member asked if we are contemplating raising the minimum wage at this time. He didn't ask why.

Mr. Mackenzie: Could I then ask as a supplementary of the Premier: could he tell us whether or not he is now telling this House that the minimum wage is no longer an instrument to see a fair distribution of earnings in this province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The answer to that very simply is no, I am not saying that.

ILLEGAL ACTS BY POLICE

Mr. Stong: I have a question of the Solicitor General. In his statement this morning, he indicated he was satisfied there was no direct course taught at the Ontario Police College which would encourage police officers to break the law in conducting investigations.

I wonder if the minister can give his assurance to this House, as a result of the legal maxim quoted by Mr. McGee at that trial that illegally obtained evidence is admissible in court, that not only is no course directly taught, likewise there is no indirect encouragement by path of acquiescence to that legal maxim at the Ontario Police College, which would tend to encourage police officers to use illegal methods to obtain evidence or go on frolics of their own.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I know the honourable member is familiar with the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Regina and Wray, which in effect is in support of the statement that was made by Mr. McGee. I think I indicated to the member, though perhaps not during the Solicitor General's estimates, that I was reviewing that portion of the course that is given. I know there are senior officers who review the police college course that is related to evidence, the admissibility of statements and what not, to ensure there isn't that type of encouragement to which the member just referred.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: I'm wondering if the Attorney General can tell us whether the two police officers sought advice from the crown or from the Attorney General's office prior to the course of action which they took.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: To my knowledge they did not.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: In reading the evidence given by Mr. McGee, does it seem to the Attorney General that Mr. McGee seems to have confused the issue of illegal admissions and admissions obtained by criminal methods?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Certainly the transcript might be interpreted as containing some confusion in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary, the member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Would the Attorney General put to rest another open-ended matter in connection with his statement this morning? Did Mr. Murphy, the local crown attorney, consult with the Attorney General or with any of his senior law officers on the disposition of the case by way of absolute discharge?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, he did not.

HYDRO RATES

Ms. Gigantes: I have a question of the Premier, in the absence of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch). With the Ontario Energy Board about to produce recommendations for changes to Hydro's rate structure, which at the very least will probably recommend that Hydro adopt rates related to time-of-day use, why is the government allowing Ontario Hydro to both pre-empt the Ontario Energy Board report and to begin a three-year stall on implementing province-wide time-of-day pricing, a stall that Hydro's going to effect by two new unscientific time-of-day "experiments"?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not familiar with those particular experiments. I would be delighted to have the Minister of Energy reply to the member during the hopefully brief discussion on concurrence of his ministry's estimates. I will alert him that the member has asked the question so that he will be able to deal with it during that brief discussion.

PREMIER'S MEETING WITH CLAUDE RYAN

Mr. Sweeney: I have a question of the Premier with reference to his meeting with Claude Ryan in Quebec earlier this week. The question is asked in the same spirit of harmony in which I understand the meeting took place. Mr. Ryan is reported to have said: "Mr. Davis' remarks went further than anything the Ontario Premier has been willing to accept in the past." It is also reported that when the Premier was questioned about sufficient numbers being required to supply French language education he responded, "No, that's not necessarily part of it." Could the Premier advise us what those two statements meant? What will they mean for Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not sure I can, because the discussions really covered a variety of topics related to the production by Mr. Ryan's party of their approach to federation, which paper will be out some time in the early part of the new year. I want to make it very clear, because the press reports may have created an inaccurate impression that I actually saw some of that documentation. I did not, the documentation has not been finalized.

Mr. Peterson: Has Hugh Segal seen it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No one has seen it, because it isn't finished yet. That will come as a great surprise to the member for London Centre but that, I am informed, is actually correct. I really didn't see any documentation. We covered a number of issues.

Mr. Peterson: My father-in-law has seen it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I saw the member's father-in-law the other night and he told me he hadn't seen it. But I probably see him more often than the member does.

Mr. Peterson: That's your problem. Don't come here and complain to me about it.

[11:30]

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not complaining. He complains to me about the member. That's what I have to suffer through. This is totally irrelevant, I would just assure the honourable member his father-in-law thinks he is all right.

Mr. Sweeney: I am waiting for the answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was the member's colleague who interrupted me. I was trying to give a serious answer.

Mr. Sweeney: I'm still waiting.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All right. We discussed a number of those matters which I am sure the honourable member would expect us to discuss, the question of distribution, the question of declaratory power and all of those things that have been part of the ongoing review of the constitutional process.

What I did say to the press and which I hope I made clear, though it did not emerge in the press report—because it wasn't even a press conference, the press just walked into the room, and properly so, at the conclusion of our discussions—was that in my view the issue that faced us in this province and in this country was total non-acceptance of sovereignty-association, and also a recognition, at least from my standpoint, that the status quo couldn't be maintained either and that there had to be some other alternative. In my view it has to be by constitutional change or reform. I think this is the general direction that the documentation which Mr. Ryan's party will be producing in January will take.

On the question of language, I told the Quebec press, in my view and contrary to the point of view as expressed by most, the best way to deal with some of the rights in relation to language and culture, because I still believe education is fundamental to any discussion of language or culture, is within a constitutional context. This wasn't a new proposal; I mentioned that at the last first ministers' meeting on the constitution. As the member may recall this was not accepted by the other provinces, but I think there was some indication of acceptance by the then Prime Minister.

Simply put, my argument is rather than reciprocal agreements between provinces as advocated by the Premier of Quebec, if we were genuinely concerned about language rights in relation to education then they should be part of a constitutional change; and while education is without question a provincial responsibility, from my standpoint in terms of principle we would be prepared to have that in any constitutional change. If it is put in with respect to constitutional change, I would suggest it be put in as a matter of principle. The administration is something for which individual provincial jurisdictions have to assume the responsibility.

I am not optimistic that my point of view will be accepted in other parts of Canada. I can't honestly convey that hope to the member opposite. It may be this point of view would be acceptable in terms of the position that may be developed by Mr. Ryan and his colleagues, but I can't answer for that at this moment.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Given the Premier's reference to constitutional change, what constitutional changes would the Premier recommend or accept that are not now in fact the law of Ontario with respect to language instruction?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't think that question can be answered in a simple way. What I have said we would accept in terms of the constitution is the right of a youngster in this province—and this would have to have application right across Canada—to an education in either of the two official languages of Canada. This was the position I took. It was exploratory in terms of the constitutional conference itself.

I would remind the member that people were arguing for unanimity in terms of the amending formula, which meant unanimity in terms of getting constitutional change. There was really no enthusiastic endorsement from any other jurisdiction as I recall, although I may be wrong. Certainly the majority were not in favour of that suggestion.

HIGH-SPEED CAR CHASES

Mr. Germa: I have a question of the Solicitor General. Can the Solicitor General report on the circumstances of a high-speed police chase last Thursday which involved OPP detachments in Parry Sound, Still River, Noelville and Sudbury; a chase which lasted in excess of one hour and that covered over 100 miles of highway; a chase in which vehicles exceeded speeds of 100 miles an hour; and a chase which resulted in damage to three police vehicles and the hospitalization of one OPP constable? Considering the guidelines for high-speed chases which say that the seriousness of the crime should be a consideration, does the minister think that all of this activity was necessary to recover a carton of cigarettes from a 16-year-old kid in a half-ton truck?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the matter to which the member has referred. I will ask for a report and will advise him accordingly. During the recess I will be quite happy to communicate the response that I will obtain to the member.

WETLANDS POLICY

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Natural Resources. Under the Forestry Act, I believe it's order in council 1348-25, dated May 14, 1975, there is authority that a grant may be paid to the owners of managed forests.

Since conservation authorities and others interested in the preservation of the natural environment would like to see that expanded to cover wetlands, would the Minister of Natural Resources consider including wetlands in that order in council?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, we are looking at our policy as far as wetlands are concerned. There have been representations made by the Federation of Ontario Naturalists, the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, and others. We are looking at either that approach or the possibility of a favourable type and lower municipal assessment on that property, or a combination. That's all I can tell him at the moment. It is being actively looked at. I was discussing it with the federation the night before last.

Mr. McGuigan: Supplementary: I am pleased with the minister's answer. To carry out that work, would he consider calling a conference of interested parties who would be able to discuss this matter more thoroughly with him?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will certainly consider that. I believe, though, that there have been a number of discussions between our staff and various interested organizations perhaps not publicly advertised.

REDHILL CREEK VALLEY

Mr. Mackenzie: Some weeks ago the Minister of the Environment made a commitment that he would personally take a walk through the Redhill Creek Valley before he made any decision and took a recommendation to cabinet. I am wondering if the minister has taken that walk through the valley, and if so if he's brought a recommendation to cabinet on this matter?

Mr. Martel: He took a walk somewhere else.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'm afraid I'm getting too much advice from my colleagues on this one, Mr. Speaker. No, I'm not going to sing any appropriate hymns.

If I can turn to the question. No, I have not as yet. I had it scheduled for a Monday morning two weeks ago and it was pouring rain, so I didn't have the opportunity to do so on that occasion. I would say to the member I regret not having done so on that morning but it just wasn't logical to do so. However, I do have something to report on that situation. We have had some meetings that I didn't expect to have on that subject matter. Although I'm not at this minute ready to advise of the outcome of those meetings, in the not-too-distant future I will have something of significance to say and I'll be glad to communicate that to the member prior to the next session.

I can assure the member that I will walk the valley. That is something I intend to do. I will be glad to discuss it with him, say in the month of January.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: The second part of the question was that the minister had said he would take the walk before he made a recommendation to cabinet. Has he made a recommendation to cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, indeed I have not. Without going further at this minute, I am pleased with the progress of the discussions I had on the subject matter. I think there has been real accomplishment. I would certainly like to conclude that discussion, plus make the visitation as promised before I recommend anything to cabinet. I certainly will not be doing so until I have done both of those things.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ST. CATHARINES

Mr. Bradley: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. Considering the fact that in the Niagara region we have a large number of people on the welfare rolls and that those people are in the category of employable and many of them are young people; and considering the fact that the number of people on the welfare rolls in the city of St. Catharines is the highest in history; has the minister spoken to his cabinet colleagues, specifically the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), to persuade him to take any specific action which would alleviate the unemployment for the people in those specific categories; thus reducing the cost to his ministry, and more important the cost in human terms to the people who are directly affected?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, as the honourable member knows, there are a number of programs that my colleagues in both Treasury and in the Ministry of Industry and Tourism are operating across this province to stimulate employment in communities everywhere, not specifically restricted to any one area. Those programs are developing, as I understand it, very well. I think members have on a number of occasions in this House heard my colleagues who are more knowledgeable in these programs than I, respond and indicate their impact in the creation of employment.

With respect to the specific individuals who may be temporarily out of work and in receipt of general welfare assistance in the member's community; no, I have not gone to them with a specific proposal for the creation of jobs for a restricted group of individuals.

I do think it is important to bear in mind that there are indications of higher levels of dependency or need of temporary welfare assistance in some communities, but this is not general across the province. I think I can still assure the member that the average length of time an employable person in this province is in receipt of general welfare assistance varies from season to season, but it rarely exceeds two and one half or three months at the most.

So it would appear that in spite of the fact there are periods of higher levels of dependency or of need, that it is not a chronic problem of an overwhelming majority of those persons. They may well be between employment opportunities, moving from one job to another and in need of some temporary assistance. There is no indication at this point that the employable persons who are there for a short term are in need of a major job creation program.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary, to the Minister of Government Services: In light of the answer given by the Minister of Community and Social Services, is this minister undertaking to move up the starting dates of any projects within the Niagara region to assist the construction industry and thereby assist all of business in the Niagara Peninsula, creating these new jobs that might alleviate the problem that exists there? Is he contemplating moving up the timetable on any projects in the Niagara region?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: I would have to look into that, Mr. Speaker. I'm afraid that during the first part of the question I was talking to my colleague to my right, but we will look into that.

FACILITIES FOR THE HANDICAPPED

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation concerning the rights of the handicapped as they relate to his ministry. What is the minister willing to do to guarantee that all community centres, art galleries, arenas and other buildings built with Wintario funds are made fully accessible to handicapped people?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the honourable member opposite knows, Wintario so far has done a great deal to build facilities which are very accessible to the handicapped—recreation centres, theatres and so forth.

Obviously there is a tremendous backlog in this, but we are working at it. As I at least hope and assume he knows, we do not require the matching funds when we finance through Wintario to build facilities for the handicapped. I really don't think we can move much faster than we're moving at the present time, but certainly we're committed.

The latest example of this is in the magnificent new Massey Hall that is under construction here in Toronto. We have notified the architects and the people who are leading the project that we are prepared to finance fully—we don't expect matching funds—the facilities that will make it possible for the handicapped to fully participate in that wonderful new centre.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Having no requirement for matching funds is welcome, and I didn't know that was in the policy. However, is the minister not aware that under regulation 5.2 of the Ontario Building Code Act, which regulates the types of structures which I mentioned as being built with Wintario funds, it does not require elevators to be installed in multi-story facilities? Will the minister not ensure that all new facilities are made fully accessible; will he not change his existing policy, which as I understand it does not provide for supplemental grants to groups which did not make provisions for full accessibility, whether they are already in the building stage or just in the planning stage? I have an example of a group of citizens in Douro township who now wish to make their building fully accessible and are being told that supplementary grants will not be made available to them.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I'll look into the specific cases referred to, but I simply want to reiterate our basic policy. That is we are determined to provide facilities for the handicapped to make accessibility to all of these buildings more possible. I will look into the specific case to which the member has referred. Our policy on the matter is quite clear.

PROTECTED ENVIRONMENTAL AREA

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. The question concerns the Oneida crushed stone owned by King Paving and Materials in the town of Haldimand, and the 47 acres that were set aside to protect the 22 rare species of plants and trees. According to an article in the Toronto Sun by Dr. Morton Shulman this is not being carried out. I wonder if the minister would care to comment. Are they protected, as agreed in the hearing before the Ontario Municipal Board?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I think I have some notes on that. I guess I left them in the office, the article was printed some time ago. I would have to say that Dr. Shulman was somewhat inaccurate in his article.

Unfortunately, I don't have the statistical details which would refute his statements with me.

However, I will be delighted to send the honourable member a letter indicating where Dr. Shulman was incorrect. I had debated about writing a letter to the editor and decided that it would be too lengthy. I had hoped somebody would ask me about it.

The 47 acres, as I recall, are fenced. They are fenced to keep people other than those who appreciate the trees, and so on, from damaging them.

The Oriskany sandstone deposit that contains the fossils Dr. Shulman is writing about covers only part of the area. That sandstone stands over hundreds of acres of the whole district, far outside the pit, and it's untouched in much of that surrounding area. He indicated that the dolostone is not available throughout the entire country.

Actually, it underlies most of southwestern Ontario but there are only a few locations where it is potentially accessible for mining purposes. Other factors preclude mining in other areas.

That 47 acre environmental protection area does include the oak hickory forest and the rare plants. Dr. Shulman said it did not. In fact, the area was enlarged on the recommendation of the consultant to King Paving to include a better representation of the forest. According to the consultant, the protected area is the best example of the forest and sandstone.

Dr. Shulman's article implied a contradiction. His first statement refers to an assessment of all pertinent matters, which the ministry does in considering a licence application in accordance with the provisions of the Pits and Quarries Control Act.

The second reference is to a prepared or published independent environmental study, which the ministry does not do and is not required under the Environmental Protection Act.

I have another page here, but I was trying to shorten it a bit.

I think those are the most important corrections to make. I'll send the rest of the material to the member.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired; right now.

PETITION

SPECIAL LICENCE FEE

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the good people of Deux-Rivieres in the northeastern part of the county of Renfrew, I beg leave to present a petition to the government of Ontario calling for an immediate end of the unfair discrimination against them in so far as the flexible northern licence fee is concerned; and asking the government of Ontario to give the people of the northern part of the county of Renfrew the due that was given to the people of Parry Sound, Muskoka and the far north some months ago; and asking for the immediate implementation of the special licence fee for the good people of Deux-Rivieres in the northeastern part of the great county of Renfrew.

REPORT

STANDING PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. T. P. Reid from the standing public accounts committee presented a final report and moved its adoption.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I just tabled the final report of the standing public accounts committee. I hope it might be included in that great raft of other reports that we might be able to debate in the new session.

The report itself is in a somewhat different format. I hope it will be of great interest to all citizens of Ontario, and particularly of course the government.

On motion by Mr. T. P. Reid the debate was adjourned.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTIONS

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the following substitutions be made on committees: Mr. Kennedy for Mr. G. E. Smith on the members' services committee; Mr. Kennedy for Mr. Handleman, Mr. M. N. Davison for Mr. Germa and Mr. Ziemba for Mr. Isaacs on the public accounts committee; Mr. J. Johnson (Wellington-Dufferin-Peel) for Mr. Yakubowski, Mr. Grande for Ms. Gigantes and Mr. Isaacs for Ms. Bryden on the resources development committee; Mr. Kerr for Mr. Ashe, Mr. Ramsay for Mr. Hennessy, Mr. Rowe for Mr. Hodgson, Mr. Sterling for Mr. Smith, Mr. M. Davidson (Cambridge) for Mr. Samis, Mr. Bounsall for Mr. Laughren and Mr. McClellan for Mr. Duksza on the general government committee; Mr. G. Taylor (Simcoe Centre) for Mr. Handleman on the select committee on company law and Mr. Kerrio for Mr. Nixon on the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs.

Motion agreed to.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON ONTARIO HYDRO AFFAIRS

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that Mr. Martel be substituted for Mr. Foulds on the select committee for Hydro affairs from January 23, but upon the receipt of a written application by Mr. Foulds to the Clerk of the House, Mr. Foulds will be substituted for Mr. Martel.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MUNICIPAL OMBUDSMAN ACT

Mr. Isaacs moved first reading of Bill 211, An Act to provide for an Ombudsman to investigate Administrative Decisions and Acts of Officials of Municipal Governments and Their Agencies.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to establish the office of municipal ombudsman.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 377, 396 and 401 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix A, page 5871.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Elgie moved second reading of Bill 209, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I made a statement yesterday on the bill; I don't have anything to add to that.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, we are certainly pleased that the minister and his reindeer have arrived on the rooftop in the nick of time with their seasonal bounty; I could even say in the St. Nick of time.

Mr. Laughren: His elves were there too.

Mr. S. Smith: His elves were there too indeed, I have no doubt.

Mr. Foulds: The biggest elves I have ever seen.

Mr. S. Smith: I am pleased this seasonal bounty has arrived at this particular period of time. I feel in general terms this bill is certainly worthy of our support. My concern, if I may express it, has for some time now been the subject of the ceilings which have applied with regard to workmen's compensation benefits.

You may remember, Mr. Speaker, that the previous Minister of Labour told this House there was a 25 per cent increase in the benefits the last time a bill of this kind was introduced. She said to this House that represented an 11 per cent increase for three years earlier, an eight per cent increase for two years earlier and a six per cent increase for the year in question. You will recall that very clearly, Mr. Speaker.

Pensioners across this province were led to believe, therefore, that they would receive a 25 per cent increase in their pension. One can imagine the dismay of many hundreds and many thousands of pensioners when they discovered that because they were already at the ceiling, that the ceiling had not been increased for the first two of those three years to which the bill applied, that they therefore did not receive a 25 cent increase but merely an increase for the current year, which amounted to six per cent and has now retroactively been increased to eight per cent.

Consequently, what happened was a deliberate change in the policy of the board and of the government whereby people who were already at the ceiling did not receive the increase, although this House was never clearly told those people would, unlike all other recipients, not be receiving the 25 per cent increase.

I was in constant discussion at the time with the minister—constant is too strong a word, but I was in discussion with her—I remember a discussion with her in the corridor at one time when I asked her whether all people would be receiving that percentage.

I was assured they would be. I had a very difficult time explaining to my constituents they were not getting the 25 per cent merely because they were at the ceiling.

Lest one think being at the ceiling is some kind of situation of great wealth, let me point out that the opposite is true. For a person earning $20,000, for instance, if the ceiling were $15,000, one would still take 75 per cent of that as the base. If the individual had a 30 per cent disability it didn't amount to very much in real terms in these difficult and inflationary times.

Basically what happened, in simple words, was that the former Minister of Labour came into this House, presented what purported to be a 25 per cent increase and it was not. It was not for those people who were at the ceiling, but we didn't discover that until later on. It was a very unfortunate time. The board had changed the policy without the House ever having had a chance to discuss it properly.

Now another increase is taking place and the question is are we going to increase those ceilings to a degree greater than the increase given to all other people so as to make up for the time the people at the ceiling were deprived of what was their rightful benefit?

Members will understand that the rate of benefit and the ceiling itself must bear some relationship to the going industrial wage. The relationship was a certain ratio before 1975, and there is a certain ratio introduced after the increases announced a year or two ago. The net result was that that ratio went down drastically. Now the problem is we have, little by little, to get that ratio back up where it belongs.

It is hard to know where it belongs. Obviously if the ratio and ceiling are too high, there may be introduced into the plan a positive disincentive to work. Nobody wants to see that, but until we see some evidence there is a ratio which is the correct ratio, then we have to believe the situation as it existed in 1975 was reasonable and a ratio that exists in certain other provinces is reasonable; and that is up somewhere around 150 per cent of the wage index that the ceiling would represent.

There are provinces where that is the case. If the minister has evidence that ratio is a positive disincentive to work then he should present that evidence. He will quote from the recent report, the Wyatt report, which says at 150 per cent you are being humane, but at 125 per cent you are being economic, roughly speaking.

It's all very well to speak of being economic versus humane, but we in the Legislature have to be a little of both, I would suggest. Therefore we ought to have an intelligent discussion at some point as to what that ratio should be. We should be presented with figures indicating the taxation situation in Ontario, which may be very different from that of other provinces. We have to be presented with figures indicating any of the various forces that are part of the interplay which determines at what point a benefit becomes a disincentive to work.

We are prepared to listen to that. We understand the need to have a work incentive. We also understand that the funds for paying these benefits come from the businesses of Ontario and we are very concerned about the charges made on business people, particularly the small businesses, as a consequence of that. So we're prepared to be fair, but we do insist on having some reasonable and rational explanation as to the adoption of a certain ratio between the ceiling in the Workmen's Compensation Board benefits and the industrial wage. It's not good enough to say that some report suggested it. What's the reasoning behind it? Show us the figures and then we'll have much more confidence.

This minister is now prepared, possibly as a result of a number of letters which I have written to him and certain communication as a consequence of these letters, to increase the ceilings more than the benefits themselves are being increased.

I welcome that. I welcome that as a sign of understanding on the part of the minister, a willingness to show a certain flexibility and good will, and possibly even as a response—and I believe it was a response—to the communications I have sent him from time to time. I am pleased with that.

The minister, however, will accept that we are certainly not yet back to the ratio that existed in 1975. I am prepared to accept this bill for now as far as it goes, and to thank the minister for what I perceive to be a response to our communication whereby he is at least addressing the question of ceilings, attempting to get the ceilings back up and admitting that those who are at the top, at the ceiling—and as I say, that's not a princely income let me assure you—will get more of an increase than those who are not at the ceiling; just as a few years ago they got less of an increase than those who were in the middle somewhere.

All I can say is they still haven't made up the deficit which is a consequence of that change in policy a year or so ago, but at least they've moved in that direction. After all, if a government in a minority situation makes a reasonable move in a direction which one has asked them to take, then it's reasonable for the opposition to accept and to support such a move, even to welcome it, while at the same time pointing out there's room for more movement which ought to occur.

If the minister feels that additional movement should not happen, I hope he will, perhaps by letter or whatever over the break, give me the factual basis upon which he made the decision not to move further in repairing the damage done to this ceiling by the previous Minister of Labour. I therefore ask that if he has figures to explain why $18,500 is appropriate as opposed to $19,500 or any other number, he share those figures with me. If he can't do so at this moment in the House in view of time, perhaps he would do so by letter on some other occasion.

Apart from that I think the minister is being quite reasonable in these benefits. I hope it's a consequence of communication he has received from me and other members on all sides. I hope part of his reasonable attitude reflects some of that relationship. In any event, I think his bill is a reasonable bill deserving of support. I just want to draw the attention of the Legislature to the question of ceilings, to welcome the fact that some move has been made to restore what was lost last time, to suggest that a greater move is still necessary and that we would be willing to look at any figures the minister might have to indicate why, in his view, moving to a greater ceiling at this time is still unwise.

So basically, Mr. Speaker, we think it's a good bill. We welcome it. We simply draw that particular matter to the minister's attention, and to the attention of members of the Legislature, so that we never again have what happened under the previous minister, a very important policy change without it being flagged for discussion in this House, or even for private discussion outside this House. I was very disappointed with the attitude of the previous minister. The present minister is certainly a welcome change in that regard.

Mr. M. Davidson: We in the New Democratic Party welcome the legislation that has been presented to us with regard to amending the Workmen's Compensation Act. I suggest that by opening up an amendment to the compensation act, one could probably stand here and discuss the whole act. I have no intention of doing that, let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, although some of my colleagues may during their discussion of this bill. As the minister is well aware, we too, in going over the bill, felt there were certain areas where we would like to place amendments. However, having spoken to the minister through our House leader we have been given certain assurances that our concerns will be looked after in any event, either through the presentation of the white paper or what comes out of it. If by next fall nothing has emerged from the white paper, certain sections will again be placed before this House in order to allow amendments particularly, I believe, involving temporary total disability.

We also welcome the fact that the minister has taken a step in bringing to the injured workers of this province some retroactivity to make up for the inequities that existed in the last adjustment made by the then minister. I can understand that happening because it is my personal belief this minister has much more compassion for the injured workers of the province than the previous minister ever indicated. I can well see why it would be that this minister would want to put in those increases that she neglected or failed to do.

We are a little concerned, however, about the timing of this bill and the timing of placing it before the Legislature. Had the minister walked in today dressed up in a Santa Claus suit with a bag over his shoulder, I can assure him we would have placed the amendments we had discussed with him. Given that he did not, and recognizing full well that the injured workers of this province are in vital need of these increases at this time, we did not in any way want to do anything that could very well cause the bill not to pass prior to the House adjourning.

For these reasons, we will withhold any amendments that may have caused that to happen. We do have one minor one which will be placed, with which I think the minister would agree. It is just a slight word change. As the bill was brought in at a time when the House was winding down, so to say, for the winter break, it really did not afford this House the opportunity to go fully into the situation as it exists. We are certainly not placing the blame on the minister per se, but we have faced this not only on this occasion with this bill, but on numerous other occasions.

I refer back to last fall when we were doing Bill 70 and a very similar situation existed. It appears that each and every time major legislation of this type comes before the House, it is brought in one or two days before the House adjourns. That really does not give the opposition, be it the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party, the opportunity to scrutinize fully the bill and place any amendments which we feel may be necessary at that time.

Having said that, as I said, we welcome the fact that the minister has brought this bill forward, knowing that the injured workers of this province have waited for quite some time. I might say if there is any credit—and I noted the leader of the official opposition attempted to take some credit for being partially responsible—it is only fair to suggest that one of the reasons this bill did come forward and one of the reasons it contained some of the increases it does, is because of the questions that have been raised in this Legislature by the members for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) and Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella) and various other members who have an interest in and concern about the injured workers of this province. They have on many occasions questioned the minister and the government as to when they would be bringing forward amendments to the pension section of the act. As a result of that, we now have the bill which is before us.

One of the things that also concerns us, as a party, is the ceiling level. I understand that will be referred to through the white paper and will be discussed and probably put into a new bill, if and when this white paper is ever looked at by the committee the minister is proposing to put forward. Hopefully, that will be done and legislation will be prepared and available as early as next fall or earlier than that, if possible.

I would like to go back. This party has always been concerned about the ceilings that exist. Back in April, 1978, I believe, the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), through a private member's bill, attempted to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act. While part of that amendment related to other matters, a part dealt with the ceiling levels. He attempted at that time to have placed in the act a mechanism whereby the ceiling levels would automatically be adjusted. I would like to read that amendment.

"The board shall, as soon as possible after September 1 in each year, review the wages and salaries earned by workers who suffered injury and to whom compensation was paid during the preceding year. Whenever such review indicates that 10 per cent or more of such workers were earning in excess of the maximum wage rate at the time of such review, the board shall, by order, increase such maximum wage rate for accidents occurring on and after the first day of the succeeding calendar year by the appropriate number of increments of $1,000 as is sufficient to reduce the number of workers whose salaries exceed the maximum wage rate below 10 per cent of the workers who suffered injury and to whom compensation was paid during the period under review."

That was the member for Nickel Belt's attempt to bring some sanity, if one wants to call it that, into the ceiling levels as they exist in the act. Unfortunately, as is true in most cases, his private member's bill with his amendment to the act was not accepted. Had it been, it could very well be that the ceiling in today's bill might not have been necessary because it could very well have been, following that method of adjustment, that the level at the present time might be in excess of $20,000.

I can't and we as a party can't understand, since the minister has taken the move to increase it over the 10 per cent, why he has not taken the final step and made that adjustment up the $20,000 level. Even at that, in Ontario that ceiling would be relatively low. He has now placed it at $18,500. We're prepared to accept that because we want to see this bill go through. Perhaps he could explain to us why he did not take that final step and go up to at least the $20,000-mark, such as exists in Saskatchewan and Quebec, I believe.

The other area of concern we have is that even though in this bill he has filled in the inequities that existed from the last bill and added 10 per cent on top, the temporary disability section still does not really fill the gap that was evident from 1975 to 1978. My understanding is an adjustment was made in 1975, but no adjustment was made for those people in 1978.

If this is an income maintenance measure, then that group of people is still behind what they should have had over that period of time. I don't know whether the minister has looked at that or whether he feels that 10 per cent is enough to cover that, but that was a concern of ours and one area where we were considering moving an amendment. As I said, we are more interested in getting this bill through because we do believe it is an excellent bill in terms of bringing to the injured workers of this province some immediate income that they have been deprived of for far too long. I would seriously hope in the future, after discussion on the white paper has taken place and possibly new legislation has emerged from that, we would never again have to find ourselves in the situation where every now and then we have to pressure the government through questions, letters and various other means, to bring forward the necessary adjustments in order that these injured workers in the province can maintain the cost of living which they, as well as everyone else, have to face day by day.

It's all well and good for those of us in the Legislature to adjust our own rates of salary on occasion in trying to keep up with the cost of living. I just question why it is we don't move as quickly to do the same thing for the injured workers who don't have the opportunity to do it for themselves.

We welcome the bill. As I say, we look upon it as being something the injured workers deserve and for which they have waited far too long. We're prepared to accept it. A number of my colleagues will be speaking on some very specific sections of the bill itself and to other areas, ways and means of which perhaps you could take note. We think these could make not only a better method of increasing the pensions and the levels of earnings to the injured workers, but also make the act and the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board itself more meaningful.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to Bill 209, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act. I suppose I'd have to follow the almost similar comments of the two previous speakers. Like other members, I will express my disappointment at the minister bringing in a bill of such importance at such a late date in the workings of this session, almost the day of adjournment of the Legislature. I feel he should have provided the members with more ample time to digest and to review the contents of an important bill like this.

We can agree with the amendments that are long overdue in bringing increases in benefits that apply under the Workmen's Compensation Act, particularly for those who are on the receiving end, the injured workers. But if I were to go through the bill I could find fault after fault.

I thought this minister had shown some compassion for the injured workers in Ontario, but after reviewing the bill and taking a little closer look at it in the short time made available to members, I find the minister has shown little compassion towards a number of the injured workers. One of the things that bothers me most in this bill is that the legislation only goes back to 1970. Nothing goes beyond that level for those persons who have been injured for some 15 or 20 years and are living on meagre pensions from the Workmen's Compensation Board.

We wouldn't have to be coming in at the last minute of the Legislature here for amendments to the bill if the minister would consider indexing the benefits to the injured workers.

By indexing I mean that we wouldn't have to have an amendment every year. It would be indexed as for any other employee in the province. I suggest the minister should be looking at this area.

When I look at section 1(1) of the act, the explanatory note says, "Under clause (a), the burial allowance is increased from $800 to $1,000." I'm sure that the minister and the board members of the Workmen's Compensation Board know full well that $1,000 isn't enough to cover the burial costs for an industrial worker who dies as a result of his work. I suggest the minister should be paralleling this section with the Canada Pension Plan so between the two of them there are sufficient funds to cover the burial costs.

I notice too that the minister's going to give a small pension increase to dependent widows. The more I look at it closely—$365 to $410 a month—the more I realize it will not even cover the payments on the purchase of a new home, if one considers the high interest rates and so on. The minister is giving them nothing there. If a widow has to carry on the mortgage payments on a home, I suggest it doesn't go far enough.

There are other areas our leader has mentioned. It was suggested by the previous member that the maximum should be raised to $20,000. I think that's an area that should be looked at. If we look at the $18,500 that's suggested in the bill, that represents about 130 per cent of the average annual wage. I suppose, if a person is injured and only gets 75 per cent of that—looking down and grasping for figures here—he's actually only getting 50 per cent of what he would be earning. I suggest these are the areas the minister and the board should be looking at.

Again, I would have to say, since there has been such short notice, there's another area that perhaps I should bring to the minister's attention. It's under section 3, which applies to section 41a of the act. It gives discretion to the board to increase temporary payments. Perhaps this section should be mandatory. I understand the minister has an amendment there. It now says: "Where the employee is not working and is in receipt of temporary disability benefits and has continuously received temporary disability benefits for the immediately preceding 12 months, the board may . . ."

I understand the minister may have an amendment there that would change it to "shall adjust the rate of compensation being paid by adding thereto an additional 10 per cent compensation rate being paid but the compensation rate so adjusted shall not exceed the maximum established by sections 39 and 44."

I don't know what adjustments will be made for those persons who were injured before 1978, whether there will be an increase or not. Perhaps the minister can give us an instance showing that these persons will be receiving additional benefits. If not, then I'm going to suggest to the minister that instead of those persons going on welfare—in many cases they have to if they've had an accident prior to 1978 or 1979—we should be looking to the consolidated revenue fund to assist those persons and if he can't generate the funds through the Workmen's Compensation Act. That relates the assessment to the industries.

I suggest these are the areas we should be looking at. I thought perhaps the Wyatt report would have suggested some of these so there would be additional funds for those persons injured 10, 15 or 20 years ago. Their salaries at that time would have been $95 to $150 a week. I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, when you're on a permanent partial disability which rates at 10 or 30 per cent, that's $80 a month. You can't survive on that. I'm sure the minister and the Workmen's Compensation Board know that many of these persons in this grey area will never be employed again in industry in Ontario. They have difficulties.

Although it is an increase of 10 per cent for those who've been injured in 1978 or 1979, and we welcome this, I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't go far enough. I would hope the minister had something for those injured workers in that grey area. This is the area that really needs assistance. With the inflation over the last number of years and the high cost of living, a pension of $80 a month, $150, $186—anything in that area, anything below $450 a month—just isn't sufficient for those persons who have had severe injuries in the last number of years.

I just wish there was time for a bill like this to go to a committee of the Legislature so we could go into it in more detail, but with the late hours of this Legislature we don't have time. It seems to be a normal practice of the Minister of Labour to bring in important bills such as this in the late hours of a session of Parliament. This should never be.

There were questions raised in the House last year by a number of persons on the opposition side, "When are you going to bring in an increase?" We thought it would be coming in July, but in the late hours of this session, what can one add to it? We have to go with what the minister and the board have suggested in the act, whether it is sufficient or not. It is not sufficient in certain areas and I suggest to the minister I am rather disappointed at this stage that there is not sufficient funding for those who were injured a number of years ago.

With those comments, as much as I regret it, I have to support the bill.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I too want to rise in support of Bill 209 and, in doing so, express a number of concerns raised already.

In summary, we do not like receiving the bill on such short notice. It makes it almost impossible for us adequately to assess even the content of the bill, let alone to have any kind of meaningful discussions with constituents affected by the provisions of the bill. To the minister, I hope this is the last time we are confronted with a couple of days of discussion. I appreciate the consultation process that took place, but still there is not enough time for opposition to do its job to assess a bill when we are given a couple of days in total with a deadline of prorogation hopefully today. There is not time even to assess what the minister has done here in the light of the Wyatt report, let alone consultations outside.

Surely the time has finally arrived—and I hope the white paper will provide the opportunity for us—to move away from these ad hoc political, with a small “p,” increases. It is totally inappropriate for the Legislature to be adjusting the rates of workmen’s compensation on the whim of either the minister or the cabinet or whatever. Surely we can devise an automatic indexing system that can be built into the legislation so injured workers will not have to suffer a deterioration of their purchasing power for some prolonged period of time until finally this Legislature gets around to redressing the injustice.

We will insist when the act is reviewed there be some automatic cost of living mechanism in the legislation and, second, some provision for an automatic increase in the earnings ceiling, perhaps along the lines of the amendment from my colleague from Nickel Belt, or if we can devise a better system, fine. But we will insist we end this process of ad hockery. The reason I want it in the bill is because it is inevitable that there are long delays between increases and injured workers are suffering, and suffering severely, from the loss of purchasing power during a period of high inflation. That inflation is going to continue into the indefinite future and it is now a matter of real urgency that we amend the legislation to provide for automatic increases.

There was a reference made earlier to Santa Claus and to Christmas gifts. Ho, ho, ho, yourself, Santa Claus in a blue suit. There are some problems with the minister’s Christmas gift. I will concede that for the majority of injured workers, either on permanent or on temporary benefits, these increases appear to restore lost purchasing power from the time of the last increase. That is the basis of our support: this bill does appear to restore adequately the loss of the value of the dollar as a result of inflation from the period of July 1978 to date.

It does not, however, adjust the base. Because of the way the base for many injured workers is calculated, on the basis of 75 per cent of gross to the earnings ceiling, it does not restore the inadequacy of the base. So when we get to looking at a revision of the act we will want to deal with that question. We have made suggestions in the past that it would be more equitable to move to a system of net income in order to protect low- and middle-income workers from what appears to be an unfair discrimination on the basis of the present legislation, so we hope the minister is receptive to moving away from the present computation of the base for pension awards and to a system that is more equitable, particularly for low-income workers.

There are categories of people who remain at a disadvantage even with these increases. Reference has already been made that the earnings ceiling is not adjusted retroactively so persons who are on pensions from a considerable period of time in the past never really have achieved the kind of catch-up that a worker who is injured more recently would have been able to achieve under the most recent changes to benefit levels. The minister just cannot pretend that we can perpetually ignore people who have been pensioned off in the 1960s or even in the 1950s when wages were considerably lower and prices were infinitely lower than they are today and therefore the earnings base was much lower, so people are living on grossly inadequate amounts of money and have remained ineligible for the increases.

There is another category of people not helped by these increases. People who have been on temporary total disability benefits continuously for more than 12 months are, in our understanding, not entitled to retroactivity beyond 12 months. I do not know how many people there are in the province who have been on temporary total disability for more than a year; it is probably a relatively small group. But from discussions with my colleagues I am aware of cases of people who have been injured, in some instances four or five years ago. Their physical condition, their medical condition has not yet stabilized; they are still undergoing operations at regular intervals because of the seriousness of their injuries and yet they are not entitled to an adjustment.

One of the real disappointments I have with the time pressure is that we do not have a chance to try to deal with that continued inequity. And it is an inequity. Perhaps the minister can ask his staff if it can come up with the determination as to how many temporary total disability claimants we are talking about who have been in continuous receipt of temporary total disability benefits for more than 12 months and see whether there is a way of including them in the increase. Their living costs are just as real as yours and mine, Mr. Speaker, and the erosion of their purchasing power is infinitely worse than anything we will ever experience in our lives. Surely they are entitled to a full adjustment.

The reason I am stressing this is because in the past this group has been excluded entirely from the increase. They have never had the catch-up other groups have had. They remain outside the provisions of the catch-up in this bill today.

Moving to another point, we have in the past expressed in the strongest possible terms our anger and dismay at the level of benefits provided to widows and dependent children. We are pleased that the minister has chosen to raise, once again, the rates for dependent widows and dependent children, but I want to point out something to him. The entitlement of a widow with two children under 16, under the new rates, the rates effective July 1, 1979, would be by my calculation an annual income of $7,708. I remind the minister that the poverty line in a city the size of Toronto as of June 1978 for a family of three persons—and this is the Statistics Canada revised poverty line which is the lowest of all poverty lines used in this country—is $8,977, or almost $9,000 a year.

I am fully aware that some families in this group we are talking about, widows and dependent children, would be covered by Canada Pension benefits. I am also aware that others are not. One of the problems we have in dealing with the Workmen's Compensation Board is the total inadequacy of their statistical data base. Even the minister's own advisory council on occupational health and safety has talked about the lack of an adequate data base. We do not know how many widows and dependent children on workmen's compensation are also in receipt of Canada Pension Plan benefits, or how many are trying to live at a subpoverty level on workmen's compensation benefits alone. I suspect there are still a fair number of widows and dependent children on workmen's compensation who are not eligible for Canada Pension Plan, who are not eligible for family benefits allowance and will be still living below the poverty line, despite the increases being brought before us again today.

That is something we are going to have to look at and try to adjust when we get the opportunity to have the whole bill in front of us and have some hearings in the appropriate forum here in the Legislature. We cannot, we simply cannot permit the families of workers who are killed as a result of a work accident to live at a level below the poverty line. I am anxious to hear the minister provide us with the statistical material, which we still do not have, and to tell us how many widows and dependent children, how many members of families of workers who have been killed on the job are still without Canada Pension Plan coverage and are still living below the poverty line. I want that figure as quickly as he can persuade the Workmen's Compensation Board to get it to him and I know how long that takes.

The minister has prepared a white paper on the Workmen's Compensation Board. It is entitled, Current Concerns. I am still thinking seriously of introducing an omnibus concern bill for the benefit of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would that affect this bill?

Mr. McClellan: Yes, it would. It would require the Minister of Labour to stop using the word "concern." I want to just point out that he uses the word "concern" 12 times in the first page and eight times on the second page. He uses the word "concern" 41 times during the white paper.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think there is anything out of order.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It is not my white paper, Mr. Speaker. It is the paper prepared and presented to me by the board and I was in receipt of it at the same time as the member. That is a point of privilege.

Mr. McClellan: He uses the word "they," the nameless authors, who obviously have read into the mind of the Minister of Labour his predilection for this most overworked word, 42 times. They use the word 42 times in the course of the document. They use it as a noun, they use it as a verb, they use it as an adjective, they use it as a preposition. Please, I'll buy the minister a thesaurus for Christmas.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Promises, promises.

Mr. McClellan: I'll keep this promise.

I don't want to deal with the white paper at this point, but I want to conclude by coming back to a fundamental point this party has made continually over the last decade and that is, we cannot tinker with the Workmen's Compensation Act and achieve justice for injured workers.

Mr. Kerrio: Tinkers are in the six per cent bracket.

Mr. McClellan: We are going to have to bite the bullet and bring in fundamental reforms which will see the replacement of this act and a number of other social security programs with a small number of comprehensive income-maintenance measures. We will continue to push for the introduction of universal accident and illness insurance.

I've had the advantage of seeing a copy of a social security paper prepared by a federal-provincial income security task force which has detailed and documented the tremendous number of income-security programs across this country. There are in excess of 80 separate income-maintenance programs in this country. They are contradictory; they are overlapping one another. All of us who run constituency offices as MPPs know that citizens are totally incapable of understanding the hotchpotch of income security programs that we have in this country.

Secondly, we know as MPPs that even when taken together, all of these 80 separate programs—some 17 or 18 of which affect residents of Ontario—are still incapable of providing dependent people with an income which is above the poverty line. That is because of their fragmentation and their lack of rationality or coherence. We all know we have the impossible job of talking to the family of an injured worker and trying to put together an income package from any of seven or eight different programs.

It's bad enough having to deal with the bureaucracy of the Workmen's Compensation Board as it tries to determine fault, blame and whether or not an individual worker is entitled to payment, regardless of the fact that he's obviously disabled. The issue there isn't disability, the issue is the cause of disability and the relationship of the cause of disability to his pension level. So we have to deal with that. We have to deal with the Canada Pension Plan. If he's elderly, we have to deal with any of the four public social-security programs for elderly people. We have to deal with family benefits and all its myriad bureaucracies. We have to deal with general welfare assistance. We have to deal with the various tax credit programs, the property tax rebate and the sales tax credit program. It's a morass of red tape and bureaucracy that tangles up the average citizen. He has to have a crash course in government red tape in order to try to even discover the existence of the programs, let alone understand how to wend his way through the various bureaucracies to acquire the services to which you ought to be entitled as a citizen as a matter of right.

Why do we in this country insist in putting people through such a rat's maze of irrational bureaucracy? That's exactly what we do. An injured worker who comes to my office comes there because the services and the programs are utterly incomprehensible. After four years I think I understand a little bit about how the bureaucracy works, but I know I haven't achieved my doctorate yet in Workmen's Compensation Board bureaucracy, let alone my doctorate in all of the other 17 or 18 programs. When we talk about universal accident and illness insurance, we're trying to talk about bringing elements of social justice and equity into the social-security arena and, equally, a measure of simple rationality and coherence.

The thing that was distressing about the federal-provincial income security task force was that it identified the problem fine—that there are 80 discombobulated programs driving everybody nuts and being at the same time totally inadequate—but it couldn't come up with a solution. Their solution was a royal commission and, in the meantime, a few slipshod administrative niceties. On page two of the white paper I see basically the same approach, a kind of the throwing-up of the hands in despair. In the section called A Social Umbrella, the minister seems to reject the notion of universal accident and illness insurance in favour of trying to tinker with the existing machinery.

I say again that tinkering isn't going to solve anything. It's not going to solve the fact that we have a Workmen's Compensation Act which covers benefits to disabled people; we have a Family Benefits Act which covers benefits to disabled people; we have a Canada Pension Plan which covers benefits to disabled people; we have a General Welfare Assistance Act which covers benefits to disabled people; we have disabled people on old-age security guaranteed annual income supplements; we have disabled people receiving tax credits; et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

Nowhere in this proposal is there the kind of creative breakthrough that can give us the leadership to get out of this morass. We in Canada remain with one of the most archaic and obsolete and Rube Goldberg-esque social security systems in the western industrial world.

Mr. Kerrio: What is this about social security? I thought we were talking about the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Mr. McClellan: For the benefit of the member for Niagara Falls, the Workmen's Compensation Act is part of our social security system and we are dealing with amendments to all sections. If he's incapable of understanding that, as most of his colleagues have always been incapable of understanding issues with relation to the Workmen's Compensation Act, that remains his problem. I think the minister understands clearly what I'm talking about.

When we get to the point of looking at the white paper we expect more than what is in it. We expect more than tinkering; we expect more than discussion of net income as opposed to gross income or flat-rate benefits as opposed to occupational benefits. We want the leadership that can lead this province and this country out of the morass it is in with respect to income-replacement programs, especially for disabled workers and injured workers. Perhaps it is an ominous portent that the white paper is actually grey. The cover is grey; kind of a pukey blue-grey, I may say.

I think the minister should take this as the basis of his approach, but rework it and come back to us with a much more adequate document and a much more adequate set of proposals for the next legislative go-round. We're not content with tinkering; we're not content to stand here once a year and deal with marginal improvements in the Workmen's Compensation Act. We want fundamental reform that will protect the right of working Canadians to a decent income in the case of accident or disability and to adequate rehabilitation services to get them back on the job as quickly and as productively as possible. The present act fails to do this.

The proposals in the white paper, I say, are so inadequate to achieve that objective they need to be reworked. We look forward to the attempt in the appropriate legislative forum to hold hearings and to deal with legislation that will once and for all reform measures for injured workers in this province.

Finally and very briefly, I would like to congratulate the minister if I may, for the bill that's here. I do so, not because I think that anybody representing injured workers has to express gratitude on the basis of charity, but because I think injured workers in this province have an absolute right to a decent standard of living.

I congratulate the minister for getting this through his cabinet. It is substantially different from previous amendments we have had because, as I said at the beginning, it restores fully the loss of purchasing power. That makes it different from previous amendments, which did not do that. I hope it is a precedent and that the government members will understand it as a precedent. If we haven't moved to an automatic system when we move the statute, at the very least we restore every single nickel and every cent of lost purchasing power. This bill appears to have done that and for that we congratulate the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Hon. Mr. Wells moves that the House continue to sit through the luncheon interval from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m. to continue the debate on this bill.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, the last time we debated an increase to the pensioners and injured workers I stood in my place and concurred wholeheartedly with the government's position. I'm sorry to say that in that particular instance one of my socialist friends to my left took about the cheapest shot you can take at a fellow legislator when he suggested that I was against giving increases to widows or injured workers.

I went on the record at that time and stood on a point of personal privilege and explained—and I shall say it again—that I concur wholeheartedly with the government's position in increasing the moneys paid to injured workers and pensioners. I don't make that particular point lightly, simply because talk is cheap and the people to my left prove that day after day.

The reason I use that particular description of them is because I want to bring into focus something that is very seldom talked about in this Legislature. It is the fact that while we debate what is fair in regard to paying people on pension and injured workers, very little is said—nothing at all by those members over there and very little from other members in the assembly—about who picks up the bill. I say to the minister it's time his government addressed itself to that very significant aspect of workmen's compensation.

I say again, I want to pay the injured worker what's fair. I also wonder why we don't pay someone who sustains injury on the way to work. It would then be impossible for the government to assess that payment to some small company that has five or six people on its payroll. I suggest it's about time that an injured worker is paid whether he is hurt on the way to the job or on the way home from the job. In that case, the minister would have to decide on a completely different method of payment.

I say to the minister that the way the workmen's compensation is paid for now is an unfair payroll tax to some people who have a very high labour ratio. I think it's grossly unfair. If we are going to encourage small companies to hire more people and we are going to put an unfair and regressive tax on their payroll, how could they possibly take on other people when this keeps going up and up and the minister doesn't do anything about bringing any other kind of funding into the picture? It seems particularly unfair when the government is prepared to make money available through the Ministry of Industry and Tourism to General Motors, to Ford, to some of the large corporations which probably have very small payrolls in proportion to many small businesses. In substance, what the government is doing is increasing a very disproportionate payroll tax to labour-intensive small people.

I say to the minister I concur wholeheartedly with what he's doing. I did in the past and take exception to some people who say anything different about my position in this matter. With respect, it's just about time that the government that sits over there and talks about free enterprise practised what it preaches and brought into place something for injured workers that is more fair and equitable to the people paying for it and extend it to those people who might be hurt in places other than the work place. If he does that he would then be obliged to put money in from the general revenue funds. He knows that and I know that.

Isn't it time we assessed the whole picture of workmen's compensation and what is generally accepted as the common law of the land to place responsibility where it belongs and payment, in turn, to those people who avail themselves of workmen's compensation payments? It's time to take another look at that aspect. It's never debated, it's never discussed. The government just passes the bill on to a third party which can do very little about it.

It's time the government took a very good look at that aspect of it and we stopped putting a regressive tax on payroll that is hurting the fundamental people who make this nation go, the people who hire 60 to 65 per cent of the work force. Those people are hurting and it's time those people who stand in their place and talk about a grandiose scheme of social benefits rather than injury benefits should be prepared to take the money from the source it should come from.

I hope the minister will look at that aspect of it in the future, that injured workers and pensioners will be paid fairly, but that he'll also take a good hard look at some other method of funding those aspects that fall into the social rather than what I consider the fundamental responsibility of the person who does the hiring.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be very short on this bill. I can't escape though I think the previous speaker invited it. Regressive taxes, the assessments for WCB? I suppose it could be, but there's certainly a private-enterprise incentive to improve safety and working conditions in it as well. Besides, I've always sort of liked the theory that them what has pays. I just reject the regressive tax argument.

I see this bill, and I think my colleagues see this bill, basically as income maintenance and on that basis have no hesitation in supporting it. It's a good move. I applaud it. I want the minister to recognize that when positive amendments are put forward there isn't a negative reaction from this side of the House and they will be supported. It's on the basis that it's dealing basically with an income maintenance situation that I have no hesitation in supporting it.

I don't intend to go into the shortcomings. My colleagues have dealt with and probably will deal with a few that concern us. I want the minister to know that the white or grey paper or whatever it may be that's been presented to us I accept as being presented in good faith and we look forward to the discussion on that paper that will take place. There are, I think, a number of serious inadequacies in the whole workmen's compensation program in Ontario. Some of them have been well documented. Some of the problems and arguments have been raised over a long period of time. We want to see them dealt with. We hope that the white paper will be that opportunity and for that reason look forward to taking part in the discussions around that particular paper. In the meantime, we accept the income-maintenance proposals presented today as being good ones. Whether people would have liked to have seen more or not, we recognize that they are not trying to resolve all of the difficulties of the past or all of the inadequacy we may feel is there, but they are positive measures. We do accept them, as we accept in good faith the white paper that is being presented to this House.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Speaker, I am going to be relatively brief and just cope with the spirit of this bill and not get into a long discussion, or précis the quality of this bill. I guess what the Minister of Labour is doing is to provide rights for workers who are injured as a result of accidents which have occurred at the work place.

The member for Bellwoods gave quite an extensive illustration about the concern of this party and of individual members who through the years on the floor of this Legislature, in particular since 1975, have been raising questions in relation to problems related to the Workmen's Compensation Board, its act and the injured workers of this province. We had such opportunities in the past and it seems that from time to time we are dealing with some of the concerns which, of course, are not solving the concrete and the real problems injured workers of this province face.

With this spirit, Mr. Speaker, I am trying to give you my contribution to express my personal concern and my party's concern in relation to the whole area of compensation for injuries in the province. My colleague, the member for Bellwoods, raised the particular issue of the white paper in which the Workmen's Compensation Board expresses concern about problems. About the tenure and the tone of this word, concern, it seems my colleague read my mind, as it were, because I was trying to give an extensive elaboration about his concern. Our real concern was that the Workmen's Compensation Board and the government through the Minister of Labour, enact particular legislation to solve the problems of injured workers in this province.

I have to tell you I am not pleased about this situation, Mr. Speaker. This party is not pleased, because we are looking to long-range activities and the changes which are supposed to take place in this province. We are looking forward for concrete changes, because the changes in this bill are not totally relieving the financial pain of injured workers as a result of injuries which, occurred in the work place. We are looking for concrete terms which are going to solve, once and for all, the problems of the Workmen's Compensation Board which is affecting the social and economic environment of injured workers in this province.

I will be pleased when this government, the Minister of Labour, in co-operation with the Workmen's Compensation Board, enacts clear legislation which is going to phase out the present bureaucratic structure of the Workmen's Compensation Board and deals with a universal insurance scheme which is going to ensure the right to benefits to injured workers in Ontario who have been affected by serious injuries related to the work place.

Again, to go back to the principle of concern, of course the Workmen's Compensation Board has been concerned in the past, and even recently, with decreasing their assessment of employers' premiums across the province. I do not think the Workmen's Compensation Board or this government showed clear leadership or a clear indication that the problems are going to be solved. I would like to give you a synopsis of what has happened in this particular issue, Mr. Speaker. I am talking about the concern which the Workmen's Compensation Board expressed to employers of Ontario about making contributions to the Workmen's Compensation Board. The increase in assessment rate per $100 of payroll in 1977 was nil and in 1978 it was increased by 3.7 per cent. But in 1979, there was a reduction of 9.6 per cent and for 1980 there will be an extra reduction of 8.4 per cent.

This is something which worries me. We are talking about the whole issue of ensuring a just level of compensation for injured workers so that they will not be forced to live at the poverty level, and here we are faced with a position taken by the board and blessed by this government to make reductions in the assessment rate per $100 of payroll, the figures of which I have emphasized.

Of course, I am not happy about this trend because it is taking away money from injured workers so the possibilities of giving extra benefit increases or changes to the Workmen's Compensation Board procedure are becoming slim. This leads me to believe that no concrete action will be forthcoming, even though I must state I am looking forward to these changes before I make my final analysis on the direction taken by the board, by the Minister of Labour and by this government.

So it is with hesitation, Mr. Speaker, that I support this bill. I have to support this bill, of course, because injured workers across the province are looking forward to these increases. I understand that the increases are in line with the cost of living increase. Again I want to express some positive remarks in relation to that to the Minister of Labour, in that, at least we are not faced with a bill over which we have to fight for adequate increases in relation to the increase in the cost of living.

I want to point out, in relation to that, that if the Minister of Labour and the government introduce an amendment that incorporates a permanent formula of annual increases we will have solved a problem which has been affecting injured workers through the years. Frankly, I am getting frustrated and other members of my party—and even members belonging to other parties—are tired of having to raise, persistently and consistently, issues related to injured workers and their level of compensation.

[1:15]

In the past, and recently again, we have talked about incorporating this particular formula into the Workmen's Compensation Act. At least the minister would not have the pressure of injured workers across the province crying all the time about the level of compensation. At least there would be something in the act which the Workmen's Compensation Board just had to follow. The minister would not even have the pressures coming from different parties voicing the concerns of injured workers across Ontario. I hope he is going to do that.

I also have something to say about these increases. I hope the Workmen's Compensation Board is going to implement those increases. The reason I am not enthusiastically supportive of these measures is that the way the Workmen's Compensation Board assesses the level of permanent disabilities on behalf of injured workers is completely unfair. The numbers I have seen may look attractive but when an injured worker is called by the Workmen's Compensation Board for the assessment of his disability, the board has the full discretion, as a result of the means chart—and I want to refer to it in that way—to assess a low level of pension to that injured worker. We are also aware that the level of pensions is related to the amount of money the injured worker was making before the accident took place. Unless the Minister of Labour wants to introduce amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Act to restructure the level of compensation for permanent disability, I think we have not really changed the approach to the concrete problem which is affecting injured workers across Ontario.

The white paper is going to be discussed in the months to come. I would like to hear a statement from the Minister of Labour which in some way will finalize the work of this white paper so we will not be in suspense, maybe that in two or three years the Minister of Labour will gather the responses to the white paper. I would like to hear that there will be clear guidelines to complete this type of work. I would like to hear the Minister of Labour make statements to ensure at least that concrete changes are going to be made to the Workmen's Compensation Act without any delay. I think the whole process is overdue. I think we should be interested in the financial hardships of injured workers across the province.

Again, I have to convey to the Minister of Labour my frustration that when injured workers demonstrate in front of Queen's Park or in front of the Minister of Labour's office or even at the board's office there is a new attitude that, instead of taking into consideration their demands, injured workers have been arrested and are faced with criminal charges and have to appear before the courts. It is a pitiful, really pitiful process and I am upset about the whole affair.

I have seen injured workers come into my office. They had been going to the board requesting their cheques and so on. They didn't want to leave because they wanted to talk to the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board for some reason. I can understand this reason. Maybe the chairman was not in his office and the injured worker was waiting to get a clear answer about his particular problem. The board in several cases decided to call the police and the workers were charged with trespassing. I think that is cruel. It is unfair. There is an urgency to deal with the whole aspect of the Workmen's Compensation Board structure and procedure in order that the demands of injured workers are going to be met in some way. They are not supposed to live in this province as second-class citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this Legislature and the citizens in Ontario have to pay a tribute to the injured workers of this province. They have been making their own contribution by working hard, especially on the construction side. Some of them have died as a result of serious injuries. Some of them remain with total and permanent disability as the result of their accidents. They gave their best contribution to make sure that the economic growth of this province would take place. Since 1914 I think that this government and the Workmen's Compensation Board haven't shown a clear indication that the human suffering, as the result of accidents sustained at work, has been taken into consideration.

From time to time we have been faced with little changes. I understand that the ceiling has been increased. It sounds quite attractive. From $16,200 there has been an increase to $17,820.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It's $18,500.

Mr. Lupusella: How much, $18,500? It sounds quite attractive a figure, but how many injured workers are affected by this ceiling? The reason I'm raising this question is that it eventually might solve the problem of the injured workers afflicted with new injuries, but what about workers who were injured in the past when the ceiling was really low? What are we doing to solve this particular problem? The ceiling was low, the percentage of disability was again related to their earning capacity before the accident took place and as a result of that the pension was low as well.

We are dealing with the vast majority of injured workers affected by this particular problem who have been forced to collect unemployment insurance and to collect the money from taxpayers while they have been the victims of injuries in the work place. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Minister of Labour that I think taxpayers of this province have been subsidizing employers; they have been subsidizing the Workmen's Compensation Board when injured workers have been forced to collect family benefits, or they've been forced to collect their Canada pension.

The anachronistic part of the whole affair is that those who are collecting Canada pensions—I'm sure that the Minister of Labour is very well aware of this—that workers in general applying for CPP disability pension are supposed to be declared totally disabled; their disability must be permanent. The anachronistic part is that many injured workers have a 15 or 20 per cent disability, therefore they are not considered by the Workmen's Compensation Board to be totally disabled. They are faced with another bureaucratic process in Ottawa, just because of the degree of their disability. A lot of injured workers are unable to collect disability pensions from the federal government because there is no clear indication that they are totally disabled. It is something about which I am particularly concerned.

I am also concerned about those who have been injured for a certain period of time, who didn't have the opportunity to make contributions to their Canada Pension Plan schemes. A vast majority of injured workers couldn't make their contributions. They are just supposed to get the peanuts of pensions which come from the Workmen's Compensation Board, thus they've been forced to collect family benefits as well.

There is an open scenario for the Minister of Labour, which should be viewed. I don't want to prolong my discussion. I guess we have processed this bill just for the sake of injured workers, even though we are unhappy about the whole structure of the Workmen's Compensation Board. I hope the Minister of Labour will make an addendum to the discussion paper of the Workmen's Compensation Board to consider seriously and effectively the universal insurance plan in effect in New Zealand. The former Minister of Labour told us she was looking into it, that she was studying the whole process, but she didn't want to commit this government to any particular change in that direction.

I think the present Minister of Labour, if he is really concerned about economic and social problems which injured workers face in Ontario, should give serious thought to that, in order that some day we will have a universal insurance scheme in the province which will protect workers 24 hours a day. At the moment, we are also faced with the problem that in going to work the workers may be injured outside of the employer's property. Long investigations are taking place at the board level to find out where the worker was injured.

I think the universal insurance scheme, beside considering the right level of compensation and benefits, also considers the time when a worker leaves his house to go to work. If something happens and his earning capacity is completely nil, he has to be compensated.

Mr. Speaker, to the Solicitor General—to the Minister of Labour—

Mr. Bounsall: You're accurately predicting where he's going to be shuffled to.

Mr. Lupusella: I hope not, because again, we're going to talk about concern for the police forces and concern for injured workers. It seems this government is using the general tone of being concerned about everything. I hope some day this word will have a low profile in this Legislature.

Again, I want to terminate my speech. I hope the Minister of Labour will move with high speed towards the completion of this important work on behalf of injured workers. I would like to hear from the minister when the discussion paper will be finalized. I also hope he will give us an assurance about the time when he's planning to introduce concrete—and I want to emphasize the word "concrete"—changes in the Workmen's Compensation Board Act.

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, I want to be mercilessly succinct this afternoon. I support the bill. I'm unhappy about it, but I do support it. In the sense of the spirit of Christmas and all of that stuff, I suppose we really should be grateful for what the minister is proposing in this kind of legislation. Further than that, we should be grateful that he appears, finally, to be moving to some substantive review of the way we compensate injured workers.

It's appropriate that many of us are going to be succinct this afternoon because it is near the end of the session and we're dealing with this particular kind of bill which, in effect, for many of the people I represent is the way it happens. An industrial accident takes only a very small portion of one's life initially; it is something that happens in less than a second which changes completely the course of the remainder of the life of that human being. I'm sad in relating to the House, as many people here could, I'm sure, that many of my friends are people who have fallen victims to industrial accidents, most of which fit into that category.

One very quick incident occurs in a place of work, which means for the rest of their lives they cannot walk. The operation of their arms and their legs is changed substantially; a great many other ailments might result. For a growing number of people we're beginning to be just a little more aware that sometimes it isn't really the accident that causes that kind of change in their life pattern, but something that occurs over a longer period of time. We are beginning to understand just a little bit about that.

What does need to be said about this particular piece of legislation and the companion white paper is that I want to encourage the minister as much as I can to give serious consideration to some other approach to the problem. I do not understand how we got ourselves into this mess with the Workmen's Compensation Board. I do not particularly put blame on the individuals who work at the board. In fact, I have some sympathy for them and some high regard for the chairman of the compensation board; he happens to be a constituent of mine and a very nice guy, but I think he is trying to do an impossible task, one that cannot be done.

For the life of me, I cannot fathom how we expect injured workers in this province to be doctors, lawyers, orators and debaters. That's an unrealistic expectation. I note with regret that in the discussion paper the minister offers as a major concern the element that has been raised by a couple of other members here, that somehow we really can't afford in this society to offer to an injured worker some decent form of compensation. I find that a repulsive notion. It is a concept which says that this society of all the societies in the world can't deal with that problem quickly, efficiently and effectively and is sick.

Surely that has to be a priority item. Surely governments, such as we have all across this nation, which can afford to spend millions of dollars on receptions, information programs, printing buttons and literature, can afford to treat injured workers with some respect, dignity and efficiency and provide a level of compensation which allows them to lead what we might categorize as normal lives and which allows them to continue a lifestyle that is satisfactory to them and a pattern for the people around them, their families in particular, and which doesn't alter dramatically because of some incident which occurred in a place of work. It strikes me that that should not be an unreal expectation in our society.

I do support this legislation. I recognize—as other members have done in some detail—that there are many faults and philosophically there are certainly some problems in it for me. I do recognize that the minister is paying at least lip service now to some things which have been seriously wrong with the compensation board for a long period of time. It strikes me that if this is the best I can get at this moment in history I will take it gladly, not for me but for those who are suffering under this program.

I do want to put it on the record because this is something that in my constituency office alone involves something like 4,000 case files a year.

That is ridiculous. That means about 60 per cent of our casework file is devoted to things having to do with the compensation board. My personal measure of whether a government program works or doesn't work is how deeply I am involved in it. I think there might be one or two things out there for which people do not complain to their member and seek the member's assistance.

Certainly, the minister could ease the case load immensely in constituency offices around the province if he made substantive changes to that concept called the Workmen's Compensation Board. It is ludicrous that the members of this House and the people who work in our constituency offices have to expend so much time and effort and money to make this thing work. In my view, in the final analysis, it doesn't work because it can't work. The concept is flawed, faulty and more than just imperfect.

I welcome the changes the minister proposes in this bill. I urge him to give extremely serious consideration to altering the entire concept he has in place with the Workmen's Compensation Board. I tell him now and give him notice—though I might be brief today—I am not going to be satisfied with tinkering about the process, or the board, or a new chairman, or new office space, or a new filing system or regular adjustments to the payment schemes. I want a substantive change and more and more people in my riding from both sides of the bargaining table want a substantive change. We want something that works, that is efficient and that is fair.

I don't want to be back here in another six or eight months time looking at a tinkering with the compensation board. I want a substantive change. The people I represent demand that. I think from each side of a bargaining table you may get an entirely different perspective on the problems, but I think you'll get clear recognition that the system that has been set up doesn't work. It isn't fair to anybody. In particular, as always the one who is expected to bear the brunt of the unfairness is the worker and that's wrong.

Mr. Speaker, to finalize: I welcome that the minister at least recognized an extremely serious problem. I want to caution him to go forward in his examination of alternatives in a clear and concise way that people will understand and to make sure that we do not wind up with another government report which does not change anything anywhere for anybody. That's a useless and stupid exercise and if that's what he's proposing, cut it out now.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I may just say that having been the critic of the Workmen's Compensation Board for our party for six of the last eight years in the House, I am quite used to having bills brought in at half past the eleventh hour such as in the spring session, when one was introduced to be debated in the last day or two of the month of June. Here one has come in that we are debating for the first time on the last or the second last day of this session in December.

I believe it is rather unfair to the members of the House that workmen's compensation amendments should always be introduced in this way where the members are continually under some sort of pressure to make their remarks short—which could be useful—to get it debated and have as few speakers as possible and to get to heck out of here, be it in June or December. I don't know why the government continues to do this. It may be that it's simply such a low-priority item in their considerations that it comes as an afterthought. This occurs virtually every time. There's nothing to prove otherwise.

I wouldn't mind having an explanation from the minister, although he is only responsible for one of these situations, the very late introduction of the bill in this particular session. It is certainly a pattern. It may be he has inquired of the Workmen's Compensation Board or his staff, though this is always the pattern whenever there have been changes.

Mr. Speaker, I stand to say I do support this bill, because for some workers in Ontario it does and will represent a fairly major immediate increase for them. For their sakes, we will certainly not oppose the bill. We will support it for those who are receiving it. Neither, unfortunately, will we make any meaningful amendments to this bill. There are two areas in which there should be amendments which it should be reasonable for every member of this House to support.

We have some sort of an indication, although not in flat terms, from the minister and the government House leader that should there be substantive amendments increasing expenditures above the amounts in this bill, third reading might not take place. It has not been that flat but this is certainly the clear vibe received by those in our caucus now formally concerned with carrying through this bill. For those workers who would receive benefits, we will not take that chance, but I'm going to indicate clearly, as has probably been done by other members in the debate, two areas where this bill is deficient, two areas in which amendments affecting the numbers and the payments in this bill should be made.

Of course, one area is section 3 of the bill, which deals with the adjustments to the amounts receivable under the category of temporary disability payments. I don't know how many other speakers have addressed this point, but I'm simply going to outline the situation for the minister.

Back in 1975, the first time ever, the Legislature made an adjustment to the temporary disability amounts. As this minister well knows, for the first time back-dating for temporary disability payments and for pensions was recognized. It went back to 1949, I believe, and the total amount that anyone could receive as a pension adjustment or a total disability adjustment was 60 per cent. The cost of living over that entire period went up 180 per cent, so the total change back then was one third of what it should have been.

We do not have the proper base on which to make those percentage adjustments now, nor have we ever had since that bill because we did not make it adequate at the time. We had one bill in 1978 for the pensions covered by section 42 of the act, which made adjustments in the pensions in accordance with the cost of living. We did not make it in the final year that was affected by that bill, and so the minister has updated section 4 of this bill dealing with section 42 of the act to make those adjustments according to the cost-of-living changes which have occurred since then. They are derived from an improper base, but at least that has been done with respect to those people receiving pensions.

Nothing, however, has been done between 1975 and now for those on total temporary disability or temporary disability payments, except for this one amendment in section 3 here today which adds only 10 per cent. It does not make any attempt whatsoever to put in the true figure which would deal with the cost-of-living changes which have occurred since 1975. This minister speaks about income maintenance. He has not achieved it whatsoever in section 3 of this bill. He has added 10 per cent rather than the true amount. That true amount, if one follows what was done for the pension and to cover the period from July 1975 to now, would amount to a 42 per cent adjustment, not a 10 per cent adjustment.

This bill is seriously deficient in that regard. For anybody on the board or in the ministry, or for this minister to say this bill makes any attempt at all to provide income maintenance would be patently false. That's the amendment which should be placed. This minister had better not say he has introduced the principle of income maintenance in this bill whatsoever. He has patently refused to do so. And he stands condemned for not doing so.

The minister can say, and how appropriately, "I have put out a grey paper for discussion"—it is a grey paper—and, probably the conclusions and the way in which they'll find themselves into the Legislature, as a result of whatever discussion this minister is going to entertain, will be in the same vein as the colour of the cover. When we get to that, if this review is anything other than a smoke-screen to delay what should be taking place, at some point we will be seeing, in this Legislature, the proper adjustments on those temporary disabilities which I have spoken about under section 3. There's no question the wording in section 3 of this bill should read, "The amounts payable under this section shall be increased for 1975 by 11 per cent; effective July 1, 1976, for 1976 by eight per cent; effective July 1, 1977, for 1977 by eight per cent; effective July 1, 1978," and then, according to what is shown in sections 4(9) and 4(10) of this bill, the further increases thereafter.

The minister has failed to include or take into account the first three clauses which should be appearing in section 3 of this bill. I want to tell him how this will affect three people who continually communicate with me on the problem. These people are on temporary disability—most of the time on total, at various times on 50 per cent. But that is the base on which they calculate the 50 per cent. There's Fred Wilson from Chatham, who was first injured in 1971 and has been continuous throughout, as far as I can see in his file. In 1975 those amendments brought his total temporary to $216 a week. Four and a half years later, what does this amendment do for Fred Wilson? Four and a half years later, it's going to give him $21.63 more a week, rather than $90 a week or whatever the weekly maximum allowable under this bill would be if the proper amendments were in here.

I would be very interested in the minister's reply on this next point. Perhaps he can indicate by a nod. The way section 3 is added, someone would qualify for the increase who has been on temporary total disability or temporary partial disability from the time of the injury and it has been interrupted for some short period but he has none the less continued to receive total temporary as a result of the injury coming at some very early date. I have two cases that date from 1973, both temporarily interrupted but having been continuous in each case since 1975—in one case it has been continuous from May 27, 1975, to the present, and in the other case from April 1975 to the present—and I assume both of these persons would qualify for the 10 per cent indicated in the bill. They have been continuous since the spring of 1975 even though prior to that there were short breaks between 1973 and the spring dates of 1975. The two cases are those of Gerald LeClair and Janet Smith in the Windsor area. Do I take the minister's nod to mean, if they've been continuous since the spring of 1975, that they will at least get the 10 per cent? The minister is nodding and that's correct. All right.

In the case of Gerald LeClair, under the minister's amendment he would have an increase of $17 weekly, rather than roughly a $75 increase if the proper income maintenance adjustments had been made.

In the case of Janet Smith, she will receive an increase of $18.50 weekly, the first in four and a half years. Back in 1975 she had an increase of $21. Now, four and a half years later she'll get the magnificent sum of $18.50, which is a sham in terms of income maintenance rather than a gain still on the improper base. However, the proper adjustment would be a number in the vicinity of $75 to $80. This is what should be done.

I won't unduly continue to harp on this point. It is a disgrace. I don't understand the thinking of this minister, the ministry staff or the Workmen's Compensation Board by which they could come up with this and think an increase of 10 per cent is sufficient or just for four and a half years for those on temporary disability.

My second point is one I have heard others speaking on. I wasn't able to stay for the entire debate. I was required to attend the members' services committee. This second point concerns the maximums payable under this act. The mistake was made in 1978 when the maximum was not increased by the same percentages as the pensions were increased. I won't belabour the point but the minister knows injured workers have been disadvantaged by the maximum not going to the same percentage increase by which the pensions were increased over those years.

It has been a problem for the Workmen's Compensation Board—not so much on the calculation, because they worked out a means by which they could calculate it easily enough, but over that intervening time in terms of having to explain the matter to the workers who hear of an increase in their pensions. When the pensions have been increased prior to this point the maximum has always gone up by the same amount. This has been a problem for the board to explain if they were attempting to be honest and rational in their explanation as to why recipients are getting no increase or only a minimal increase and one that is not equal to the percentage increases that occurred in the pensions.

Interestingly enough, back in June 1978, I had made an amendment to that section of the act. I may say it was worked out with Mr. Laughren. When I look at it now, it was one that was moved by Mr. Laughren rather than myself. We put in the maximums that should pertain in those same percentage increases, the one which was not accepted by the Minister of Labour at that time. The $15,000 we struck out in that bill rather than being replaced by the $16,200 which was then inserted—effectively made the amendment read that that be $16,800 effective July 1, 1976, $18,500 effective July 1, 1977, and $19,600 effective July 1, 1978, to keep those maximums in line with the percentage increases of the pensions.

There has been no attempt in this bill to clear up that problem, a problem which clearly exists. We have in this bill an amendment which simply takes that $16,200 and makes it—there have been some changes in the bill—$18,500, as of today; clearly below the $19,600 figure which should have been effective July 1, 1978. If you take the percentage changes which have occurred in pensions since then, it would indicate that the appropriate figure for that maximum today, if one were going to base it on the same increase as the pensions, would not be $18,500 but $22,100. This bill is seriously deficient in this regard by not so doing.

I know that in that same amendment proposed by Mr. Laughren—and he will no doubt speak to it later—we also added the very reasonable way in which various workmen's compensation boards in this country now are operating. This was started by Saskatchewan. I read from the amendment: “. . . and those amounts indicated in this section”—those amounts that indicate what the maximum should be—“shall be adjusted on July 1, in each succeeding year, commencing July 1, 1979, by the higher of either the same per cent increase granted under section 42 of the act or by appropriate increments of $1,000 when claims data reveal by December 31 of the year previous that 10 per cent or more of workers have earnings that exceed the maximum rate.”

That was first put into the Saskatchewan act and it has been adopted by some of the other legislatures across Canada as the means of adjusting the maximum. We found that very appropriate, again, provided we got the proper percentage, the proper maximum base, which we failed to do in the bill effective July 1978 and which this minister has also failed to do in this bill. This bill is seriously flawed in these two regards.

The minister, indeed, made no statement which he circulated to us; so I can only go from my recall—and I have not read the Hansard—of his remarks in connection with the tabling of the grey paper, appropriately titled, in terms of how this minister talks, Current Concerns in Workmen's Compensation. This minister is one of the most concerned, but one of the most inactive, ministers in the House in terms of legislation or changes or thrusts that produce any meaningful change in Ontario. Therefore, how appropriately, it is worded. If, however, in the discussion of this, the minister and the ministry and the Workmen's Compensation Board are not prepared to put a rational base under the figures in these two areas that I have mentioned, then the presentation of this for presumed discussion in the future is simply a coverup by whomever over there is concerned with these matters, and this grey paper is not worth circulating to anybody.

Mr. Wildman: He would not even put it into black and white; just grey.

Mr. J. Johnson: Send it over in writing and give the minister a chance to read it.

Mr. Bounsall: You presume he hasn't read it, I take it. That may be a very good assumption from the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel, that the minister has not read the grey paper he circulated.

With those comments, I conclude my remarks. It is deficient in two areas; it must be adjusted at some point. Unless this grey paper goes to committee with the intent to so adjust, this grey paper is nothing but another standard sham—

[2:00]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We are really discussing the bill.

Mr. Bounsall:—delaying tactic the ministers of this government so often use.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, it is a good feeling to stand in one's place and follow the kind of debate that has gone on here this morning and this afternoon on the amendments to the compensation act. I am sure the minister often looks over here with great envy and wishes he had this kind of expertise on his side to give him advice on how to run the compensation board, because the members who have spoken have outlined our concerns extremely well. The word "concern" should be enacted in some kind of legislation so no one can debate the bill brought forward by this minister without using the word "concern" in at least every paragraph, because there is no more concerned minister. If only his actions matched his concerns, we would have good legislation. But that is the problem. It's inevitable.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I'm concerned the member might one day be here.

Mr. Laughren: If the minister wants to engage in some dialectic, I suppose we could.

It always make me very happy to stand here and debate class legislation. I like that, because that is laying it all out the way it is in Ontario particularly when it comes to legislation dealing with injured workers,

I am happy the minister is sitting there, and underneath the gallery are the big Pooh-Bahs from the compensation board who tell the minister when to jump and how high to jump. He's been to obedience school. When I look at this bill and I see what is in it and its timing, which my colleague from Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) talked about, then I say to myself: "Boy, nothing ever changes. Nothing ever changes on that side of the House."

They bring in the legislation at the end, when they know that if amendments are put and supported by the two opposition parties, the minister will simply stand in his place and say: "We shall not proceed with this bill." We know that; nobody has to spell that out for us. That is a shabby way of bringing in legislation when we have a minority government in Ontario. It is saying they will accept legislation as though it was a majority government, and not facing the real world in which we have a minority government.

The bill itself enriches the benefits paid to injured workers, and for that reason we are going to support it. There are a number of problems, dealing with the benefits, the ceiling level and the benefits for dependants, which continue to bother us. I thought my colleague from Windsor-Sandwich put the arguments extremely well. I hope the minister doesn't think that, because we are supporting this bill, that means it is everything we want it to be, because it is not.

As a matter of fact, I dream of the day when the member for Windsor-Sandwich and the member for Cambridge (Mr. M. Davidson) will be enacting legislation, not debating legislation, that deals with injured workers, because then we will have the kind of legislation injured workers in Ontario deserve. That is what's lacking now.

There is still a problem. When we talk about the compensation board in Ontario, as long as the minister continues to deal with it the way he has since he became minister, we shall continue to have the problem of an adversarial system; we'll continue to have an attitudinal problem at the board; we'll continue to have a decentralization problem, or rather a centralization problem; and we'll continue to have a problem with rehabilitation of injured workers, because these kinds of amendments don't go to the heart of the system at all. That is why I ask the minister if he would listen to the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board, Mr. Starr. He should listen to him, sound him out about his views on a comprehensive social insurance system based on the model used in New Zealand at present.

I wish the minister would talk to Mr. Starr about that. Mr. Starr has said he sees the day when that has to come, and that is the kind of system we will have to have in Ontario. It is a matter of years, but it is only a matter of time, until all across this country we have a comprehensive social insurance system run at the provincial level. One jurisdiction after another will bring it in. Just as Saskatchewan was the model for our medicare system, so it will be the model for our social insurance system as well. That day will come.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It's a dream.

Mr. Laughren: The minister treats that suggestion rather glibly, but it is a serious suggestion. We've put it previously to this minister and to previous ministers, and I think it is the way out of that incredible quagmire called the Workmen's Compensation Board in Ontario.

It's not a complicated system, but it does involve something that bothers the minister and that government; it's called ideology. The minister knows that, to bring in a system like that, you must have a public automobile insurance system, you must have an insurance system for the public at large and you must have a workers' compensation system. When those three are in place, they can be brought together under one umbrella called a comprehensive social insurance system.

Only then will we be able to deal with the three central problems: (1) accident prevention, (2) income maintenance and (3) rehabilitation after the accident has occurred. Those three things are what we should be looking at when it comes to compensation.

If the minister thinks he can resolve the problems in compensation without addressing himself to those three key ingredients, he is sadly mistaken.

I hear the bleating—I don't like to use the word "bleating"—from the Liberal Party about the cost of such a system. The cost of such a system would be less than the present system. People already insure themselves for automobile accidents, people already insure themselves for accidents in the home and so forth. We already have a workers' compensation system. What I'm talking about is making it more efficient than it is now. It's not a case of increasing the costs to anyone. As a matter of fact, the costs would be less and the system would be more efficient. That's what we're after for the injured workers in Ontario.

I would ask the minister, now that he has tabled his grey report, his concerned report, why he did not at least say to the people of Ontario, the people who are interested in this problem: "We're not closing the door or closing our minds to the possibility of a comprehensive social insurance system: we would like to know what you've got to say about it."

As a matter of fact, I would have made almost the ultimate sacrifice and gone to New Zealand and dug up some facts for the minister.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Why don't we both go?

Mr. Laughren: I'm not fussy about the company I keep on a trip like that. Of course, I would go with the minister. We could do that. Seriously, the minister should take a look at that system and throw it open for debate. It's been thrown open for debate in Saskatchewan; the costing process is going on there now. The minister wouldn't have to start from scratch. There is a model in New Zealand and there is research that has been done in Saskatchewan. I think the minister dismisses that concept too quickly. The minister is not going to remain as Minister of Labour forever, only as long as his government lasts—which may not be very long.

If there was one way that the Minister of Labour would like to be remembered, it seems to me that would be it, because the Ministry of Labour is a major portfolio in Ontario. If the minister wants to go through his political career as a blip on the scope, I guess that's his choice, but if he wants to leave his mark on labour legislation in the province of Ontario, he could do something about workmen's compensation that would leave an indelible mark in Ontario—namely, to bring in a comprehensive social insurance system. That's what he should do. He should leave his mark on labour in Ontario, not in the way his predecessors have done, but in a very nice kind of way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the honourable member would leave his mark on Bill 209.

Mr. Laughren: I was wondering when I could get to that, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

I will conclude my remarks by asking the minister if, when he responds to all the positive suggestions that have come from this side, he would consider aiding people who come to him or make presentations based on his concerned white paper as to the cost of any particular suggestion. For example, if we went to him and said we would like an automatic indexing system for raising the maximum based on the Saskatchewan model, where, if 10 per cent of the claims in any six-month period or 12-month period exceed the existing maximum, that maximum is bumped up $1,000, would the minister put the research capacity of his ministry or the Workmen's Compensation Board to work to allow that to be costed? In that way, when people make suggestions to the minister based on this report, they can be treated in a serious way and an estimate of cost can be provided.

It seems to me people could make suggestions without knowing what the costs are. That is a factor. We don't pretend that costs of delivering compensation are irrelevant; of course they are a relevant factor. Often people who have good suggestions to make have no idea what the costs will be and no way of determining what the costs will be. I introduced a private member's bill in 1978 which would have bumped up the benefits for injured workers a great deal. The then Minister of Labour, the present Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), stood in her place and said, "This is going to cost over $1 billion."

What I am asking is, will the minister make a commitment that if we can provide some reasonable, positive suggestions he will assure us that a cost estimate will be provided before we determine this is definitely something we want to fight for when the next legislation is brought forth? I hope the minister will think about that.

The other thing is perhaps not a major point, but it really bothers a lot of people; that is, if someone is on compensation—perhaps one of the other members mentioned this; I am not sure—the Canada Pension Plan payments end and he is no longer making contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. That is one of the fringe benefits which is very important and which the compensation board should look at in terms of providing coverage for injured workers.

We welcome these increases. We continue to be dismayed at the tunnel-vision approach to compensation which has been exhibited not just by this minister, but also by his predecessors and by the board itself. I won't get personal about it, but my own views are that massive changes are needed at the board as well, because an attitudinal problem still exists. The decentralization move announced in the last day or so, I believe is a move in the right direction. I very much hope it works so that it can be implemented all across Ontario. We will be watching very closely to see what happens there. They will certainly have our support for the attempt to do it in Sudbury. We will be talking with the Sudbury people on that as well.

We have agreed to support this bill but with the very grave reservations which were best expressed by my colleague from Windsor-Sandwich. I hope the minister will seriously consider the suggestions that were made on this side.

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter this debate briefly, because I think it is very important that we express our views on this bill which is long overdue.

We all know that since July 1978 there has been no change at all in the Workmen's Compensation Act in the level of benefits given to injured workers. As recently as three weeks ago, my colleague the member for Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella) asked the minister when he was going to make some improvement to the level of benefit, which was lagging far behind the cost of living, with no recourse at all for the workers to be compensated for what they were losing because of circumstances that are absolutely beyond their control.

If the cost of living goes up continuously and the Workmen's Compensation Act doesn't provide any mechanism to compensate the workers, they are the losers. Injured workers make up the only group in our society which is completely defenceless, because they have no way to be compensated for the impact of inflation on their benefits.

This bill tries in a way to remedy that situation, because the benefits are raised somehow close to the increase of the cost of living between 1978 and today. I think this is the wrong approach. Pensioners are benefiting from Canada pensions, and most of the people who are employed in both the public and private sectors have cost-of-living allowance (COLA) clauses; so why is it impossible for this government to consider that the injured workers should have that type of provision in law? It is only human and reasonable that people who are getting pensions, which in some instances are not only absolutely inadequate but are also extremely low, should benefit from the increases every other group in our society get because of the cost-of-living increases.

It is frustrating for the members of the Legislature and for the government to be subjected continuously to the pressures of the injured workers and other groups in our society who come after us asking: "When is the government going to introduce the next amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act?"

If the government had introduced an automatic COLA clause in the Workmen's Compensation Act, it would have solved many problems. I feel that, even with the amendment tabled by the minister with Bill 109 which we are now discussing, we don't solve the problems of the injured workers' benefits level.

If we consider the widows, the bill provides they will get $410 effective July 1, 1979. I submit that this is absolutely inadequate since it is below the poverty level by any standard. I don't understand why widows of workers who lost their lives while on the job should be penalized. They have lost the head of the family and, in many cases, the main breadwinner in the family.

Why isn't it possible or conceivable that the government could understand there has been a loss of income in a family, apart from the loss of a member of a family? Furthermore, that family is penalized by being reduced to a situation where, with the pension, its members won't get anything near to the poverty level.

We have examples of other jurisdictions in Canada and elsewhere where the widows' benefits are compared to the current wages of the workers in the category to which the worker who died belonged. That is only reasonable. I know it will cost the employer and cost the system but, on balance, we have to consider not only the needs of the surviving widow, children and dependants of the injured worker, but also his rights because it is his right to be compensated for a loss that was a result of an industrial accident.

As my colleagues have stated before me, there are very serious shortcomings in this bill. In fact, one of the points I'd like to comment on briefly is section 41a of the act. This section, as it is now, is grossly abused by the administrators of the Workmen's Compensation Board. What happens—and this is my daily experience—is that at some point, for reasons that are quite often not given to the workers, the benefits are either discontinued or cut by 50 per cent. At that point, as the honourable minister knows very well, the workers have to fight an uphill battle to have their benefits reinstated. Very often, at that point, they have against them the opinions of doctors who are either direct employees of the Workmen's Compensation Board or who, because they are paid by the board, are not always objective. In that case, there is an interruption of the benefits going to the injured worker. This is a situation that happens extremely often.

For that reason, section 41a will become a matter of contention. I submit to the minister that one year from next month we will be flooded with hundreds of appeals. In these cases the Workmen's Compensation Board will have stopped paying benefits and we will be fighting to have the benefits reinstated. Then, when we ask for the 10 per cent increase, the Workmen's Compensation Board will say, "No, we have a bill which tells us that benefits should have been received continuously." This will exclude a very great number of injured workers from receiving these benefits; it means, in effect, that the workers will be penalized and will not receive this compensation which, as I understand the minister, is intended to compensate them for the increase in the cost of living between July 1, 1978 and now.

Also, as my colleagues have pointed out, the fact that the Workmen's Compensation Board is given absolute discretion—in fact, it "may" adjust the rate of compensation—adds a further level of uncertainty and will create more bureaucratic problems for all of us. In this respect, I'd like to point out that the assessment of the doctors becomes extremely crucial.

As it happens now, and as the minister knows very well, very rarely does the Workmen's Compensation Board take into account the opinion of the family doctor, the practitioner who knows the injured worker best—quite often for many years and who is best able to express a recent opinion on his condition. Despite that, the board doesn't take the family doctor's opinion into account.

Very often what happens when an injured worker is referred to the Workmen's Compensation Board is that the consultants of the board express an opinion or suggest that benefits be discontinued. At that point, the worker has no other recourse but to appeal the decision. In many instances, the rehabilitation department and the consultants to the board have no other recourse but to suggest to workers that they cannot do anything any longer and, therefore, the benefits must be discontinued.

As we have said many times, there should be a system for providing injured workers and the Workmen's Compensation Board with an objective, independent assessment by doctors who are not paid by the board—doctors who can express their opinion without fear, who are responsible to the general public and who cannot be blackmailed in any way because they fear their income might be cut or because they feel their first loyalty is to the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Another point I want to raise is that the board may use this section quite loosely. In fact, even now we know there is a practice —of which I disapprove; I think it's totally unacceptable—of referring injured workers to psychiatrists. When there is a problem about the continuation of benefits because the board thinks the condition of the injured worker has reached a certain plateau from a clinical point of view, quite often, in the cases I deal with, the injured worker is referred to a psychiatrist. Quite often we know the psychiatrists say the worker has an overlay of some kind and, therefore, cannot function for a reason other than the injury. In that case, the benefits are discontinued. That happens very often. Quite often I am very resentful because I know many workers in this situation.

I had three cases last night of people who had been working for 25 years and who then had an injury on the job, a very serious injury. After six months, section 41a is not applicable any longer. Why? Because the board, in its wisdom, decides to refer them to a psychiatrist. The psychiatrist says this worker is not injured any longer from a clinical point of view, but he's suffering from a psychological or psychiatric problem which pre-exists the accident. In some cases we have workers who have been working for 29 years—as was the case with one worker yesterday—and they have been functioning perfectly on the job. All at once they find themselves excluded from benefits because of this so-called psychiatric problem that they never noticed. What happens quite often is that psychological problems and certainly tensions arise within the families because of the fact that they are sent to psychiatrists and doubts are cast on their ability to function within the family. The benefits are also cut in that instance.

In this regard, I would like to raise another point that has to do with the implementation of the Workmen's Compensation Act, specifically sections 41 and 42 of the act. The board's assessment for permanent disability is based on a chart we all know. Usually it is very low. It is extremely difficult for a worker to get recognition of his disability in terms of his functioning in a job he can perform. This applies even more so for many workers, especially workers of ethnic background, so they may function in the labour market in a different capacity. The actual policy of the Workmen's Compensation Board in such cases is to suggest that the worker apply to the Canada Pension Plan for a disability pension.

What happens if a worker receives a CPP disability pension given to disabled workers? The Workmen's Compensation Board washes its hands of the worker and says he is no longer employable. On the other hand, the Workmen's Compensation Board doesn't give him a total disability pension; it gives him only a 15 per cent disability pension. In that case, section 42(5) of the act no longer applies, nor does section 41a, which is one of the amendments introduced by the minister.

The minister should take this into serious account and try to change it. We have cases where injured workers are assessed by the board, presumably because they have a permanent disability, and since this situation cannot change they don't qualify under section 41a of the bill. So at the same time they assess them as having a permanent disability, they send them to the Canada Pension Plan, thus excluding them from the supplement they should receive from the board until they can be reintroduced into the marketplace. But these workers have no recourse at all at that point.

I submit to the minister that either the board should review fundamentally the assessment of disabilities or that they not tell workers to apply to the Canada Pension Plan. I realize in many instances we are giving the board functions that do not pertain to it. Retraining and helping the workers to find a job should not be a function of the WCB. I say to the Minister of Labour and Manpower (Mr. Elgie) that there should be a department of the government to look after these problems similar to the departments in many other jurisdictions which are looking after the employment of injured workers.

I understand the resistance of this government to the introduction of a quota system, or any other system, which would make the abolition of work not compulsory by the implementation of a system that would actually re-employ the injured workers. I submit to the minister that the present system doesn't work. We can find Band-Aid solutions which will work today, but tomorrow we will be faced with the same problems.

Dislocation is enormous among injured workers and their families. I don't think we are doing justice at all to them or to our society by creating such pitiful situations. So we support the bill because it is long overdue, but we are also unsatisfied. I want to file my answers as unsatisfactory.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I can see the member for Downsview (Mr. Di Santo) has got revenge on the two leaders of the opposition for the time they take up during question period. He has made a significant contribution to this debate.

I won't go over the material he has covered. He's gone into, in some detail, some of the problems confronted by individuals in our constituencies who have problems with the Workmen's Compensation Board.

I will say briefly that we in the opposition appreciate this particular piece of legislation in that it has been a long time coming and it is certainly very much needed in terms of those who are to be the recipients of these funds. Nevertheless, I would bring to the minister's attention, as I'm sure many members have and will, the bureaucratic problems that exist with the Workmen's Compensation Board.

There are some people in my constituency who would suggest the best thing that could happen to the WCB building, would be its disappearance through the use of fire. Needless to say, I wouldn't be amongst those who would counsel arson. But it does indicate to us that there is considerable dissatisfaction with the administration of the Workmen's Compensation Act and that there are many who have spent weeks, months and years of frustration in attempting to deal with the board.

If I were to log the calls that come into my constituency office, I would venture to say—and I would be on very good ground to say—the largest number of inquiries I get at my constituency office revolve around the Workmen's Compensation Board. This is in a city where we have a local Workmen's Compensation Board office where people have direct access, not only by telephone—although the lines are always busy because of the number of situations that arise—but also to the office itself. Nevertheless, the largest number of calls that come into my constituency office deal with various aspects of the problems they are confronted with.

The member for Downsview has enumerated a number of these problems. They cause me concern and lead me to believe that in addition to a bill of this kind which, as I say, is certainly welcome, we do require a substantial change—and I know there is a study going on—in administration. I say this even to the point—and I know it's almost heresy in these days of restraint to suggest this—of perhaps employing more people in the board, certainly claims adjudicators, which I believe is the category we talk about, so these files can be processed more quickly.

I think all of us, as members of the Legislative Assembly respect the fact that the Workmen's Compensation Board wants to eliminate these people who are attempting to get money for illegitimate reasons. Nevertheless, the overwhelming majority have a compensable injury and are frustrated in their efforts to get the money and get it on time. So many of these people are living on a week-to-week basis and have very little in the way of savings. With the present rate of inflation, and other situations in the province and right across this country, we recognize there is a need for a quick way of dealing with their particular claims.

After this bill is passed today—and I anticipate it's going to be passed, since all parties have approved—I urge the minister to use his good offices to hurry any evaluation of the present administrative system and create a situation where people can get service as soon as possible and the new funds that are forthcoming will be forthcoming on the kind of basis that is satisfactory to those who are to receive the moneys.

It is with some degree of enthusiasm that I cast my own vote in approval of this particular bill, and I encourage the minister to continue making this a more progressive field rather than a more conservative field in terms of this government.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure members will forgive me if I'm relatively brief in my response.

I would like to advise them that, rather than take the time to cover the many valid comments that have been made, many of which didn't relate to the particular matter at hand but all of which were important, I am going to ask my staff to make sure those comments are reviewed by the committee that will be set up next month to start considering the paper. I thank members for the contributions they have made. They have all been very important contributions; some longer than others, but all important. I am not even concerned that they are concerned.

I think members have recognized that we are seeing two things here today. One is an interim piece of legislation which I felt—and we all share the feeling—was necessary to upgrade the pensions injured workers are receiving, because we all face the same cost increases. There have been some criticisms of section 3, but to my mind it adds a new concept, the concept that injured workmen on long-term temporary disability pensions should receive an annual increment, as well as those on longer pensions. That is the position I took, and I put that in this bill. I feel it should be a regular feature of any compensation package.

By far the most important portion of the dual package, in terms of principle, is the white paper. The paper encompasses many of the things members have raised, such as the need to re-evaluate the basis on which we provide pensions. In regard to this—and I think those members who take the time to read it will find it interesting—there are some communities that are basing their pensions on what is called an earnings-related scheme. It avoids many of the problems that have been raised here today. There is an escalation of the ceiling which is automatic; there is an escalation of pensions which is automatic; all of this has a greater sense of equity and provides what I think is a more just and equitable concept with regard to the injuries workmen may receive.

That isn't to say the suggestions in the paper are the only ones. As I indicated in my opening statement, this committee which we will set up will be prepared to receive other options or suggestions for change. I look forward to seeing those, and I look forward to hearing from members with regard to them.

The member for Dovercourt asked about timing. It is my intention to announce the establishment of the makeup of this committee early in the new year, and I would ask it to report by the summer. It would be my intention, so long as the complexities of the matter don't interfere, to have legislation ready for the fall. Should that not be possible for some reason, then I would intend to bring in legislation similar to this, comparable to what we have seen today, again as an interim measure, with the long-range view that I have of legislation, which is to make corrections with regard to the inequities we have all been aware of.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

House in committee of the whole.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 209, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. M. Davidson moved that subsection 1 of section 41a of the act, as set out in section 3 of the bill be amended by striking out "may" in the fourth line and substituting in lieu thereof the word "shall."

Motion agreed to.

Section 3, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 4 to 9, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 209, as amended, reported.

[2:45]

On motion by Hon. Mr. Elgie, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with an amendment.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 209, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE AND FOOD

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Henderson) has been able to come into the House to handle this concurrence. I understand he was ill this morning, and I certainly wish him a speedy recovery. I know he has had a bout with some ill health that has kept him out of the House. I would say he has a tough portfolio. There is probably a lot more heat in the kitchen than he ever expected when he accepted that position. Before it ruins his health, I hope he will take a walk to the Premier's office and say: "We've had two previous ministers who have undergone bad health because of the responsibilities that have been placed upon us in this ministry. I really think it is a young man's game." I hope he does that before something happens, such as happened to the two former ministers.

Bill Stewart stayed on a year longer than he wanted to and, as a result, suffered a heart attack, and his successor, the member for Durham-York (Mr. W. Newman) underwent some bad health which was probably due to the onerous task that was placed upon him in the ministry. Now this minister has been ill, and we certainly don't want to see anything happen to him. If he finds his responsibilities are greater than he would like to see and it is going to lead to bad health, my suggestion is to get the heck out.

There are a number of activities and in-activities on the part of the minister and his ministry that I want to comment on this afternoon. Back at the time of the last election, there was a great announcement made by the government that it was going to start a greenhouse project up at Douglas Point to make use of the waste nuclear heat. Maybe there was considerable merit in that kind of project, but I think the government could well have informed us about a project that was undertaken in the Sudbury area. I'm sorry the members from Sudbury aren't here to confirm whether such a project indeed did get started. This project apparently was called Sudbury 2001. The NDP, being the eternal pessimists that they are, always painting doom and gloom, feel that by the year 2001 nickel apparently is going to run out; in other words, there won't be a nickel industry in Sudbury.

My understanding is that a number of reeves, the warden of the area and the three NDP members got together, along with the president of the university, and took a look at what kind of industry might be developed in the area to replace the nickel industry. They started this project, Sudbury 2001, and what the project consisted of was getting a German involved in going down to Texas and buying something like 300 goats, bringing the goats back and selling the goats to a number of farmers in the area to get a mohair business started.

This German chap they involved apparently started selling shares in a mohair co-operative. It is my understanding the government rendered some financial assistance to that project; I don't know how much. My understanding is the government, to save embarrassment, didn't want to reveal this particular project. The NDP certainly has been very quiet about it because I think they are a little embarrassed. Part of the embarrassment is based on the fact that when they studied the project they based their conclusions on the production of wool from sheep. We all know there is all the difference in the world between the amount of wool a sheep will produce compared to the amount of hair a goat will produce.

It is my understanding the project fell through when some of the shareholders in the co-op approached the German about a written agreement, and after the German had sold $1 million or so worth of shares in the mohair co-op he told them to get lost. So I assume there was one person who reaped the profit.

What I want to know is, who in the world ever supported that kind of project? I guess the NDP members from Sudbury thought their country was similar to Angola and they would be able to raise goats and start a mohair industry to replace the nickel industry, and this government got taken in by rendering some financial assistance. What I want to know is, how much financial assistance was actually rendered by this government to this project in which the NDP members were very much involved but didn't want to say too much about?

The second matter I wish to bring up is the rather serious state of the chicken industry in Ontario at present.

Mr. Foulds: And there is the leading chicken.

Mr. Nixon: That's the turkey over there gobbling.

Mr. Wildman: Be careful, the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) doesn't like that.

Mr. Gaunt: I'm very sensitive about those turkey remarks.

Mr. Riddell: You will notice the NDP all carry turkeys under their arms. They use them for spare parts, I understand.

Mr. Wildman: You have two turkeys which fly lopsided; they have two right wings over here.

Mr. Riddell: I am wondering what kind of involvement the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Henderson) has at present in courses of action that the chicken producers of Ontario can take now that his appeal has been lost. We know that the national agency increased this year's quota by 25 million pounds over last year's. Quebec was to get—I find this unbelievable—18 million pounds of that 25 million pounds, Ontario was to get four million pounds and Saskatchewan was to get 3.8 million pounds; yet by far the greatest consumption of chicken takes place in Ontario.

When that allocation was made, it is my understanding the chairman of the Farm Products Marketing Board, who was a signatory to the agreement, reported to the minister. I will commend the minister; he did take action, he said he would appeal it. The minister, through his ministry, appealed it; and the chicken producers appealed it. I understand the hearing was held a week ago today and the appeal was denied.

It reminds me of the Premier going down and fighting for Ontario, for more reasonable rates of increase in oil, and of course he lost. Obviously, the Minister of Agriculture and Food lost the appeal. It is very hard to understand the reason, unless of course there was a bit of politics involved in this. No one can understand the reason that the agency would give 18 million of the 25 million pounds to Quebec, whereas we have the production and the consumption in Ontario.

It is my understanding the minister has suggested we are going to have to take other courses of action. What I would like to know is, what are those other courses of action? My understanding is that the national agency simply told the Ontario chicken producers that if they didn't like it to pull out of the agency. What kind of attitude is that on a part of a national chicken agency, to tell them the only alternative they have is to pull out of a national supply management system? Maybe the minister could comment.

I was a little disappointed that the minister didn't take more action, along with the federal minister, to try to get more reasonable imports of chicken coming into this country from the United States. The federal minister, John Wise, did not personally go to Washington to negotiate; he sent one of his bureaucrats. The minister here did not go down, or send any of his staff down with the civil servant from the federal ministry, even though he knew full well that Ontario stood to lose because we happen to be the largest importer of chicken in Canada. The minister should have said to John Wise: "Look, both of us should be going to Washington. We should drive a hard bargain, because if we don't we are going to lose the chicken industry here in Ontario." If that had been done, we might have got somewhere. As it was we are seeing a substantial amount of chicken being allowed to come into Ontario this year, and an increase next year and the year after. I hate to think what that is going to do to the chicken industry.

Another thing the minister should look into in connection with the importation of chicken is the fact that import permits are allotted to holders of record. In other words, Maple Lodge Farms has priority in receiving import permits. When Maple Lodge Farms applies to the marketing board for more birds, the producers won't release them to Maple Lodge, because they know that the processors who normally take their birds will not have the opportunity to replace those chickens through an import permit. If these import permits were freed up, available to anyone, the producers could supply the chicken.

Also, as long as Maple Lodge Farms know they are the importers of record, because they are by far the largest importer of chicken into this province, they are not going to contract for Ontario birds; at least not when United States chickens are expected to be lower in price, which is most of the time owing to the lower production costs in the United States—they have lower labour costs; they don't have the overhead costs because of the warmer climate; and they don't have to provide the energy to heat the houses that these chickens are raised in. The minister should comment on these import permits allotted to holders of record.

Another thing I want to bring to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and Food—and I think it has to be an embarrassment to him and his ministry—is that the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) continually pleaded with the minister to work with the greenhouse growers in southern Ontario and render some assistance to them to try to find alternative sources of energy. They asked for some financial assistance to do some research, because there's no question that the cost of heating those greenhouses is by far their greatest cost, and the Minister of Agriculture and Food turned them down.

This didn't stop the member for Essex South. He approached the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman). Through the good graces of Duncan Allan, a man over there for whom I have a great deal of respect, the minister has seen fit to give financial assistance so research can be done whereby they can find a cheaper source of energy.

Why in the world, since greenhouse production is an agricultural matter, would the Minister of Agriculture and Food turn thumbs down and leave it to the Minister of Industry and Tourism to render assistance to the greenhouse producers in southern Ontario? That is his responsibility, and he should be embarrassed for turning them down and letting one of the senior staff members of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism say, "By all means, we feel something should be done, and we're going to do something."

It's my understanding that this didn't make the minister's people very happy, and I'm not too sure they haven't tried to scuttle the whole project. But they're not going to do that, because Duncan Allan feels there is a lot of merit in trying to assist the greenhouse growers with their product down there; believe me, he will see it's done.

If I were to offer the minister any advice, I would urge him to say, "I'll be pleased to co-operate in any way that I can," rather than trying to stop a project that is certainly worthy of some government assistance.

Yesterday, I introduced a bill to amend the Farm Products Marketing Act. It stemmed from the inquiry which we asked for last year and which the former Minister of Agriculture and Food wasn't too anxious to have; that may be one of the reasons why that minister is not sitting in the seat of the Minister of Agriculture and Food today.

I know the former minister has had some ill health too, but I believe he was on the wrong side of this food inquiry thing. He couldn't change because of the assenting vote he made back in 1973 on a committee. He was on the wrong side of that issue; he was also on the wrong side of the foreign-ownership issue. As a result, and because of his ill health, we no longer find he's the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

I'm a little disappointed by that, because I will say one thing about the former minister and his predecessor: they sat in the House. Very seldom did you see them outside this House. If there were questions to be asked, we had an opportunity to ask them questions. That hasn't been the case with this minister. If that has been because of ill health, then I express my apologies for raising the matter; but I'm not too sure it has been ill health that has kept the minister out of the House.

As I have indicated to the Premier on occasion, if this is some kind of a ploy to keep the minister out of the House because we ask some questions that may be an embarrassment to the government at times, maybe it's best not to have such questions answered; I don't know. But I believe it's the minister's prerogative to be in the House to field the questions that are asked by the members—and believe me, there are a lot of tough issues in the agricultural communities today, and we want to be able to ask questions and get answers.

We try putting the questions to the Premier, knowing full well we're not going to get the answers. We try putting the questions to the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, only to have him tell us it doesn't come under his jurisdiction; it comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. So we're at a loss to know where to go for the answers to our questions when the minister fails to come into the House time after time after time.

There is a lot of concern, not only in the rural areas but also in the urban areas, about the foreign ownership of land. This minister, I will agree, is endeavouring to do something about it, although I am not too sure he's going through the proper sources. The last announcement he made was that he was going to have future foreign investments approved by cabinet. That was one of his alternatives, I believe. Well, that's just politics.

Why doesn't the minister take a look at the bills that have been introduced—the bill that I introduced, followed by the bill introduced by the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton)—simply asking for the disclosure of all lands that have been purchased with foreign capital. Let's get a handle on the matter. If we find it is going on to a greater extent than the minister thinks it is, and I am convinced it is going on to a far greater extent than might meet the naked eye, then we can always legislate to restrict the amount of land that falls into the hands of foreign investors.

Surely we are not going to sell out our primary resource, which is good agricultural land. We have sold everything else out, including our industry—the members over there have a branch-plant philosophy—and I certainly don't want to see the same thing happen to our good agricultural land. I don't know why the minister simply can't introduce, at the next session, a bill similar to the bills that have been introduced by myself and by the member for Middlesex. All we are asking is that we get a handle on how much of this land is falling into the hands of foreign investors.

We also should be doing something to help farmers who are losing livestock because of predators. Here again, I introduced what I thought was a good bill, which would help the farmers to control the predators, but no action has been taken by this government. The bill was written up in Farm and Country magazine, and Ontario Federation of Agriculture fully supported that bill—the federation being the spokesman for the farmers—and yet for some reason the former Minister of Agriculture and Food and this Minister of Agriculture and Food have ignored the fact that we do have problems with predators and that they can be resolved by introducing legislation similar to that which I introduced as a private member's bill.

All I ask is that the minister do some homework over the Christmas recess. Let him take a look at some of these bills—at the foreign ownership private members' bills and at the predator control bills—and then bring in his own bills in March, and I am sure they will get speedy passage through this House so as to keep agricultural land in Canada in Canadian hands and so we will be able to assist the farmers in protecting their livestock against predators.

I also wonder what kind of assistance the Minister of Agriculture and Food is going to give to our young farmers today in view of the high capitalization they are facing, in view of the high interest rates they are having to pay and in view of the high energy costs they are going to be faced with, which reflects on the prices they are going to have to pay for fertilizers such as nitrogen fertilizers, which are derived from oil.

Perhaps the minister can comment on what assistance he is going to render to try to keep our farmers in business. Would he consider reinstating the junior farmer loan in view of the fact that the Farm Credit Corporation seems to have been limited in the amount of money it can give out to farmers, and farmers can't get the money; if they do, they are paying now an interest rate of 12 per cent on that money and, with this land costing $2,000 to $3,000 an acre because they have to compete against foreign investors, there is just no light at the end of the tunnel unless we are prepared to assist those farmers in some way. I would like to hear what the minister has in mind for these farmers, not only those trying to get into the business, but those who are in the business but will be facing bankruptcy. As the Ontario Federation of Agriculture says, within the next two or three years we are going to see more bankruptcies in the agricultural community than we have ever seen before. I don't think we want to see that happen, and I want to know what kind of assistance we are going to render.

The member for Nipissing (Mr. Bolan) and I met a delegation of farmers from that part of the country. They don't feel this government is doing one darned thing for them up there. One of the things they mentioned is the subsidy paid on western grain. I would like to know why there is a differential in the amount of subsidy paid. In Timiskaming they get $13.50 a ton; in Nipissing, $3.50 a ton; and in Sudbury, $6.50 a ton. What could possibly be the reason for there being that much differential in the subsidy they receive on their grain?

Another thing they are asking is that grants be made available for more storage facilities in northern Ontario. The co-ops could handle far more of the grain that is grown there. Also, they would like to get into the bulk fertilizer business. They would like to see grants made available by this government so they could expand their storage facilities not only for the product that is grown but for the fertilizers they have to use. In southern Ontario most farmers have gone to bulk fertilizers; in northern Ontario they still have to use bags. If this government would make some kind of assistance available for more storage facilities so they could store the fertilizers in bulk, then the farmers could use them in bulk, which would be far less costly than the present system used in northern Ontario.

Maybe we should be rendering some assistance in transportation. They tell me it costs $22 a ton to transport grain and other products from Guelph to a place like North Bay; so we can understand the problems they are having in northern Ontario. There is a great potential for more agricultural production there if this government will assist the farmers with storage facilities and transportation. I want to ask the minister what programs are available and what programs he is planning to assist the agricultural industry in northern Ontario.

I know others want to speak; so I will conclude by saying Ontario's new Minister of Agriculture and Food seems to be having some trouble adjusting to his high-profile, powerful position. I was astounded to learn that when the minister was sitting with the dignitaries at this year's Royal Agricultural Winter Fair, he sent a note down to the judge who was culling the 4-H calves, advising him not to send any of the Lambton county 4-H members' calves out of the ring. I could not believe that. As minister, he is representing 4-H club members right across Ontario; not just Lambton county 4-H club members. Before he became minister, I could understand giving crisp $50 bills to the senior citizens back at the time senior citizens were given a bonus. It might have been good politics to have been able to take those bills and deliver them personally to the senior citizens. But now that he is minister, he must not discriminate against any of the farmers or 4-H members in Ontario. He represents them all. I think it's a terrible piece of business to send a note to the judge saying he isn't to send any Lambton county 4-H calves out of the ring. The minister is far from just another Lambton county fan and he should take care to recognize that fact.

[3:15]

Furthermore, it is my understanding that he threw a reception at the taxpayers' expense and invited only 4-H members from Lambton county.

Mr. Eaton: That's not right.

Mr. Riddell: If that's not right, then the minister had better be suing a reporter, one of the best agricultural reporters I know of. He had better sue him, because it's right here in black and white.

Apparently this party got out of hand and about 200 people showed up at the public trough, according to the information I have here. Certainly many other worthy 4-H club members from other counties and regions of Ontario have good reason to be jealous.

The Minister of Agriculture and Food has a double problem in that he is in a portfolio once held by Bill Stewart, who had a reputation for being quite a gentleman. I'm not suggesting this minister is not a gentleman. I treat him as a friend, but I do think he has to change his ways as a minister. He can't be doing favours for those people in the riding he represents, because once again he represents all of Ontario.

I should hasten to add that the Minister of Agriculture and Food is probably doing his best.

Mr. Lawlor: But he's learned some strange ways.

Mr. Riddell: He's probably just being himself. But if the minister's performance falls short of the mark it's more of a reflection, as far as I'm concerned, on the Premier and his opinions of farmers and agriculture than it is a condemnation of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Members can read into that what they like, but I put a lot of the blame on the Premier because he doesn't give a damn about agriculture in Ontario.

I was going to say the Premier perhaps had some talent to put into that particular portfolio, but I'm not too sure. That caucus over there is so lacking in people with any kind of agricultural experience and knowledge that he must be hard-pressed to know how to put into that position.

When it came to choosing a minister, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture called me. They had four names selected, and they asked me to give my opinion on those four names; which I did, quite willingly. When it came to commenting on the Minister of Agriculture and Food—he wasn't in the portfolio at that time—I will admit that I indicated he was a good guy; he held a lot of respect in his riding, he was able to go around and call practically everybody by name and he would be a hard man to defeat in that riding. I gave him a lot of credit, but I also said he was the old pork-barrel type of politician.

Believe me, when I see this business of sending notes down to judges, telling them they're not to send any Lambton county calves out of the ring, and when I see parties being thrown at taxpayers' expense for the 4-H members of Lambton county, I have to believe that what I said was pretty accurate. I simply say the minister has to change his ways. He's representing Ontario and not just Lambton county; so let's hear what he's prepared to do for—

Hon. Mr. Davis: As long as they're not members like you.

Mr. Riddell: Oh boy, I finally brought the Premier in.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Did you have a pleasant lunch?

Mr. Riddell: Yes, I did; I had a very good lunch.

With those few comments, I'll let the other members speak, but I would like some answers to the questions I have raised as to what the minister is going to do for the agricultural industry in Ontario, what he is going to do for the farmers who are encountering problems at the present time and what he is going to do for northern Ontario. Give us some answers and maybe we will be able to assist and co-operate in every way we can when we come back in the new session.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the member for Algoma, I would like to recognize and pay tribute to a group of people around here who I would characterize as the unsung heroes, the people behind the scenes and under the gallery who perform yeoman service, not only for their ministers but for literally all of us in the House. They have attempted to make my job a little bit easier. They are the IBEAPCHHDM and PCRs around here; they are the international brotherhood of executive assistants, bag carriers, hand holders, drink mixers and phone call returners; they have helped make my job a little bit easier around here. They dared me to wear this on this dais, this T-shirt which says, "Get to the point." I want to say to them, on your behalf, thank you very much for what you do for all of us around here; and thank you for the T-shirt.

Mr. Wildman, Mr. Speaker: I don't know exactly what the point of that T-shirt is, since you chose to get up and show it before I spoke.

I want to make some comments on concurrence in the Ministry of Agriculture and Food estimates. The main point in dealing with these estimates is the very small percentage of the total provincial budget allocated to agriculture in this province. I think all members on this side of the House will agree that 1.5 per cent of the total provincial budget allocated to agriculture and food is a demonstration of the lack of priority that is provided by this government for the agricultural industry, which is certainly one of the most important industries we have in this province. Unless we make a great commitment to it, we face serious problems for the future.

I would like to know how the minister can justify this very small percentage of the total provincial budget that is allocated to agriculture. Is it an example of the fact that he and his predecessor were particularly ineffective in persuading the Chairman of Management Board of Cabinet (Mr. McCague) and the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) that they needed to have additional funds to encourage the agricultural sector in this province? I would hope the minister will be able to respond adequately and give us some kind of assurance that in the next fiscal year we are going to have a greater commitment made to the agricultural industry in this province.

I want to make a couple of comments in regard to the statements made by the Liberal critic with regard to the NDP members from Sudbury. First, the very fact we are talking about something like the goat industry in Sudbury is an example of the fact that this government, over 36 years, has been a complete failure in terms of an industrial strategy for northern Ontario in general and for the Sudbury basin in particular.

The fact that the Sudbury 2001 committee had a choice between something like growing worms or mushrooms in the mine shafts or going to the goat industry is an example of the kinds of choices we have in northern Ontario under the Conservative government when it comes to choosing between primary resource extraction and any other type of economic development for our area. We are so dependent on mining and lumbering in our area of the province that when those industries slow down, or when the companies that exploit those resources slow down in production, there are just no other options. We're left to such hokey suggestions as producing worms or mushrooms in mine shafts as saviours for the economy of our areas.

It is somewhat ironic that the Liberal member would make comments with regard to the goat co-op in the Sudbury basin in the terms he did and talk about the NDP members. I wonder whether he has checked out his comments with the regional chairman of the Sudbury basin, who may be a federal Liberal candidate and who was very much a sponsor of the 2001 committee as well as a member of the board of directors, as I understand it, and a real booster of this whole program. It is interesting that the Liberal member would make those kinds of comments. I wonder if Mr. Frith has had any opportunity to make any kind of input on his comments. I suspect that the Liberal member was just trying to get our goat. At any rate, that is a little bit outside the purview of these estimates and the concurrence debate, but obviously if we are not going to have any kind of industrial development, we do have to scrape around for all kinds of hokey little suggestions to provide jobs in our area.

I want to comment on a couple of other things. First, I would like to make some comments with regard to the inquiry into the food industry, which was pushed for by both opposition parties with regard to the suggestions of kickbacks and so on made by the retail segment in the agricultural industry.

I'm very concerned, as are the other members of our caucus, that this inquiry may never come to anything; that the inquiry has not and isn't in the future, and the ministry itself isn't, going to deal with the main problem, which is vertical integration in the food industry. The fact is that the same investors, the same companies, own the whole industry, right from the production end all the way through to the retail end, involving the processing, packaging, marketing, transportation, and even the equipment production field, in the agricultural industry.

I know that with the ideology of this government it is not going to take any action in that area at all. It is not interested in dealing with those problems, and as a result the inquiry may become a little bit of a façade and we won't really get anything out of it. I'm quite concerned about that.

As the previous speaker indicated, the former Minister of Agriculture and Food initially wasn't interested in the inquiry. He said it wasn't necessary; he didn't believe that we should hold it. When he was forced to move on that, the personnel chosen for the inquiry were such that it wasn't going to be an exhaustive investigative study but rather one which dealt with the most obvious problems and didn't go into the basis of those problems and deal with the real difficulties we face with the oligopolistic approaches of the large investors in the food industry.

I want to comment on a couple of other things. First, there is the whole question of foreign ownership. I know this has become a major concern in the rural areas, the matter of foreign investors purchasing rural lands. Even in my area, in southern Algoma, we've had the problem for some time of American investors coming in and purchasing good farm land and in many cases letting it go to waste.

We now face a situation in which the German investors are interested in our area and in purchasing land, mainly for speculation in recreational land purposes. In other words, they are buying up land and letting it sit, sometimes renting it to other farmers, in the hope that in the future they will be able to sell land for recreational purposes at a great profit. This has a tendency to drive up the cost of land so much that the farmers in the area, the neighbours of an individual who is going to sell out, are just out of it in terms of being able to purchase the property and the land often goes out of production. I think this is a serious problem.

Again it is somewhat ironic the Liberal members are raising such a fuss about foreign ownership of land, when you compare that with the performance of their federal colleagues in Ottawa who have sold out this whole country. The fact is, their federal colleagues set up something called FIRA, the Foreign Investment Review Agency, to deal with foreign ownership in the manufacturing industry, and industry in general in Canada, but we all know that 95 per cent of the applications for foreign takeovers are approved by the federal government, by their federal colleagues in the past. As a matter of fact, they were agreed to by this government as well, because the Ministry of Industry and Tourism is involved in discussions with FIRA and making recommendations to FIRA; they acquiesce to almost all the decisions of that agency.

So here we have a situation where the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party in this country are willing to make a big fuss about foreign ownership of land but to do absolutely nothing about the foreign ownership of our resources and of the industry in this country. It is a situation in which the federal colleagues of the official opposition here had to be pushed to set up anything at all that might interfere with the so-called free enterprise system like Petrocan and now are trying to claim credit for it. As far as I am concerned the two of them are one and the same; they are both involved with foreign ownership when they are in power, and when they are out of power they are opposed to it.

Mr. Gaunt: That's the line of your federal leader; you can't run the federal election campaign here.

Mr. Wildman: That is exactly right; and he is right on. As far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, a plague on both their houses. The two of them are like, if I might paraphrase a comment made by the federal Minister of Finance in talking about these two parties in Ontario, it is not tweedledee and tweedledum, it is tweedledum and tweedle-dumber.

If we are going to be serious about dealing with foreign ownership, it must be dealt with as an integrated policy. We shouldn't talk about foreign ownership of land in a vacuum; we shouldn't talk about foreign ownership in industry or in resources in a vacuum. If we are concerned about foreign ownership, the question is the nationality of the investment that is taking place in this province and in this country. We should deal with it as an overall problem. I am concerned about foreign ownership of land, but I am also concerned about the foreign control of our resources. They have to be dealt with together.

I would hope this minister would do something about foreign ownership of land, more than simply calling up clerks and finding out what is happening, but I hope he would do it in concert with a program of the Treasurer and the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) to deal with foreign ownership in general.

I would also like to comment in this concurrence debate on the announcement made by the Minister of Agriculture and Food with regard to his equipment policy and what appears to be his complete acquiescence to the farm machinery manufacturers in their proposal for a voluntary code. We need a system where farmers, in the season, whether it be planting or harvesting, when they are using their equipment and they face an equipment breakdown, can get the parts they need so they don't have a long holdup. The minister has acknowledged that, but he has gone along with a voluntary program, even though the Ontario Federation of Agriculture has indicated it doesn't think a voluntary program will work, it is not acceptable and that we need a system such as they have in the western provinces; a system which I used in preparing my private member's bill. I wonder why the minister hasn't accepted that program. He talked very tough when he was first appointed, but he seems to have completely backed off and acquiesced to the farm machinery industry.

I know the minister has said if the voluntary code does not work he might be willing to consider legislation, as proposed by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture.

I would like to know from the minister, what is the time frame he is talking about? How long will be the trial period before he is able to determine whether it has worked? If it has worked, fine. But if it doesn't—and I don't know what in the industry in the past has given him the faith he seems to have in the industry—how long is he going to wait to determine whether he should go ahead with legislation?

I would also be interested in finding out how he is going to enforce the voluntary code, because the farm equipment board, which is supposed to be responsible for administering this program, has absolutely no legislative power. All the board can do is talk to the various parties concerned—the farmer, the vendor or the machinery manufacturer—and try to work out some kind of an agreement. If that doesn't work, there is nothing in law that is going to require a machinery manufacturer or vendor to live by the code.

I can't understand, when the federation has made its position clear, why the minister isn't moving ahead with legislative power. This is a particular problem for farmers in northern Ontario, as I know it's a problem all across the province, but in the north it's even harder to get the parts one needs when they are needed, because there aren't very many dealerships in the north and if a farmer is in the middle of harvest he is in real trouble.

In terms of the problems of northerners, the previous speaker talked about the problems we have with transportation and the need for some kind of assistance in terms of transportation. I would be interested in the comments of the minister. I would also like to know what the minister has to say about the proposal of his colleague from Cochrane South (Mr. Pope), who is now a cabinet minister, who introduced a proposal for a food terminal in Timmins. I would like to know what the minister is going to do about that. Or has he got the problem of some kind of a disagreement between the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) and the member from Timmins as to where a food terminal, if it's going to be established, should be located in northern Ontario?

Many farmers in southern Ontario don't realize the clay belt in that area is probably one of the richest in terms of fertile land in Ontario. It has a tremendous potential for farming. It's true we don't have the same heat units they have in southern Ontario, but there is a potential there and it's one that should be tapped.

I know the former minister talked a lot about the future of agriculture in northern Ontario and, because the government was unwilling to do anything about the gobbling up of good producing land in southern Ontario, he was willing to move to encourage the agricultural industry in northern Ontario. His colleague who now is one of his cabinet colleagues proposed something he thought would encourage agriculture in the north, and I wonder what the minister's position is on that.

I would conclude by saying that the overall policy of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food with regard to the funding of agricultural programs in this province is quite dismal. We have 1.5 per cent of the total budget allocated to agriculture. I think that is a crying shame when we hear all the comments from people on that side of the House about their commitment to agriculture. It's about time we ended all the talk and they put their money where their mouth is and came across with some programs to deal with the problems facing agriculture in this province so we don't face a situation in the year 2000 where we are going to be importing most of our food in this province instead of producing the food we need.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few brief comments with respect to the rutabaga producers' marketing board. I understand it is a very new board; it just got going in August of this year. We have talked about chickens, turkeys and goats, and I think it would be appropriate to throw turnips into the mix as well.

The marketing board—and again I underline that they are just getting started; I guess they have all the growing pains that any marketing board would have under the circumstances, but I noticed this particular fall that the price levels for rutabaga started out at between $1.75 and $2 per 50 pounds. That was on November 5 when the marketing board thought that there might be a shortage, because 40 per cent of the crop was still in the fields and the snow was coming. It didn't look good that the farmers were going to get that crop off, particularly in Huron county, which is the main producing county in terms of rutabagas, as the minister knows. Later on the weather picked up, and we got a little warmth. The snow left and the farmers were able to get off their crop, I think almost 100 per cent, so there was a much bigger crop than the board anticipated. As a consequence, the price dropped back to $1.50 as of December 6.

My concern is with the export market. I think there are some problems in the day-to-day operation of the board, but I am prepared to overlook those and chalk them up to lack of experience, growing pains and all the rest of it. What does concern me, with the operation of the board, is the loss of export markets.

I know the marketing board requested that it get more power, particularly powers to control the price outside of Ontario; it was seeking an extension of those powers from the federal government. I understand that has been put in abeyance and that they are not going to get that power. I think even the board itself has backed off. I notice that the largest wholesaler in Ontario, Stovel-Siemon Limited of Mitchell, which is in the riding of a prominent member of this House, our Deputy Speaker, indicated that as far as they were concerned they didn't want the power extended because they feared the board would use it to set minimum prices at destination markets in the United States.

I said my main concern was the export market. I want to indicate to the minister and the House some figures which rather startled me. First of all, let's take Prince Edward Island. These are figures ending November 30, 1979; they don't go beyond that. In 1978, Prince Edward Island exported only 14,660 bushels. This year, so far, they have exported 33,540 bushels. New Brunswick in 1978 exported 1,700 bushels; this year, 15,960 bushels. Quebec didn't export any in 1978; this year they have exported 1,000 bushels.

In Ontario, in 1978, we exported, for the August-November period, 750,323 bushels; this year for the same period we have exported 633,506 bushels, for a difference of 116,817 bushels. We have dropped by 116,817 bushels in the export market. That's being picked up by the other provinces, as I have indicated. It is also being picked up by Wisconsin. Wisconsin is going into the rutabaga business in a big way and is certainly in a better position to put rutabagas into New York, Texas and Boston at a cheaper price than we can. We simply can't compete at the price levels that are being asked, or have been asked up until this particular point in time.

I draw this to the attention of the minister, and I raise these red flags, warning flags or whatever you like, because I think what is happening is that in many cases the price into the export market is being quoted, but it isn't the true price. I just have to take a look at the price for December 5 into Boston. Our quoted price, delivered to the jobbers in Boston, was $4.40 a bushel, and they were reselling the very same rutabaga for $4.25 to $4.50.

It's pretty obvious to me that the $4.40 quoted price was not the real price. There's a quoted price and then there's a real price. Obviously, those jobbers in Boston are not going to take a loss on those rutabagas. When they're selling them at $4.25 and paying $4.40, there's not much money in that; so I don't think one has to be any great genius to figure out what's going on there. They have a quoted price and then there's the real price in the marketplace.

I think that the minister and ministry officials should be concerned about that and about the figures I've just cited as to what's happening in the export market with respect to rutabagas. It has been a good export commodity for us and I would hate to see us lose it. According to the figures which I have just put on the record, it appears that something fairly dramatic is happening with respect to the export trade. I don't like it and I don't think the minister should be too happy about it either. I think our farmers in this province can compete on any basis with Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec and even Wisconsin. Despite the fact they do have certain advantages, I think we should be able to compete.

I raise those points with the minister and I hope he will respond and, even more important, take a look at what's happening with respect to the operation of the marketing board and do something about it. He should certainly raise the issue with the board officials and see if those things cannot be corrected in the bud before those problems mushroom and become even bigger than they are now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Kent-Elgin.

Mr. McGuigan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I'm sorry I missed the member for Carleton-Grenville.

Mr. Sterling: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to congratulate the minister on the successful negotiations that have taken place among the federal Minister of Agriculture, the provincial Minister of Agriculture and Food, and the Treasurer of the province and the honourable minister for DREE, Elmer MacKay.

This morning I was in my riding in Kemptonville, where I saw the signing of the eastern Ontario development agreement. This agreement has been in negotiation for over one year. Prior to the May 22 election our government tried to negotiate with the former federal government to have this agreement signed.

Eastern Ontario drainage is extremely important. It's important because, unfortunately, eastern Ontario has not been in the drainage business as long as some of the other parts of the province. When the Agricultural Redevelopment and Rehabilitation Act program was unilaterally cut off on December 5, 1978, by the federal government this was to the extreme detriment of agriculture in eastern Ontario.

Originally, we had hoped to sign this agreement on April 1 of last year. However, negotiations dragged and dragged. Our government was willing to sign the agreement on April 1 of last year, which could have alleviated a lot of problems that existed in some municipalities over the past year. Little has been done in drainage in eastern Ontario in the last year. The provincial government continued to pledge its one third towards municipal drains, but the one third from the federal government was not there.

However, on May 22 of this year eastern Ontario representatives of rural areas were elated that there was a new government and hoped there would be a new attitude towards negotiations on this very important agreement. That culminated this morning in the signing of the agreement. It was a $50-million agreement, of which $23 million was directed towards agriculture.

An important part of that agreement was the undertaking of extensive work in the South Nation watershed conservation area. This accounts for $9 million of the agreement. That watershed has been having considerable problems because of its nature. While waiting for negotiations to be completed, our province has continued to pledge funds towards dredging and studies to determine the reservoir capacity of various areas of the watershed.

In the signing of this agreement this morning, it would seem by the co-ordinated efforts of the federal and provincial governments we will finally be able to bring this work on much faster than we could have if the province had to fund all of it. It was with extreme pleasure that I sat down with the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the Honourable John Wise, the Minister of Agriculture for Canada, and signed this agreement.

I want to impress on the Minister of Agriculture and Food that he gives his continued support to drainage in eastern Ontario, not only in the form of drainage ditches but also in the form of tile drainage debentures, and that when he is making his allocations for those programs he remembers we are still in a stage of infancy in some of these programs. It is not sufficient to allocate to some of the townships in eastern Ontario a percentage increase in tile drainage debentures because in many cases there was not in the past an outlet for that kind of activity. As we get into new drainage ditches and new municipal drains in eastern Ontario, the outlet will be there and there will be more demand for tile drainage loans to finance these undertakings.

I would like to add my congratulations and thanks to the Minister of Agriculture and Food for his part in this matter.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few minutes on the Ministry of Agriculture and Food concurrences to remind the minister that I asked him last week about a ruling by the Supreme Court of Canada regarding the inspection of apples by the Canada Department of Agriculture. As he will remember, the court ruled this was not a federal matter but a provincial matter.

Since the country-of-origin markings on retail packages are controlled by the Canada

Agricultural Products Standards Act, the act which the court at least in part struck down, the question in my mind, and I think in the minds of a great many producers in Ontario, is whether or not some emergency legislation should be passed before the end of this session so that between now and the reconvening of the federal Parliament products are not marketed in Canada with the designation "Product of Canada," when they are imported products. The minister has not given us an answer as yet on this question.

I would like to point out that this is also of great interest to chicken producers and a matter of grave concern in the province over the last few months. I would point out to him that under the Canadian Agricultural Products Standards Act all of the chicken that is sold at retail is marked "Product of Canada." In the case of birds that are on ice or, in other words, not protected by a plastic covering, there is a metal tag on the breast of each bird saying "Product of Canada." In the case of products wrapped in polyethylene or some type of film, it's printed on the film. Of course, the annoying thing to producers is that US birds imported into Canada and killed here also go out and are sold in the stores marked with the designation "Product of Canada."

In spite of the joking reference the minister has made as to whether or not chickens can be marked—and I think his reference was always to live birds—we would point out, as my friend here says, it's a bit hard to eat a live bird. I guess the feathers get in your way.

I would also point out to the minister that the federal legislation, the 1975 labelling act, the act that covers French and English markings and metric markings on retail packaging, also says products sold at retail should show the country of origin. I will admit in one clause of that act it does say that exceptions may be made, but I can't think of any reason why one would want to except US chickens or any other products that are clearly US products and which are not really processed in Canada. The argument is made that if a product is brought in and is canned, cooked or mixed in a prepared stew or is a prepared meat, that it has been manufactured in Canada and, therefore, is a product of Canada. I find that a rather thin argument to use with birds that are brought in, the feathers taken off, eviscerated and then sold in that form.

I see by this note, Mr. Speaker, that my time has expired. I would hope the minister would answer some of these questions.

Mr. Martel: As an old farmer from way back I would have to comment on these estimates. Having the great knowledge of farming that I have, I feel I have to contribute. I want to set the record straight.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: What is it you grow?

Mr. Martel: I grow goats.

My friend, the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell), who is loose with the lip and spoke about the embarrassment to my colleagues and me with respect to what transpired in Sudbury recently, constantly shoots from the lip without any facts, as he did with the situation in Centralia with respect to the UAW. He did it then and on this latest situation I must say he hasn't got a clue as to what he is talking about. But that is not unusual.

Let me get the record straight.

Mr. Kerrio: How much stock did you buy in the goat farm?

Mr. Martel: I think I have a share in half a goat.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Which end?

Mr. Martel: The back end, it doesn't eat. It won't cost me anything.

[4:00]

I want to tell you what happened, Mr. Speaker. As you know, when they started closing down mines and had massive layoffs, the government of Ontario gave seed money to the tune of about $600,000 to an organization called Sudbury 2001. It was a group of people who volunteered their services in an effort to try to bring to Sudbury and district some diversification. Out of it came one Mr. Shaffernicht. He made a proposal to 2001.

I should tell my friends right now that those members of the Legislature and those members from the federal House who allowed their names to be on the board of directors did not attend a meeting. They are held on Monday nights and if you check my record the only Monday night I missed was when I took a fishing trip. I think the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) was there. That was the only Monday I missed all spring.

That agreement with Mr. Shaffernicht was reached in those two or three months and no politicians, either provincial or federal, attended any of the meetings. So when my friend talks of embarrassment he knows not of what he speaks.

In late August, my colleagues, the members for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), for Sudbury (Mr. Germa), for Nickel Belt federally, were approached and were told, "You know, the agreement went through but this bird Shaffernicht, who has got charge of the goats, has run amok." We couldn't control him. No one could control him. He would sign legal documents and the next thing you knew Shaffernicht was off doing his own thing anyway.

When we realized Shaffernicht was doing this, a meeting was held in late August to try and bring this bird under control. At that point my colleagues and I met, we insisted that legal counsel be there and we insisted that this bird be brought under control. I must tell you at that time his goats were stuck on an island, Mackinac Island, I believe. He couldn't get them into Canada because they had—what is it?—blue tongue fungus. He couldn't get them into Canada because of the possibility of them having blue tongue fungus.

Mr. Riddell: Must have been NDP goats.

Mr. Martel: I am going to come to what they were. I am going to tell the member what they were in a few moments.

It is interesting that when we met, all of the businessmen wanted to take an equity in this co-op. My colleagues and I, who are known for wanting an equity, refused to have an equity in the co-op. Can you imagine it, Mr. Speaker? The socialist horde did not want an equity, for a change, because we have seen enough equities in places like Minaki Lodge and we weren't prepared to go that route. But I want to tell you the people who wanted the equity were not socialists, they were the usual type of free enterpriser who will bail any bankrupt company out. We weren't prepared to do it.

Nonetheless, as a result of that initial meeting in late August and a couple in September and October, we eventually reached the point that so many things had been committed that we had to approach the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations in an effort to try and prevent Shaffernicht from selling goats. Every time he had a shortfall on his credit he would go out and sell another 10, 15 or 200 goats, another share in the co-op, and he would then pay off his own loan.

He was a good businessman. I am not sure whether he was a Liberal or a Tory. He was a businessman, the type I am acquainted with. That is why I find them so offensive at times. But he would sell another flock of goats and fire them off somewhere and those of us who were concerned indicated this couldn't go on. We went to the minister and said, "Look, you have got to send investigators in." The reason we did it is that we don't want to see 2001 go down the drain and silly comments like those made by the member for Huron-Middlesex do not enhance the possibility of 2001 being credible. There was no reason for us to be embarrassed, but there was an effort to ensure that 2001's credibility didn't go down the drain and it become incapable.

Mr. Kerrio: Is it still active, Elie?

Mr. Martel: No. We got a court injunction about a week ago and the crown now is in charge of the goats, so that our friend Shaffernicht can't move in and sell any more. I thought my friend from Middlesex would want to know who was on the committee before I—

Mr. Eaton: Middlesex-Huron, don't mix us up.

Mr. Martel: Pardon me, Huron-Middlesex.

The regional chairman, who will be a federal Liberal candidate, was on that committee. The Liberal I defeated last time was on that committee and I might say the politicians didn't attend any of the meetings. I thought the member might want to know that. Just for once he might want to get his facts straight.

The reason we attempted to protect it was so that 2001 didn't lose its credibility, which might have seen some diversification in the Sudbury area. But as for embarrassment, heaven forbid, I didn't vote; I wasn't there. And if I were going to embarrass anyone, I could have had fun kicking the hell out of the Tories and the Liberals who wanted to take equity and we did not.

I just thought I would put that on the record.

The final point, I hear my friend from Huron-Middlesex talk about land. I want to tell him he should check with his colleague from Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) about the sale of land to Americans. He might listen to some of his comments up north and on the CBC, when he opposes the socialists wanting to see land only sold to landed immigrants or to Canadian citizens or, better still, that we retain the policy of leasing land which was so successful.

The member for Huron-Middlesex had better talk to his friend. Wherever they are in the province, the Liberals like to speak out of both sides of their mouths at the same time. They sit back trying to suck and blow at the same time, because depending on where they are, that's what they say.

If it's safe down here to say, "We want to protect land," fine. If they're up north and they want sales of land, they say, "Sell the land." What the hell do they want?

Mr. Riddell: I'm not Pat Reid.

Mr. Martel: That's fine. Is there any consistency? Yes, there is. The only consistency over there is the Liberal inconsistency. As I said many times, they're like Xaviera Hollander. They've got more positions than she ever dreamt of.

Mr. Kerrio: I'm consistent. I vote against you all the time.

Mr. Martel: I'm glad to hear that. If the member for Niagara Falls voted with me, I would figure I was wrong and I would change my vote.

I don't want to take any more time of the House, but I wanted to put those two things on the record, to show their consistency.

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Speaker, on this concurrence of supply for the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, I would like to say I am not happy with what is happening in agriculture in Canada and in Ontario particularly. There are a few points that bother me. One is the age of the farmers. Another is the disappearance of farm land. The third is how Ontario is dropping in its percentage of the share of Canadian production. The fourth point is the amount of the Ontario budget that is spent on agriculture.

Although we do hear the minister saying from time to time there are more young farmers going into agriculture, the census still shows that the majority of farmers are in the age bracket of 45 to 54. This bothers me a bit because that's the age bracket I'm in and I think more of getting out of it than getting into it at that age.

Concerning the disappearance of farm land, we see this happening around us all the time. Some will argue that we don't need it, we're well fed. This is true for today, but I feel we should put a stop to the extravagant use of farm land. Toronto uses more prime farm land than any city in Canada. I think this is very disturbing. If we don't need it for the production of food right now, we should be using it for producing energy crops—something we are short of at this time.

On the other concern I mentioned, about Ontario dropping in its percentage share of Canadian production, Quebec is moving ahead of us in several areas there. We used to be the top producers in pork production and now Quebec has moved ahead of us.

I think we can maybe learn a few things from things that have happened in other provinces—why they have come out in front of us and why we are dropping behind in our percentage share of production. I think it is that they have put a greater importance on agriculture than we have here in Ontario. When you look at 1.5 per cent of the Ontario budget being spent on agriculture, I don't think you can say that is giving it very much support. This is why I have introduced a resolution into the House, that will be debated when the House resumes in the spring, which deals with this subject. It states that the government should take immediate steps to see that Ontario farmers are competitive with other farmers in other provinces in Canada and in other countries in the world.

In this regard I would ask the minister what steps he has taken at this time to see that rural hydro rates could be lower, the interest rates to farmers could be lowered; these are some things on which Quebec farmers have an advantage over us. Further, how much and when are we going to get all the money we need for tile drainage; when are we going to get an increased incentive program? The eastern provinces have had such a program for several years; their program stands at $20,000, whereas ours has stood at $3,000 for the last 12 years and is continuing at that rate.

If the minister would take a long look at these things and if he can put them in place before we come back for the next session, if these things can be corrected I will gladly withdraw my resolution. As it stands now, if steps haven't been taken I will gladly reintroduce my resolution again at the next sitting of parliament and will look forward to debating it, I believe the third or fourth Thursday after we return.

I say these few words, Mr. Speaker, because I would like to see that Ontario agriculture receives the attention it deserves.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask the minister a question. Many of us are concerned about the lack of a thriving sheep farming industry in Ontario. We would like to know what you are going to do to improve it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is a pleasure to rise today to respond to the honourable members in concurrence of the vote for the Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

In responding to the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) first on his references to Sudbury 2001, the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) has given a very good explanation of it. I might say I did know a little bit about that operation as the Minister of Government Services. The member for Sudbury East did take me to the site and I had an opportunity to view the farm where they are going to pasture these goats. Beyond that, any grants are through the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

I believe the member for Sudbury East suggested that grant was some $600,000. My only disappointment was I really felt the member for Sudbury East was going to be around to make the mohair and help in the shearing. I suspect he will be up there.

Mr. Riddell: Was $600,000 expended on that project alone?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, the agreement that I signed was with the region of Sudbury for the particular property. As I understand it, the Minister of Northern Affairs also had an agreement with that group through the region of Sudbury. Whether it was $600,000, it didn't come under my jurisdiction.

Members of my staff met yesterday with the greenhouse operators. In 1980 and 1981 we are putting forward Wintario funds for research, as I announced last week. The one problem we worry about is that there might be duplications through different ministries, so members of my staff met with the greenhouse operators yesterday to try and see that there is no duplication of these services. We will be putting forward money in 1980 and 1981 for research.

There are many other items on which I would like to respond. On foreign ownership, I have a pretty good survey from the municipal clerks. We estimate there are about 16 million acres of agricultural land in Ontario. We have response back now from over 80 per cent of the rural municipal clerks covering over 14 million acres of land, and less than three quarters of one per cent is owned by people residing outside of Canada; two thirds of that involves people in the USA, one third, people in central Europe.

There are areas in Ontario where this is a real concern, a real worry; but I suggest that these are not necessarily the people who are responsible for driving the prices of farm land up. We do have farm land that has drastically increased in price, but there is no indication of any foreign ownership involvement, it is the farmer living next door who wants to enlarge his operation.

Respecting the young farmers and the help we have been to them, there are many areas where our government has helped not only the young farmers but the farmers of all ages. I need not refer members to the Tile Drainage Act where we have loaned out over $100 million and at the moment we are loaning out $20 million annually. I made a statement last week respecting our proposals re tile loan money.

Mr. McKessock: Some farmers can't get it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would suggest if the municipal councils use the guideline I proposed last Thursday, it would be more helpful, more farmers would be able to share that tile loan allocation.

There is the matter of the rebate on the taxes, and drainage subsidy. We also have the guaranteed loan for the young farmer, one per cent above the prime interest rate.

The honourable member inquired if I had looked at legislation on foreign ownership. I have legislation here from central USA and from the provinces on each side of us. Yes, I am studying legislation on foreign ownership.

Respecting the chickens, and I feel very strongly about the chickens, I would have to inform the member for Huron-Middlesex that he was wrong. I did go to Ottawa with the chicken producers. I presented Ontario's case to the government in Ottawa before the original decision was handed down. I think I made that clear in this House.

Again last Thursday I made very strong statements about the appeal and about the usage that we as an Ontario delegation received from that tribunal. We had the decision handed down against us on Tuesday of this week. It showed that committee—really, I would like to quote a few things if I may.

"1. Chicken agency followed proper procedure in making the quota order," that is the first thing they said.

"2. The criteria spelled out in plan and agreement for allocation of quota need only be taken into account. There is no requirement on the agency to carry out all of the five criteria so long as they are considered.

"3. Allocation of quota is essential in negotiation situations, presumably council feels that in the course of such a negotiation the agency may depart from adherence to the five specific criteria.

"4. Council has no authority to judge whether the actions of the agency are illegal or not.

"5. Council's authority is confined to studying minor issues. Major issues must be resolved by the signators.

"6. Council is prepared to move up the regulatory signators meeting to an earlier date if requested."

Now I say to you, Mr. Speaker, what is open to us in Ontario? We are not happy with the situation. The figures that the member for Huron-Middlesex quoted are correct. We feel very strongly.

First, we could demand a meeting of the signators. Second, we could apply the reports for an injunction against agencies to prevent the allocation of the quotas. Third, we could withdraw from the national plan.

Mr. Speaker, this occurred Tuesday of this week. I was not feeling as good as I might yesterday or this morning, as the honourable member knows, I have not had an opportunity to get together with my staff. I have asked my staff to meet with the chicken producers to see what they would suggest we should do. So I will leave the chickens at that and I'll go on to try to answer the member for Algoma.

The member is quite aware of some of the responses I got from his particular area. He wants to know about the machinery code of practice. I could tell the honourable member that I am speaking from personal actions on the part of the local machine agents. Maybe I'm a little more fortunate, but the machine agents in the area I come from give exceptionally good service to the farmers in my area. So I'm not in a position where I want to put a higher cost against every farmer if it can be avoided.

The member for Huron-Middlesex referred to the rutabaga—

Mr. Gaunt: Huron-Bruce.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Huron-Bruce, there is a difference.

The member for Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling) also referred to the DREE agreement this morning. I could go into quite a bit of detail on it, but I just thank our federal colleagues that we're able to get that tied down.

Respecting the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) in the court action of last week, again I don't have the summary on the court action, but I have instructed my staff to look into the whole situation with respect to the marking of the product. We might not go as far as the member would like, but we are looking at it.

I could go to some length, but in view of the lateness of the day I have made notes of everything that has been said by all of those who have taken part, and I would just like to take this opportunity to wish them all seasons greetings.

Resolution concurred in.

[Later (4:25):]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, before the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) goes out, I have one more item to which I would like to respond. It's personal, but—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Too late.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: A point of privilege then, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I'll listen to a point of privilege if it's very short.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The honourable member referred to an item that appeared in the paper respecting the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair and the direction from the Minister of Agriculture and Food to the judge in the ring. I have inquired of the people who were at the ringside, the only people in contact with the judge, to see if anyone had passed a note to the judge and no note was passed to the judge. I've read the item to which he is referring in the paper.

In addition to that, the luncheon I had for the people of Lambton was paid for by me. I can show the cancelled cheque if the honourable member wishes. I will continue doing it any time I wish.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, on speaking to the point of privilege, I am pleased that the minister cleared up that point. As I say I happened to read the article written by Jim Roman, and he spelled out very clearly in the article that a note was sent to the judge by the minister. He also pointed out that a party was thrown at taxpayers' expense and only the 4-H members from Lambton county were invited. I am pleased to hear that wasn't the case, because as I say the Minister of Agriculture and Food is representing all of Ontario, not just Lambton county.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The point of privilege has been presented and answered. We will return to the member for Huron-Bruce.

[Reverting (4:23):]

MINISTRY OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Gaunt: This is going to be very fast. My House leader is kicking me in the shins here, I'll just be two or three moments.

There's concern about the York-Durham sewer system. I think people are wanting to know whether the water quality of the rivers and streams north and east of Metro, as well as Lake Simcoe, will improve. Will it cut the phosphorus content, the phosphorus loading, and to what extent?

There are other questions about taking growth away from Metro, and encouraging automobile traffic and urban sprawl and all that stuff, but that doesn't really concern the environment. What I'm concerned with is just what I've asked in terms of phosphorus loadings and what it will do to the water quality.

The second matter I wanted to touch on was the Ajax industrial waste treatment facility, the conversion of existing waste water treatment plant to an industrial waste treatment facility to handle 8.8 million gallons of industrial waste per year.

I think that proposal does have some flaws in it. I know the ministry is supporting it. I was surprised to learn that the Simcoe proposal spent about 75 per cent of its time trying to justify and to convince people of the need for a treatment plant of this kind. Well nobody needs to be convinced, everybody recognizes that we need one, so I think that was perhaps misdirected in terms of their approach to the problem. I think only about 20 pages of the report detail the engineering aspects of it and there are perhaps some questions with respect to the engineering and the proposal.

I think the whole thesis of the presentation is a textbook operation rather than taking the practical aspects of it. I think many of these processes have been tried in industry, but when you try and transpose those to converted water treatment plants I think that's quite a different matter and there could be some real operational problems in that plant. I just want to alert the minister to that. I think ministry officials should take a look at that aspect of it before he goes whole hog in support of it. We all recognize the need for it. I hope it works, but I think the minister needs to be careful as to how he approaches that particular problem.

The last matter I want to touch on is the matter of liquid industrial waste; a very important problem and I know the ministry is giving a lot of consideration to this matter. I was very startled to see in the Toronto Sun this morning that only two healthy babies resulted from the 12 known pregnancies among the women living near the Love Canal chemical dump since October of 1978.

What we are dealing with here are very toxic, very harmful and very dangerous chemicals. Over the past two decades, the diversity of industrial chemicals has increased from 500 different types in 1958 to 1.4 million in 1979. Legislation, directly and indirectly affecting chemical control in Canada, is divided between federal and provincial jurisdictions, with over 220 laws and 400 sets of regulations administered by 90 different ministry departments and government agencies.

I think the ministry should require, in the next year or so the pretesting of all substances, as recommended by the committee—the minister undoubtedly remembers that particular recommendation—the pretesting of all substances before they are introduced into the work place and into the environment. I think we could prevent a lot of the danger that results from the use, the transportation and the disposal of these particular commodities.

Mr. Kerrio: I can't let this time pass to try to impress the minister again as to the very serious consequences that will eventually transpire if the ministry itself and the federal government do not make personal representation to the state of New York where they are now giving some consideration to an application from a chemical company that has a tremendously bad record over the past as it relates to spilling and dumping toxics into the Niagara River. The minister should avail himself of time that's left to make representation to this hearing committee, which is going to reconvene at the end of January, and make known the position of the province of Ontario, that we will not accept pipe being put into the river to be used to dump up to an additional two million gallons of supposedly-treated effluent into that river. The company is asking for permission to monitor this effluent itself. The pipeline would be buried in the bed of the river where no one can see what is happening. We are going to trust a company that in the past has had fines up to $15,000 for mishandling of PCBs.

When the government of New York state advertised in newspapers that they would hear from interested parties who had some knowledge of the chemicals being dumped, that their testimony would have some influence on whether the permit was granted or not, I think it was incumbent on this ministry and on the government, not only to participate in the sense of simply monitoring the hearings but to make their presence known and to tell those people hearing the case for SCA Chemicals that we should not in future allow the dumping of any kind of wastes into that environment without proper monitoring by an independent party.

That hearing is still going on. I have written to the Honourable Flora MacDonald, the Minister for External Affairs, as I have told you, I have written to the Honourable John Fraser, the federal Minister of the Environment; and I am very sorry to say that no one is making official representation to the hearings in the state of New York to try to put a stop to the granting of such a permit, that will have dire consequences and add to the pollution of the Niagara River.

Incidentally, the minister must be aware of the fact that the turning point in the system is the Niagara Frontier, where there are some 200 known toxic waste dumps on the New York side. My colleague has mentioned one, the Love Canal. Love Canal and Bloody Run are names that are going down in history as an indictment of those people who were supposed to protect our environment and who have failed miserably.

There is still time. I ask the minister again to participate in those hearings, to suggest there should be a new, joint commitment by Ontario and by the federal government, if we can get them to move as well, to urge that such toxic elements no longer be introduced into that great waterway, that great heritage we all enjoy.

Mr. McGuigan: I would like to begin by thanking the Minister of the Environment for having come to Blenheim on December 5 to address the council and the people of Harwich regarding the proposed plant to handle liquid industrial wastes and put them into a solid form.

I think the minister will agree that the people, who have very grave fears on the subject and who suffer from the legacy from the past to which the member for Niagara Falls just referred, which conjures up horrible spectres of disease, birth defects and so on in people's minds, have legitimate concerns about more and more of these wastes being brought into the township of Harwich. This township is already doing a great deal as regards its social responsibility in handling wastes and allowing a landfill site and lagoons to be used for waste disposal.

In speaking to the minister prior to the meeting in the presence of the reeve, Mr. M. Van Gassen, the reeve brought up the subject of the apparent unfairness of the fact that the minister is providing up to $100,000 to Browning-Ferris Industries in the event their proposal to the Environmental Assessment Board is not positively received.

The minister made a point that the Environment Assessment Board is an impartial board. I won't question that they're impartial.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Shame, shame; that's terrible.

Mr. McGuigan: I say I don't question they're impartial.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I apologize; I thought you said you did.

Mr. McGuigan: I say I don't question their impartiality. However, in our system of courts and going before judges we don't question the impartiality of the judge either, but I would submit to the minister that if he or I, or any one in this chamber or any citizen, were before a criminal court and we were charged by the crown attorney, it would probably be in our best interests to hire a very good lawyer who is well versed in the skills of the court and could ask the proper questions and so on, to defend us; or if it was a case of a civil action and we were being attacked in any way by a fellow citizen, it would also be a wise move to have the best possible attorney or advocate that one could have on their behalf.

I would appeal to the minister again to think a little bit more in terms of the people of Harwich township and how they see this as a matter of being pitted against a multi-million dollar company, backed up by funds from the government and with the residents being in the position of having to present their own case with only their own funds.

I know the minister has a problem, and we sympathize with his problem of dealing with these wastes. I'm not taking a position of saying that it absolutely shall not come in; but I think we must put forth every effort, and put pressure on government and the people who produce these materials, to see that every safeguard is taken and is granted to protect the people in the event such a plant eventually does come to our township. God knows I hope it doesn't, but if it does I believe it incumbent upon me and upon the people there to put up the best defence they possibly can.

To give the minister an example, I would refer him to the very valuable insecticide DDT which was eliminated from the market. It was one of the best insecticides ever, because of the fact it was so persistent. When you sprayed it on a crop it stayed there and protected that crop over a period of time. But of course that also had the disadvantage that it didn't break down and eventually found its way into the food chain. So we eliminated DDT from our arsenal of pesticides and we moved to other products.

I would suggest to you, sir, that perhaps a question to be answered is whether or not some of the industrial products we're making today should be made if they're going to be so dangerous and pose such a problem for the rest of society.

We're all anxious to leave so I won't carry on any further, but I certainly appeal to the minister to look again at the fairness of the proposal to finance the company, and look at it a little bit from the standpoint of the good people of Harwich township, who after all received him very well and I'm sure he has good feelings towards them.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The member for Huron-Bruce was rather brief. I will reply to his comments in detail and will send every member of the Legislature a copy of that reply.

The other two members spoke on items I had previously dealt with, and as my Christmas present to you, sir, and through you to the members of the House, a merry Christmas. I will note their comments. Thank you.

Resolution concurred in.

MINISTRY OF NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, the whip of our party has whipped everybody into line, kicked their shins and we will have no further speakers on the other concurrences. In return I am speaking for about 10 minutes on this one, so I beg the indulgence of the House. That means in the new session I don't get to speak for the first month.

I want to bring to the minister's attention an issue that has been brought to his attention before, that from what I have found out since we debated the estimates of the Ministry of Natural Resources I think it absolutely imperative that the Ontario government now set up an entirely and totally independent task force to inquire into the iron-ore industry.

Due to the incompetence or deliberate neglect by the Ontario Conservative government, the iron-ore industry in Ontario is in serious trouble. In the past two years, almost 1,500 iron-ore miners in Ontario have lost their jobs. Four mines out of the nine that we had in the province have closed.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You know what Mel Bartley said about your comment.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, and he was wrong.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You're wrong.

Mr. Foulds: No, no. He's wrong, Leo.

Marmoraton Mining Company in Marmorora closed March 31, 1978, laying off 282 workers. National Steel at Moose Mountain, near Capreol, closed June 1, 1979, laying off 226 workers. Steep Rock, near Atikokan, closed January 1979, affecting 600 workers. The latest closing was of Caland Mines, November 21, 1979, with its pelletizing operations to close in April 1980, affecting a total of 480 workers altogether. Over 1,050 have lost or will lose their jobs in Atikokan because this government, and especially the Ministry of Natural Resources, has done nothing, even though they knew the corporate decisions taken by CP Investments, which now controls Steep Rock, and Inland Steel, which controls Caland, would seriously threaten the existence of a one-industry town, Atikokan.

Firstly, such a task force needs to examine the controlling interest that CP Investments now has assumed in mining properties at Steep Rock, Bending Lake and Lake St. Joseph and CP's controlling interest in one of Ontario's major steel producers, Algoma Steel of Sault Ste. Marie. What is interesting is that ever since CP took control of Steep Rock in 1976 and took major interests in Bending Lake and Lake St. Joseph, there has been, I believe, a deliberate slowdown in Ontario of iron-ore mining development, and an especially severe slowdown in the development of the mining industry in northwestern Ontario.

Secondly, the task force I suggest needs to examine the deliberate corporate decisions taken by the steel producers of Ontario; those steel producers are Algoma, Dofasco and Stelco. They have taken deliberate decisions to invest in captive mines in the US, at Eveleth, Hibbing and Tilden, rather than bringing into production iron ore at Lake St. Joseph and Bending Lake in order to create jobs here in Ontario.

Third, a careful and honest evaluation of the amount of ore that the companies are walking away from in the abandoned mines at Moose Mountain, Marmora, Caland and Steep Rock needs to be done.

Fourth, the task force should be charged with the responsibility of developing an orderly plan so that instead of importing 58 per cent of our ore from outside Ontario, we in Ontario begin to develop our own rich deposits at Bending Lake and Lake St. Joseph and to reactivate, where possible, the mines Moose Mountain, Caland and Steep Rock.

This task force needs to be totally independent of the mineral resources group of the Ministry of Natural Resources. That branch of the ministry, and indeed the minister himself, have been pussycats in this whole affair of iron-ore mine closings. In fact, both during the estimates and during the meeting I attended about 10 days ago, when the United Steelworkers made a presentation to the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Natural Resources, it became clear that the executive co-ordinator of the mines group of the Ministry of Natural Resources and the minister himself are merely corporate apologists who are all too willing to accept tamely, at face value, the information the companies have given them. That includes the clipping of the newspaper story the Minister of Northern Affairs has referred to.

There is no desire by that branch to have independent assessments done in a reasonably thorough, geological fashion. Naturally, the figures given to the ministry by the corporations put the decisions of corporate profits ahead of decisions favouring the well-being of people in communities such as Atikokan.

It is very strange that when you go through—and I won't read them all into the record—the US Securities Exchange Commission's reports for Steep Rock Iron Mines, which give us information in far more detail than anything we have available here in Canada, time and time again until 1976 Caland very clearly states in its report to the securities commission—and Caland leases its pit from Steep Rock—there will be at least 16.3 million tons of iron ore in the assured and reasonably assured category available. I think that is serious evidence that should not be disregarded, just because one of the geologists who's been on staff and has been giving those figures to the company changes his mind in the last year.

I also quote briefly from the 1975 annual report of Steep Rock Iron Mines. "If Caland Ore Company terminates mining operations in the C ore zone in 1979 as planned, it is calculated that 16.3 million tons of ore economically extractable by open-pit mining will remain, all in the reasonably assured category.

"If Caland's announced plan is implemented, Steep Rock will have access to the C ore zone in late 1979. However, one to two years will be required to do the advance stripping necessary to prepare for providing plant feed on a continuous basis. If means can be found to provide continuity of ore supply through 1979 and 1980, it is probable that Steep Rock can continue mining on an economic basis until C ore zone reserves are fully recovered."

I submit that Steep Rock was saying that back in 1975 and 1976 because they had reason to believe it. An excessive amount of ore has not been extracted since then and they said it in their annual report in order to keep their stocks up and in order to keep confidence going in the company and things have not changed today.

What really shocked me at the meeting I had with the minister and in the estimates is that the director of the minerals group was far too willing to apologize for the corporate decision taken and not to do an independent study. He was far too willing to say the company tells them there are only 5,000 to 10,000 tons left. That is not the way for a government to protect the interests of its citizens.

I understand the necessity for a corporation to have a profit, and I understand the necessity for profit in our type of economy. But the people of Ontario have invested in communities like Atikokan million of dollars in schools and hospitals and road facilities and so on, and we deserve protection for our investment too. It may mean that people do matter more than profits and that companies should take somewhat smaller profits and yet still make a profit in order to maintain a community like Atikokan.

Next, this task force must obtain and must make public the major study of the future of the iron-ore deposits in northwestern Ontario that has already been done. This study was recently completed by the three integrated steel producers, Algoma, Stelco and Dofasco. To this date this government has not either tried to get access to the study, or if they have, they have not admitted they have it and will not make it public.

I would suggest the task force I recommend contain representations from the Ministry of Natural Resources as well as from the mining industry. There should be representation from the trade union movement and the most probable and most likely representation could come from the United Steelworkers of America, which has, after all, organized most of the mining industry in Ontario. It also should have on it an independent representative geologist from the academic community who has not been previously hired or employed by the mining companies involved. If I may say so, that is where Dr. Bartley's credentials are in question, because he has been on retainer as a consultant for both Steep Rock and Caland.

The task force is necessary because of the miserable failure of the Conservative cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities to do anything constructive about one-industry towns. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, during the crisis in Sudbury and the Inco layoff, on November 3, 1977, the Premier (Mr. Davis) announced the formation of this cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities. He stated, and I quote: "The scope and attention of the cabinet committee will go beyond the current difficulties of the Sudbury area. It will be consulting with mining companies, union, municipal leaders and other interested groups in order to develop government policies which will assist all of us in dealing with the problems and opportunities common to communities which are affected by international mining markets."

Two years have now passed since the committee was formed, yet the same problems continue to haunt these resource-based communities. Atikokan is simply the most poignant and latest example of this. I must say, when I today received the written reply to the question I put on the Order Paper, frankly I was astounded. The Premier's announcement about that cabinet committee was a sham. In my view the answers given today proves conclusively that the cabinet committee never met.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Oh yes, it did sit.

Mr. Foulds: It did? How many times? Why is the government then afraid to tell us how many times? I want to read into the record the answer that was given.

I asked: would the ministry table the dates, times and topics discussed at meetings of the cabinet committee on the future of one-industry towns since the Premier announced its creation in 1977?

Answer: "The cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities was established by the Premier on November 3, 1977. The committee worked intensively during 1977 and 1978. As with all meetings of cabinet and its committees, the agenda of this committee are confidential."

I didn't ask for the agenda, Mr. Speaker. They didn't even tell me the dates or the times. They haven't the guts to, because the committee has never met. I challenge any spokesman for the government to file with this Legislature proof that that committee has met and if it worked intensively in 1977 and 1978 as is claimed here. What the hell has the government got to show for it? Not a thing.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Oh, use proper language for goodness' sake.

Mr. Foulds: What the devil, is that better, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the word "hell." I substitute one of its inhabitants, "devil."

What the devil has the government to show for it? It has not done a single thing to overcome the policy difficulties that face one-industry towns in northern Ontario.

The answer goes on: "The government's further initiative for northern communities have been the chief responsibility of the Minister of Northern Affairs in conjunction with the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development."

Now they have a bakery up there and one or two other minor things, 11 jobs including the industrial commissioner's, but what else have they done? And not just Atikokan. It is important that a policy be developed so those one-industry towns are no longer as vulnerable as they have been over the last 40 years of Conservative government.

Hon. Mr. Pope: Forty years?

Mr. Foulds: Thirty-seven, 38. It seems like 64.

"Because the Ministry of Northern Affairs, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development"—I am quoting again—"and the board of the Employment Development Fund are currently the best vehicles for dealing with the problems of resource-based communities, the cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities has been sunsetted" as a number of people want me to do with this speech. I just have a few more remarks that I need to make.

Of all the committees, of all agencies that should not be sunsetted it's that cabinet committee, if you were serious on the future of one-industry towns.

Mr. Martel: You guys are phony, you did nothing; what else is new.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Go to Atikokan and see if we haven't done anything there.

Mr. Martel: I was there.

Mr. Foulds: I've been in Atikokan. I am going again in January. I say to the Minister of Northern Affairs that the people of Atikokan are marvellous people who are fighting back with optimism and strength but with very little help from this government. I want to say—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: On a point of privilege. I am not going to sit here, Mr. Speaker, and take the comments of the member for Port Arthur.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: He can't speak he is not in his place. You are out of order, as usual.

Mr. Foulds: Before that, I wanted to say, if there has been—actually, I wanted to pay that particular minister a little bit of a compliment; if anybody has at least tried to do something it has been the Minister of Northern Affairs. The problem is the Ministry of Northern Affairs has had to do jobs on an ad hoc basis. I have talked to some of the staff and they are working very hard but they don't have the framework of an overall government policy which will remedy the structural difficulties of one-industry towns.

Because of the obvious failure of the cabinet committee to come up with solutions to the problems of resource-based communities, it is important that the task force I am suggesting get to work immediately.

Finally—two more paragraphs, Mr. Speaker, just two more—this task force is necessary so that we in Ontario can control our own destiny in the iron ore and steel industries. The interests of the people of Ontario must come ahead of the corporate interests of Inland Steel, CP Investments or National Steel.

There is no way that we in this province should be importing 58 per cent of our iron ore when we have rich deposits lying idle in northwestern Ontario and when the provincial government, according to the Washington Securities Commission, has already made commitments to the companies to develop townsites at Lake St. Joseph.

We must protect, develop and diversify one-industry towns such as Atikokan. We must create jobs, not lose them, in the mining industries. We must supply our steel industry with ore from our mining industry in Ontario.

I hope that the task force, such as the one I am suggesting, will be a modest first step in this direction. I would also hope that the task force could report to the Legislature within a three-month period. Wouldn't that be a nice part of a throne speech in March?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it always amazes me when I listen to my colleague the member for Port Arthur. I don't think he really does himself a service when he carries on in some of the ways he does.

It is interesting, and I would point out to him and my friend from Sudbury as well, that the question of the cabinet committee on one-industry towns was raised by myself almost—

Mr. Foulds: It was raised by the member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Long before you even got around to it, sonny, long before.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Sometimes I am not sure whether those people operate on stupidity or ignorance.

If they would just keep both feet out of their mouths, I would tell them that in November, 1978 I put a question on the Order Paper that was almost word for word the same as the one the member for Port Arthur has just raised, the answer to which I have here. On December 13, 1978, the answer to my question, practically the same question as his, word for word, was tabled in this Legislature. In May 1979 the member for Sudbury East woke up and asked a similar question. A full year later the member for Port Arthur awakes and asks the same question.

[5:00]

The problem with that particular person is that in this particular case he has a point. As stupid as most of his remarks were, he really has a point.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, surely that is not necessary.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You're not going to prove it by standing up.

Late though he is, he has a point. I have raised this in the Ministry of Natural Resources estimates and the estimates of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle). There really is a concern about what is going to happen in the iron ore business in northwestern Ontario and in the steel business.

I would agree with my colleague from Port Arthur that some kind of study or task force along the lines that he recommends should be undertaken by the government. I would hope that the government and the minister would seriously consider this matter and perhaps have some kind of preliminary report available to the members when we return in February or March.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I too will be brief. I will refer to some of the matters raised by the member for Port Arthur, but I would remind him that this ministry produced a review of the metal mining industry of Ontario in 1977, which clearly anticipated the situation which now exists. The actual prospects for Steep Rock were indicated. My honourable friend, the Minister of Northern Affairs, was at the opening of the Steep Rock operation some 30 years ago when they indicated at that time they anticipated that the reserves would last for about 30 years.

When Caland leased the ore bodies in 1974, they said they would complete their operations in 1979. I think it is pretty clear from the studies that were made originally and from the design of the pit outlines of the operations, that the ore bodies that were established at that time are the ore bodies which were mined and which are now depleted.

I should point out too that as far as the government is concerned it has been working with the industry with respect to Lake St. Joe and Bending Lake. In 1974 the studies on Bending Lake showed it to be uneconomical at that time, even with the offers of support which the government had proposed in connection with roads, a slurry pipeline and a number of other alternatives. As a matter of fact, to indicate the province's faith in that deposit in the future—and we believe it will be economical in the not-too-distant future—we are at present, through the Ministry of Northern Affairs, building a road from Atikokan via Bending Lake to Ignace, which will make that deposit readily available when the time comes when it can be economically developed.

It appears now that there is a significant decline in the North American steel industry. That is something which was not predictable four or five, or even a couple of years ago in many respects. I think it's important too to remind the honourable member that Canada presently exports some 25 million tons of iron ore or pellets to the United States, and another 20 million tons to other countries.

In Ontario, we import between five million and six million tons of ore in pellets from the United States. Tariffs, of course, are a federal matter. There are no tariffs by Canada on US ore or by the United States on Canadian ore. It doesn't take a small computer to figure out who would be the loser if we got into a tariff battle with the US.

One of the other rather interesting and significant figures shown by the studies that have been made by our ministry and the industry, indicates that even at the present time it is not economic. The ore that is mined in Labrador and Quebec cannot be laid down in Hamilton or in Sault Ste. Marie competitively with the ore which they are now importing from the US, from Minnesota I guess and Michigan particularly. Looking at the high quality pellets which are produced in Labrador and Quebec, those pellets laid down in Thunder Bay today would be at a lesser cost than the ore pellets which have been produced by the Caland Ore Company, or could be produced at Caland.

As a matter of fact, we are updating the major study on the iron ore industry which the ministry did in 1975. I hope we will have the results of that in the not too distant future, and certainly they will be available to this House. As I had indicated in the meeting which took place a couple of weeks ago, between myself and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) on the one hand and the group from Atikokan and the United Steelworkers, including Mr. Cook of the union, we are actively reviewing the situation of Caland again and we will be doing that on the scene in the not-too-distant future, and I will of course have a report about that later on.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is important to point out in connection with this government's concern about one-industry towns, the lead ministry concept, which was developed and which is used for many other problems now, was originally developed to deal with this specific problem and the Ministry of Northern Affairs has assumed that role. I won't repeat the many remarks and speeches that my colleague on my right has given in the past, but I think it's pretty clearly established, in northern Ontario particularly, the interest and effect that has been generated by that ministry. Before sitting down, I simply remind the honourable members that one of the reasons, a major reason, that the Ontario Hydro thermal generating plant is in the construction process at Atikokan, is a result of the kind of planning and the kind of incentive which the Ministry of Northern Affairs has given and will continue to give.

Resolution concurred in.

MINISTRY OF ENERGY

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion for concurrence of supply for the Ministry of Energy carry?

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I guess I am not familiar with the procedure of the House on the last day. The Minister of Energy was going to make a statement, as I understood it during this matter. He didn't rise in his place. I don't know whether we are supposed to be puppets on strings over here or what.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I can only speak once, we are in the House. We are now in concurrence, the motion is for concurrence. The usual practice is for all members to make their statements and the minister to sum up. I am quite prepared to sum up.

Mr. Speaker: The matter before the House is concurrence in the estimates of the Ministry of Energy. Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Renwick: No.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Thank you. I thought it had passed.

I suppose I have got to go through the formality of asking the minister if he will now make the statement that he or the Premier (Mr. Davis) were going to make, I thought before the orders of the day in response to a question which I put to the Premier last Friday. That has not been done. There is now a two page statement. The minister says that he wants to sum up. If he sums up, there is no opportunity to talk to him about his statement. I don't know why we game-play in the last dying hours of this session.

Hon. Mr. Welch: On a point of order: The honourable member has already read my statement; I sent it to him. He can comment on it now, I would think.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I am concerned because of the dissolution of the Parliament of Canada and the impending election, to find out what the contingency plans of the government of Ontario are, either alone or in conjunction with the federal government, with respect to any likely anticipated, unlikely, or any other form of possible shortage of petroleum products in Ontario, particularly of fuel oil.

As my question clearly indicated, I am quite aware that Bill C-42, having been drafted by all of the justice experts dealing with constitutional matters, dealt with the situation whether Parliament was in session or was not in session. When they were dealing with it when it was not in session, they also dealt with it on the basis of the dissolution of a parliament.

For those members who don't understand it, the national emergency must be declared by order in council of the government of Canada. It was anticipated in ordinary times that the matter would immediately come before the House of Commons for debate, and if the House of Commons was not in session it would be immediately recalled. Any lawyer must obviously fill in the gap when there is no House of Commons in existence.

They did that. They said it would be called after the new Parliament was elected. That's obvious, any lawyer can do that. That doesn't talk to the reality. The reality is that the members of the government of Canada are engaged in a general election campaign across the country. There is a certain degree of vacuum. I know nature abhors it, but there is some vacuum in Ottawa, there is some vacuum with respect to that problem. It is not going to be of very much use to have the Parliament of Canada, some time in March if the present government is re-elected, call a session of Parliament if in the meantime a national emergency has been declared because of a shortage of fuel oil.

My question does not deal with legalities; my question deals specifically and clearly with the reality. Is the minister prepared to tell this House what the contingency plans of his government are, either alone or in conjunction with the government at Ottawa—and in the language of the day, the mechanisms established under Bill C-42—so that we in this assembly will know what the plans the government has in mind will be should an emergency be declared in this period between now and some time in March?

I would like to know, for example, does the government intend, if there is a national emergency, to recall this assembly? If they are not going to recall this assembly, would the government agree, out of courtesy, to keep our colleagues in the Liberal Party who are the critics for the Ministry of Energy, my colleague the member for Carleton East

(Ms. Gigantes) who is the critic of this party for the Ministry of Energy, fully informed on a weekly basis about the figures involved and the question of whether or not there are occurrences, either abroad or within Ontario, which might well trigger the declaration of a national emergency.

We here do not have to think that we need to sit blindfolded from now until that national emergency is declared. There must be something in the interval, by way of contingency arrangements, that the minister should have an obligation to disclose to us in the assembly before this session is prorogued and the next session takes place, which may well be some time in March, as is likely the date of the reconvening or of the first session of the next Parliament of Canada.

We are asking for information. We're not asking for legalisms; we're not asking for that. We've got our own lawyers here. We have the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor). The minister has the battery of the government members. The member for Lakeshore knows the law, we don't need to be told that. All we want is some basic, fundamental information about the contingency plans of the government so we can understand what the government's preparations are.

We recognize the qualifications that the minister always put on whether there may or may not be a crisis in Canada which will affect the province of Ontario. We understand those qualifications, but we want to know what the plans are when we leave this assembly so we don't go out blindfolded to the public.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Last Friday, December 14, the member for Riverdale raised the questions, with which he has familiarized the House once again, with respect to the federal Energy Supplies Emergency Act and the implications which the dissolution of the Parliament of Canada may have on the administration of the powers under that act, should a petroleum products supply shortage occur before the next federal election. In the circumstances, I think the questions are quite timely.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a moment to outline to honourable members the powers which the federal Parliament has already put in place.

The federal act was assented to on March 26, 1979, and early this month the Energy Supplies Allocation Board was appointed. The federal legislation is quite clear as to the powers and the responsibilities of the governor in council and the Energy Supplies Allocation Board, both when Parliament is sitting and when it's not. In this regard, I would refer members to parts I and II of the act, sections 11 through 20 inclusive.

In effect, and I think it's important that we understand this, the dissolution of Parliament makes no difference to the ability of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board to administer the powers and responsibilities given to it under the legislation.

The member, when he asked the question, acknowledged that the federal act makes no provision for the administration of the legislation whether or not Parliament is dissolved. I should advise the House that once the Energy Supplies Emergency Act was passed by Parliament, the provincial Ministry of Energy began working closely with the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and has provided personnel and expert advice to assist the federal authorities prepare detailed contingency plans.

May I also take this opportunity, as we move quickly for concurrence, to reply to a question asked by the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) on December 6 relating to the amount of the advance payments Ontario Hydro has made to date under its uranium purchase agreement with Denison Mines Limited. I'm advised by Ontario Hydro that to date it has advanced $25.4 million to Preston and $118.3 million to Denison.

As well, during the energy debate on December 6 I advised the honourable members that there was to be a meeting of federal and provincial officials with members of the National Energy Board on Wednesday, December 12. I further indicated that I would report on that meeting. I am very pleased to advise that at the federal-provincial meeting with the National Energy Board on December 12 the board agreed to publicly release its operational data on a regional basis covering the five major areas: the Atlantic provinces, Quebec including the Ottawa Valley, Ontario excluding the Ottawa Valley, prairie provinces and British Columbia. A publication of this data should provide the foundation for better public awareness of the facts.

My understanding is that the data will be made available every month or so, and the first such publication will be around mid-January 1980 covering the period January to November 1979.

I might point out at this juncture that while the initiative for the release of such information came from Ontario, I believe it's only fair to observe that the interest and the involvement of the member for Carleton East was extremely helpful.

I'm also led to believe that the National Energy Board is endeavouring to present the data in a more easy to understand format.

The January to October 1979 data, which was released to the public on December 7, contains a breakdown of information for two regions, east and west of the Manitoba-Ontario border. The breakdown is more meaningful than the total Canadian data previously published.

It is encouraging to note that for Ontario and eastern Canada the refinery output of main products, that is motor gasoline, middle distillates, which include heating oil and diesel fuel and heavy fuel oil, is up by six per cent over the corresponding period in 1978. I am also encouraged by the decrease in demand for middle distillates of 2.1 per cent, and the fact that inventories over the month of October have increased by one million cubic metres or 220 million gallons. However, I must again stress there is still no room for complacency as inventories were six per cent below that of last year on October 31.

Some honourable members had earlier questioned the quantity of exports of middle distillates, and as can be seen from the January to October data middle distillate exports increased from 0.9 to 1.7 million cubic metres in 1979 as against 1978. Our review of the facts on a regional basis confirms that virtually all of the export activity is in the Atlantic provinces and that it involves the sale of heating oil and diesel fuel by a single refiner to foreign markets. It is important to note that this company has a foreign crude oil process agreement and the exports are subject to National Energy Board approval. It is also worth noting that some of the products originally destined for foreign markets have recently been sold by this company to other petroleum marketers for use in eastern Canada.

Finally, the Premier did give an undertaking to the member for Carleton East that there would be some explanation with respect to the substance of her question as to why the government was allowing Ontario Hydro to conduct an unscientific time-of-use experiment prior to the release of the ECAPS report. I must point out that it is not a question of the government allowing Hydro to conduct an experiment which may have an eventual effect on rates, but rather a case of Hydro taking the initiative on such an experiment, as it is Hydro which has the retail rate approving authority in the province.

I am advised by Ontario Hydro that the experiment is anything but unscientific. The very best and latest techniques are being used to conduct the experiment on 1,000 households, which is considered to be relevant to the population as a whole.

Incidentally, the measurement of electrical use by the 1,000 customers will not physically start until late 1980 or early 1981, depending on the delivery of appropriate metering equipment.

To answer the question of why initial planning is being undertaken prior to the release of the ECAPS report, I would point out the facts as follows: To do a proper cost-benefit analysis of time-of-use rates prior knowledge of customer response is necessary, and in the electrical industry there is a general scarcity of this type of information. The information available at this time is considered to be non-transferable and not necessarily relevant to other areas in Canada or North America. Such factors as weather, economics, mix of appliances and the types of fuels being used preclude the results of an experiment in one area being applicable to another.

It is my understanding that the National Anti-Poverty Organization, the group which raised this question earlier in the week, is in favour of time-of-use pricing. However, Ontario Hydro advises me that for the reasons outlined earlier, it would wish to conduct experiments on time-of-use pricing before considering their widespread implementation at the retail level.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: What is the rule under which the minister closes the debate on motions for concurrence?

Mr. Speaker: It is a standing rule here that at times when debate is provided on concurrence, any member can speak on any item contained in the allocation of funds for a specific ministry. It has been a standing order ever since I have been around here that any member can speak and then the minister winds up the debate.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on my point of order, would you give me the number of the standing order which permits the minister to close the debate on motions for concurrence?

Mr. Speaker: Speakers since time immemorial have held that that is the proper procedure when a motion of this kind is before the House. The honourable member knows that many of the rules by which we are governed around here are set by precedent and practice as well as by the written word.

Are you going to challenge it?

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I asked a question. I now want to speak to my point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I've already said that is the format we have used ever since I've been around here and that's the format we're using tonight. If you want to challenge that, you can go ahead.

Mr. Renwick: I don't wish to challenge the Speaker's ruling at all, if it is a ruling. I asked a question and I got the answer that there is no standing order of this assembly which allows the minister to close the debate on motion for concurrence in his supply estimates.

My point of order is that there has been a significant and substantial misdirection by the government of its obligation to this assembly by using this concurrence motion to avoid any questions by giving replies to questions during this motion which should have been given during question period in the House today.

I want to say very clearly to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is I hope the last of a series of incidents which lead me to believe that the government has decided to stop the co-operative operation of this House. I want to say to you that if that is their intention, they will not have the co-operation of this side of the House.

I took the question over to the government House leader yesterday; he photostated it and gave a copy of it to the Premier. The Premier sent me a note to say that the minister would reply to my question in the House today and when I asked the question today he said the minister would give his reply during concurrence. He doesn't have the courtesy to us to stand in his place and give us the answers. He then—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Renwick: —permits any questions which pertain to those matters.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Renwick: I object, Mr. Speaker, to that taking place and I hope the Speaker will take it under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: If the honourable member will read standing order 49(a), I think he will find there is nothing unusual in the procedure we're following for these concurrence motions.

Resolution concurred in.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY

Resolutions for supply for the following ministries were concurred in by the House:

Provincial Secretary for Social Development;

Provincial Secretary for Resources Development;

Ministry of Industry and Tourism;

Ministry of Labour.

BUDGET DEBATE

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this is a chance to resume some of the themes we've been putting forward during the course of this session.

When the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) first talked about this budget, back in March or April, he called it a budget of lost opportunities. I want to say to the Speaker, this has been a government of lost opportunities not just this year, in 1979, but over the close of the 1970s. We are moving into the 1980s with a government that doesn't know where it is in, doesn't know where we are and doesn't know where we should be going in the province. It is not providing the leadership we need in Ontario in meeting the challenge of the 1980s.

If I look at this past year with regret for what we have failed to do, at the total absence of any legislative initiative coming from this government over the course of the past year, if it is true, as I have heard, that the reason they are not legislating now is that Hugh Segal has been taking unto himself those few slim strands of legislative initiative that are still left over there in order to put them into the throne speech in 1980 in March of this coming year, I tell you, Mr. Speaker, I look with foreboding at what the Conservatives intend to do to Ontario in 1980 and beyond.

We had the question from Quebec today. We have had a year of constitutional crisis in our country as the Parti Quebecois prepared for the referendum this year and yet we are suffering in Ontario from a government which for eight years has failed completely to understand what has been happening in Quebec. Not since John Robarts has there been any sympathy or understanding by this government for what is happening in Quebec and that is one of the reasons we are having problems in the country right now.

Not only that, we have a government which has adopted a policy of confrontation, as was demonstrated by the Minister for Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) and by the Premier (Mr. Davis) in recent weeks, and a government which has adopted a policy of confrontation, not just to Quebec, but also to franco-Ontarians, as is demonstrated in the deplorable history of the school at Penetanguishene.

Mr. Speaker, this is the government which chose 1979, the Year of the Child, to provoke a confrontation with the children of Ontario and that will be remembered by us all with bitterness. The Year of the Child was the year when the government decided to close down full-day kindergartens in the separate schools of the province. It was the year when it became evident that a whole generation of young people emerging from school were emerging from school to perhaps a decade of unemployment or limited employment because of this government.

Nineteen hundred and seventy-nine was the year the government, because of budgetary cutbacks, got itself in a situation where 28 of the province's 50 children's aid societies are now in a process of appeal in order to try and get a decent amount of funding to carry out their responsibility to the kids in the Year of the Child. Nineteen hundred and seventy-nine was the year of a total freeze in terms of capital allocations for the creation of new daycare centres. That is what they think of the Year of the Child.

Mr. Speaker, 1979 was also the year which was marked by the tragic death here in Toronto of Albert Johnson, a death which demonstrated the ineffectiveness of this government in dealing with racial tensions and dealing with human rights. The impact of that death was enough to persuade the government to bring—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Such utter nonsense.

Mr. Cassidy: What do you mean, nonsense? It's true. If you understood, if the government—

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

An hon. member: The government ignored the problem.

Mr. Cassidy: Exactly, they let it fester. When the cardinal came up with his report, they failed to understand the report. If they had understood the report, they would not have had that ineffective piece of legislation with relation to civilian complaints against the police.

Mr. Martel: Their answer was to take the sound track out of the House.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. Thank the comments of the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) Mr. Speaker.

It is a government which doesn't understand to this day that there are many citizens in our province who are perfectly law abiding who fear to take their complaints about police action to the police. That is particularly true among people in the visible minority communities. The government doesn't understand that, as is clearly demonstrated by the legislation introduced in the Legislature just the other day.

When you couple that, Mr. Speaker, with the fact—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: After two and a half years of study the government had failed to consult adequately with people who were handicapped in Ontario and then it brought forward legislation which was so offensive to people who are disabled in this province that it finally had to be withdrawn. I say shame on the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) and shame on the government for failing to have a commitment to human rights in Ontario.

These issues speak to the failures of this government, to the fact that they are a tired bunch over there. There isn't any new blood coming up in the back benches. There isn't any fresh initiative coming up through the ranks. Ontario can no longer afford to be run by a caretaker administration that wants to simply cling to power, that just wants to hang on to power without using that power to build new opportunities for the people of this province.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about some of the issues which have been important over the course of the last few months.

Mr. Eaton: Hear what the unions think of the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: They like me. They don't like the Tor'es, the member will see that in the federal election.

Maybe my friend from Middlesex doesn't recall, but on November 20 I presented a petition, along with my colleagues here, signed by 275,000 citizens of Ontario which said, "We protest the government's restraint program for health care." Which said, "The quality of health care in Ontario is now threatened by deterioration of services in hospitals and lack of access to doctors billing at OHIP rates." It said, "We are—"

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if we did that petition again today we would get half a million signatures across Ontario.

I see the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) is here. One of the things that people said when they signed was, "We are opposed to any form of extra billing by doctors, to extra fees being charged to chronic and other patients and to the unfair OHIP premiums." Where is the action by the Minister of Health on that? The Minister of Health is a signatory to an agreement with the doctors which is going to give $140 million to the doctors of the province next year, which will give them an increase averaging about $6,000 per doctor. In other words, an increase which is equal to the amount that a worker in Ontario earns at the minimum wage for an entire year.

But did the government ask the doctors to stop opting out? Did the government ask the doctors to stop extra billing? Did the government ask the doctors to provide services at the OHIP rates when they are working in hospitals? There was no action like that at all.

We have had a pile of malarkey from the Minister of Health about numbers and so on—

Mr. Eaton: Malarkey? That is you all the way.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right, malarkey—designed to obscure the fact that in major centres of this province, in major specialties of medicine across this province, again and again and again, more than half of the doctors in those specialties are opted out and we have a return to charity medicine in Ontario because of the Minister of Health and because of this government. People are being forced to beg for service at the OHIP rate, rather than getting service on a universally accessible basis.

Not only that, but today in the Globe and Mail the minister reveals that he knew that very high proportions of specialists in many specialties in many communities were opted out.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: You knew that seven years ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Of course, but the government has the facts, we have the facts as well but the facts have been confirmed today. The minister has known all along. Not only does he do nothing, but he has totally failed even to ask his senior officials to give him the information, let alone act on that information when it's been available. He sat by and condoned the use of collection agencies by doctors to collect extra billing from patients across the province. He has condoned a situation where people have become afraid to go to the doctor for fear of the extra billing. He has condoned the situation—

Interjections.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Cassidy: Listen to the yapping over there, Mr. Speaker.

He has condoned a situation where there are general practitioners who will not send their patients to the appropriate specialists because they know the specialist has opted out and the patient can't afford to pay the extra bill, therefore they send their patient to get second class care from somebody they know is not the best doctor for that particular job.

Not only that, but last January the Minister of Health, who is accustomed to changing his position regularly, announced he was going to cut the amount of hospital beds in this province by 5,000 or 6,000 over the course of the next two and a half or three years. Today he says, "and I'm going to convert them to chronic-care beds." He didn't say that on January 19, Mr. Speaker; that wasn't his tune then. He has had to change his tune because of pressure from the communities, the hospitals themselves and from the New Democratic Party.

Oh he has $65 million that he didn't have before but that was available in January. He has an appeal process that wasn't available before and yet—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Oh yes it was.

Mr. Cassidy: No, it wasn't. Only for medical errors and nothing else. It's in the documents that were sent to the hospitals. The minister has been giving answer after answer after answer, and each one changes because he plays games with the truth in his efforts to cut back health-care expenses in the province of Ontario.

The problems persist in our hospitals. At the Queensway Hospital here in Metropolitan Toronto as many as eight or nine patients are backed up in the emergency ward every night because no beds are available. Across this province nurses and other health-care workers continue to be laid off or continue to face increasing pressure because of the cutbacks.

The American consultant Naus-Newlyn comes along and produces a system where nurses aren't told until five o'clock in the morning whether or not they're going to be called in to work on that particular day. That's the kind of inhuman treatment being meted out to health-care workers. Inevitably, that's translated into a loss of tender loving care and the loss of quality health care in the hospitals of the province.

Mr. Speaker, not only that but the minister has gotten up again and again and said: "We want to innovate. We want to change things in the health-care system." I think the minister should tell the public why there has been not one new chronic home-care program established and put into operation since the beginning of the year.

I think the minister should explain, if he's so committed to community health, why no new health-service organizations have been created in the province of Ontario this year despite the compelling evidence from places like Sault Ste. Marie that community-based health care can cut hospital days by 40 per cent and thereby save millions, if not hundreds of millions of dollars for the health-care consumers of the province of Ontario.

There are a lot of people in this province who are saying they would like to have community-based health care. If this government had a sense of dealership and initiative, 10 years after the introduction of medicare into Ontario we would have the community-based programs that should have been created by now; we would have the commitment to preventive health care which we should have had by now; we would have eliminated the health premiums that existed prior to 1969; we would have extended health care to include the cost of drugs; we would have extended health care to include dental care, especially for kids. Those would have been done, Mr. Speaker, instead of which we have had a government that's been systematically cutting back in its commitment to health care, particularly in the time that the Minister of Health has occupied his present office. If the Minister of Health is prepared to resign we are prepared to accept his resignation. He's lost our confidence as Minister of Health in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Crossman: Then he must be doing something right.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister of Industry and Tourism is off again, Mr. Speaker. It's significant that the Minister of Health says there is no problem, and yet the federal Conservatives have said yes there is a problem with medicare. They have appointed Justice Emmett Hall to look into the problems of medicare. They have accepted there may be a need for the federal government to exert pressure on governments like this which are abandoning the principles of universal medicare that our party has fought for from the beginning of our party.

The split personality of that party doesn't just extend to the questions of medicare. I wish the Minister of Energy would get his stories straight with his federal counterpart. He has been telling us all fall that the situation was tight but manageable. When Joe Clark said there would be serious shortages, or that we face that risk, what did the Minister of Energy say? He said: "I have been talking to the multinationals. I trust the multinationals more than I trust Joe Clark." I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, we don't trust Joe Clark and we don't trust the multinationals either.

This winter, Mr. Speaker, we are poised on a knife edge. We don't know whether we are going to be able to get through. We won't have the Emergency Supplies Allocation Board to protect this province. We have Tories at the provincial level and at the federal level who have abandoned their responsibility to ensure we do not freeze in the dark in this province over the course of the winter of 1979 to 1980. We have a federal government which has brought in a budget which over the next four years is going to exact $15.7 billion in additional amounts from Ontario consumers in order to fatten the ayatollahs of Alberta and in order to sweeten the coffers of the multinational oil companies. We have a federal Conservative government which is going to give, if they are allowed to and I hope they aren't, $33 billion to the multinational oil companies free and clear over the next four years. It's an abdication of an oil policy.

We have a federal Tory government which changes its position on Petro-Canada almost every week. We have a provincial Tory government that suddenly sides with Ed Broadbent and says keep Petro-Canada. They say keep Petro-Canada only months after Ontario has sold its shares in Syncrude. How consistent is that, Mr. Speaker? All of this is done with no guarantee that any of the billions upon billions of dollars being drained from Ontario in federal energy expenditures will be reinvested in new energy supply or will be actually used to protect the consumer in the province of Ontario.

All of this is done with no expanded federal commitment to an energy policy, and all of this is done with no major initiatives coming from this government to make energy conservation attractive in the province of Ontario.

There are no insulation loans. Where's their program? There is no expansion of subsidies to public transit. Where's their program? There are no new building codes. Where's their program? We announced ours three years ago. There is not even legislation for solar energy rights, for sun rights. Where's their program? It hasn't come down yet, Mr. Speaker.

We have a government which continues to press on with spending on electric power generation at the rate of $1.5 billion to $2 billion a year, at the same time they spend all of $15 million or $16 million a year and no more in the areas of energy conservation and alternate sources of energy. We have a government which 18 months ago sold this province's birthright in uranium to Rio Algom and to Denison Mines despite the warning of this party.

In Saskatchewan, the people have a 51 per cent interest in the uranium industry in that province. In Saskatchewan, they are moving towards a 51 per cent interest in the potash industry. That is going to secure that province's industrial and economic future for 2,000 years. In Saskatchewan, they have taken their major resource, which is oil, and through Saskoil, the government of Saskatchewan has a major share of that. In this province, we have abandoned our birthright in nickel; we have abandoned our birthright in iron ore; we are abandoning our birthright in base metals and we have abandoned our birthright in uranium. I say that is not good enough for the people of Ontario.

Nor has the government moved to develop the kinds of industries we are going to need if we want to develop energy in the province during the 1980s. Where is the government's program to develop methanol from wood waste? Where is its program to develop new kinds of insulating materials? Where is its program to develop the electronic control systems that will allow us to use our energy sources more efficiently? Where is its program for co-generation? It isn't there yet because the government won't plan ahead for the 1980s.

A major part of the industrial strategy for Ontario could have been the development of industry based on the energy needs of Ontario, but we haven't had that either from this government. They have run out of ideas for the 1980s. If this government was so opposed to the federal Tory sale of the equivalent of 643 million barrels of oil in natural gas to the United States this government would have gone before the National Energy Board and showed that the formula the NEB was using to justify that sale was in error and that we needed that natural gas in Canada. They said they were opposed to the sale, but when the chips were down they wouldn't prove it before the NEB. They let that natural gas slip through their fingers and away from the homes of the people of Ontario.

Then they turn around and prove that all those election debts back on May 22 were worthless currency. The Premier says the increase in the federal excise tax will not promote conservation and will cause serious financial hardships among the disadvantaged. Then he turns around and plans to campaign for Joe Clark so we can get back the excise tax the Premier says would be so damaging to the people of Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: What a flip-flop!

Mr. Cassidy: It is a flip-flop.

I want to tell you as well about jobs, Mr. Speaker, because this government doesn't care about jobs. This government has done nothing concrete in the past year to create the jobs the people of Ontario are going to be needing over the course of the next decade.

Mr. Rotenberg: Nonsense.

Mr. Cassidy: The member for Wilson Heights should listen for a while.

Mr. Rotenberg: I will be glad to listen if you will tell us something interesting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rotenberg: How many jobs did we create? Tell us how many jobs we created.

Mr. Cassidy: My goodness, he really is yappy today. When the budget was delivered, 285,000 people were unemployed in Ontario according to the seasonally adjusted statistics of Statistics Canada. We warned this government at that time that Ontario had to take the lead in job creation, both in the short term and to confront the major structural problems of our industry.

The government hasn't done anything about structural problems like foreign ownership. It hasn't on import penetration. Nothing has been done about the depletion of our resources, the failure of research and development in this province, the failure of skills training in the province and the weaknesses of major industries like the machinery industry and the automobile industry.

Did the unemployment rate go down in November because of this government? Has the number of unemployed gone down because of this government? In March, there were 285,000 unemployed. In November, the seasonally adjusted figure showed there were 288,000 people unemployed in Ontario. We've spent seven months absolutely standing still in terms of combating our serious unemployment problem in Ontario. We can't afford that lost time; we can't afford those lost opportunities in this province. We've got to move forward. We can't stand still.

Mr. Rotenberg: And how many are working? How many were working seven months ago? Give us that statistic.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the member for Wilson Heights control himself?

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, have you ever seen them quite so excited? Have you ever seen them foam at the mouth that way?

Let me tell them about the centrepiece of the budget. I see the Treasurer is here right now.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was here all afternoon.

Mr. Cassidy: You may remember the way he told us that the Employment Development Fund was going to rescue the economy of Ontario. I remember that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There's a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Noticing the mood of the House and the enjoyment they are having in the honourable member's remarks, I wonder if we might have unanimous consent to continue on after six o'clock.

Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm in the hands of my colleagues. I've never been so entertained by them for a long time.

Let me put one or two facts on the record which may shake their confidence in the provincial Treasurer and may suggest to them that maybe he should go back to cutting down pine trees in Muskoka. The Treasurer in his off moments runs a small enterprise called Santa's Village in the town of Bracebridge. I've been there. But he is no Santa Claus when it comes down to creating jobs in Ontario.

In seven months, the Employment Development Fund has managed to be given to companies which have promised that in the next five years they will create 2,721 jobs. I exempt the automobile industry. What's interesting is that from January to June of this year the Ministry of Labour counted 6,079 workers in Ontario who were laid off because of shutdowns in the province.

If I can just give a few specifics, between the budget and today, we've had Westinghouse announce 700 jobs lost in Hamilton; 135 jobs lost at the beef terminal; 1,200 jobs lost because of the shutdown of Carrier Shoe; 300 jobs lost in Port Hope because of the shutdown of Winchester—the rifle factory; 250 jobs lost because of the shutdown of National Steel in Capreol; 600 jobs lost in Steep Rock and Atikokan; 450 jobs affected because of the shutdown of Caland Mine, half now and the rest in May of next year; 435 jobs lost because of the shutdown at Agnew Lake Mines; 120 jobs lost because of the shutdown of Anvil Limited; 93 jobs lost at Simpsons; 50 jobs lost at Frontenac Tile and 50 jobs lost at Hawker-Siddeley. Those are just the big ones.

Exempting the auto industry, the Treasurer as Santa Claus creates the possibility of 2,700 jobs over the next five years at the same time that major manufacturers are shutting down to the tune of 4,493 jobs across the province just in the past seven months.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How about the auto industry?

Mr. Cassidy: Okay, let's talk about the auto industry.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm talking about the initiatives of this government, and the initiatives of this government are not creating an effective number of jobs. We have 288,000 people unemployed right now.

If one adds in the Ford plant, which came before the Employment Development Fund, there is a potential for 2,600 jobs there.

But how do those 2,600 jobs go around when currently 13,000 workers across Ontario are on indefinite layoff in the automobile industry because of the slump? This government hasn't even come to grips with that problem.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: We lose five jobs under the Tories for every job they hope to create over the course of the next five years.

I want to remind the Treasurer and the Minister of Industry and Tourism as well, since he seems to be rather worked up about it—

An hon. member: He feels guilty.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: I want to remind this House of the principles, outlined by my colleague, our Treasury critic, the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), of what we think should be included if there is to be any kind of an incentive program in Ontario. I am quoting my colleague because he said it so well that I couldn't say it better myself.

"An economic plan must be in place to indicate where we want to be in the next 10 to 20 years. Specific sectors of the economy must be selected and a major commitment made to ensure their growth and success. Repatriation of the economy must be a major part of our economic plan in the province of Ontario.

"A central consideration must be the replacement of imports. We have a manufacturing trade deficit of $12 billion in this country, and the major reason is the weakness of the manufacturing industries in Ontario. Major commitments should be made to specific sectors at any given time so that the incentive program is not dispensed in shotgun-like fashion over a number of sectors with no real impact on any of them.

"The incentives provided to the private sector should have built into them an individually tailored planning agreement"—we have seen none of those—"based on a combination of equity participation"—the people of the province must share—"of job guarantees for Canadians, environmental protection, research and development, guarantees of commitments to buy Canadian and"—this is important—"there must be a guarantee that profits made in this province are reinvested in Canada or reinvested in Ontario."

The following point is important to my colleague from Nickel Belt, as it is important to myself as a member from eastern Ontario: "Regional development must be a major consideration, whenever practical. We must bring an end to a government which has concentrated all its resources on the development of industry around Metropolitan Toronto and left the rest of the province to want."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about Westinghouse in Renfrew?

Mr. Cassidy: "Finally, there must be a comprehensive employment impact study."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you resent Westinghouse in Renfrew?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: If we had the jobs back in Hamilton, I would accept it, but it is no good terminating 700 jobs and putting 500 up in Renfrew. That's not good enough. You keep the jobs in Hamilton and you create the jobs in Renfrew.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We put 120 jobs back in Hamilton. Is the member against jobs in Renfrew?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would like to tell the Minister of Industry and Tourism it is not question period.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: The final principle was that there must be a comprehensive employment impact study to be carried out before any applications are approved. Frankly, I am fed up with seeing public taxpayers' money go into private companies and then finding that the skilled manpower needed for the jobs that are created is being brought into this province from abroad because of the failure of the manpower training program of Ontario.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Those are some good principles. I want to say that last spring we had grave reservations about the capacity of this government to build up our economy for the 1980s. We have had real problems that are coming home to roost right now. The centre of gravity of our economy is moving westward in Canada. Ontario now finds it is no longer guaranteed the rapid growth we had during the 1950s, the 1960s and the 1970s. What we have is a government that knew how to govern in good times, which is easy, but can't cope when it comes to bad times.

Our lack of confidence in the government is reflected in a motion we will be voting on later today, which deplores the failure of the government to recognize the seriousness of the unemployment situation in Ontario and to take effective action to cure it. If the situation looked bad in April, our confidence in Conservatives was further shaken by the performance of the Joe Clark government after it was elected on May 22. Seldom has a government so fresh in office broken so many promises as soon as the Joe Clark government has, since it was elected seven months ago.

They promised to lower interest rates, but raised them to levels which are a record in this country. They promised to stimulate a deficit; then they decided to cut the deficit at the expense of ordinary Canadians. They promised a $2-billion tax cut, instead of which they raised taxes by $3.5 billion, and we in Ontario will be the ones who are paying. I can't see how the Treasurer is going to go out on the hustings to defend that government. How is he going to defend the federal Tories after the speech he delivered in the Legislature last Thursday, the day the federal government came down?

We had the curious spectacle of Ontario Conservatives deciding to consistently disagree with their federal counterparts for an electoral advantage in Ontario. It went to the point that the Premier of this province held an unprecedented press conference on the night of the federal budget to take issue with John Crosbie and Joe Clark, while the Treasurer delivered a statement on the budget last Thursday which was so detailed, so explicit, so adamantly opposed to the federal budget that I want Frank Miller to know that his speech—

Mr. Speaker: The provincial Treasurer, that is.

Mr. Cassidy: —is now a part of our speakers' notes for every New Democratic candidate in the federal election.

It's a very inconsistent bunch we have to deal with. They denounced the sale of Petro-Canada just after they sold their own shares in Syncrude. This is a government that attacks the sale of natural gas, but fails to criticize the formula under which the sale of that natural gas to the United States was being justified.

The government and the Treasurer here denounce the federal government, the federal Tories, for a budget that will increase inflation and take away 20,000 jobs from the province of Ontario. Where is the prices review board in this province? Why hasn't the government come to the defence of the consumers of the province? Why don't we have a prices review board in Ontario?

If this government is going to denounce the federal government for making 20,000 Ontario workers lose their jobs, then, I ask this government, where are the policies to create 20,000 jobs in their place, or to create 288,000 jobs and wipe out unemployment in this province? That's a goal for the 1980s that all of us should be able to subscribe to.

This is a government that attacks the oil and gas price increases at the federal level, but has failed to give this province an energy strategy that will enable us to use energy efficiently in the province of Ontario. We have the spectacle of our Premier showing all the affection to Joe Clark that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) shows toward Pierre Trudeau.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: You liked that? As we go into the Christmas season, the betting is not on whether the Tories, the Liberals or the New Democrats will form the government on February 18, it's whether the Premier's stay in Florida in January will exceed in days the number of miles the Leader of the Opposition travels outside of Hamilton West to campaign for the federal Liberals.

They can't have it both ways. We need a government in this province that will look after the interests of the people of Ontario. We can't have a government that condemns the federal Tories one day and then the next day says, "Well, my heart is with the Tories," which is what the Premier told us, and goes out and tells the people of the province to vote for the dismantlement of Petro-Canada after condemning it, to vote for the 18-cent increase in the excise tax on gasoline after condemning it, to vote for those enormous increases in oil and gas prices after condemning them and to vote for a federal budget which the Premier knows and we know would be a disaster for the people of Ontario.

When the Premier goes on the hustings, I hope every time he appears with Joe Clark he reads this sentence from the Treasurer's statement to the Legislature last Thursday: "In the view of this government, there must be massive reinvestment of the enormous energy revenues to ensure that the economy of the country does not receive a mortal wound in the next year."

The Treasurer says the federal budget, which he now supports, will deal a mortal wound in the next year, particularly to the people of Ontario.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: He is right, and he should stay home during this federal campaign. I address this not just to the government because we know it won't listen, the Minister of Health won't listen, and none of them will listen, but I say to the people of this province very seriously that there are serious problems to contend with in Ontario. Some time in the next year or maybe 18 months, we are going to be going to the electorate. We are prepared to go when we are required to. We are going to go to the people of this province. We are going to say we want to defend health care for every resident of Ontario. We are going to say we want to get back to one-price medicare with no excess billing in the province.

We are going to say to the people we cannot tolerate an energy policy which takes billions of dollars from Ontario consumers to put them in the coffers of multinational oil companies and of the heritage fund of Alberta. We are going to say we want an energy policy in this province that ensures we can use energy efficiently. We are going to say this province needs, demands and ought to have a government which in the 1980s can bring forth the industrial strategies that will enable us to cope, that will ensure we have the jobs that we need and that will deal equitably with every person in the province.

We want equity in the 1980s. We want security in the 1980s. Our workers want to know their sons and daughters will have jobs in the 1980s. We want decent pensions in the 1980s. We want decent labour laws in the 1980s and, God knows, we don't want this government in the 1980s. That is why we moved that motion.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I listened with great interest to the leader of the NDP talk about the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and the leader of the Liberal Party and the relationships between them and their federal brethren. He made certain remarks about sometimes there being disagreement.

I would say that party is probably the only one where the federal leader doesn't want to be associated at all with the provincial leader of the party.

It was interesting that the NDP leader should talk about unemployment. It occurs to me that one of his members was willing to face unemployment rather than to fit in the ranks of the—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, a point of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. What is your point of privilege?

Mr. Cassidy: I just want to say I am going to be on the hustings for Ed Broadbent an awful lot more than the member for Rainy River. We are going to take his riding this time as well.

Interjections.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I must say with all honesty that there might be an outside possibility, because there always is in politics, that a riding might change. But if the provincial leader of the NDP goes up there to support his party's candidate, I can assure him there will be no change at all in that particular riding.

Interjections.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Bellwoods.

PEACE BRIDGE ASSOCIATION FOR THE MENTALLY RETARDED

Mr. McClellan: I would rather do it now than later in the member's speech. I have been waiting for the return of the Minister of Community and Social Services to raise a point of privilege in order to correct the record arising from his ministerial statement this afternoon. I will try to be brief but it is important.

The minister said, "I must regretfully inform members of the decision taken by the Peace Bridge Association for the Mentally Retarded in Fort Erie to cease operations on December 31." My office has been in contact with the executive director, Mr. Ron Goodridge and with the president, Mrs. Bev Rogozinski, of the Peace Bridge Association for the Mentally Retarded. They have denied the substance entirely of the minister's statement and have released a communique which reads as follows:

"The executive director and the president have denied any knowledge of a decision supposedly taken by their association to cease operations as of December 31. The closing has never seriously been contemplated by the board of directors or the membership. The association has been experiencing financial difficulty as a result of an historical inadequate pattern of funding from the Ministry of Community and Social Services."

I want to ask, by way of privilege, if the minister would take the opportunity to inform the House why we were given this information and why the ministry has concocted what appears to be a total fabrication.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to have an opportunity to respond to that point of personal privilege. I acknowledge to the honourable members that since I made my statement in the House today that has been the response of the society. The information upon which my statement was based came from a committee of several persons, three of whom are members of my ministry staff, who have been working with that association since that settlement back in October to try to find solutions. My statement at the time I made it was, and to the best of my knowledge still is, factually correct.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have asked senior staff of my ministry to embark immediately upon a further investigation. If the member notes what the association is now saying, as I understand it, it is suggesting that it might continue with a scaled-down operation. I would also point out we have to check just exactly what they mean by that. If that means low levels of service and dumping all of the money into 53 per cent increases in the salaries of some of their employees, that may not be possible under our funding formula.

Mr. Warner: You are backtracking. Turn in your resignation.

Mr. Foulds: When you make a ministerial statement, you should be sure of your facts.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am not backtracking at all. I can say to the honourable member that was the best information available to me at that time. I can assure him I do not make that kind of statement in this House lightly. I assure the member that information at the time I made that statement was accurate to the best of my knowledge and the knowledge of the staff of my ministry who have been working with that society. To the best of my knowledge, the response that has since emanated from the association is a new response.

Mr. Speaker: Order. On most occasions, there's an appropriate time to rise on a point of privilege. If it's a point of order dealing with something that's current, I think one should rise immediately but, given the nature of the point of privilege, it may have been more courteous had you waited until the member for Rainy River completed his speech. The member for Rainy River may continue.

BUDGET DEBATE (concluded)

Mr. T. P. Reid: Where was I before I was so rudely interrupted? The Leader of the NDP was speaking earlier about unemployment in the province of Ontario and, of course, he has some personal experience with that. One of his staff members was willing to quit and face unemployment, rather than stay and serve under that particular leader.

He has an even more personal experience than that in the case of one Mr. Graham Murray, who used to work in the leader's office and who, I understand, got rather short shrift and found himself one day without the key to the executive NDP washroom. I can say that in at least one instance the NDP leader knows whereof he speaks.

We are leaving the 1970s and entering the 1980s, after 10 years of the Davis government in the province of Ontario. I could spend literally hours on a litany of what has happened to the province under the Premier, but we've been over most of those things. Suffice it to say there will probably be about three major reasons for the Premier to be remembered in the history books, and I think not fondly.

The first is what the Premier has done, almost singly, to the education system in the province. The Premier and his predecessors used to skate away from all responsibility in other areas by saying: "We will get rid of that minister or I'll fire that minister," or whatever, but in terms of education in the province of Ontario there is only one person responsible and that is the Premier.

I'm not going to go over the fantastic increases in the levels of expenditure for which the Premier is responsible in this burgeoning bureaucracy at Queen's Park, at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education and in the regional administration. There's something wrong when these superintendents are making more money than the Premier. Perhaps he thought he was going to retire prematurely and become one. The point of all of this is that despite all of the money that has been spent, people, whether they be individuals, parents or employers, are obviously dissatisfied with the quality of education in the province of Ontario. The member for York Mills shakes her head. Why do the universities have to give people tests to see if they have some basic literacy skills after all the system her government has put in place at enormous cost to the taxpayer? It has let the standards of education go. People who are coming out of the other end are not prepared to deal with life as it is in Ontario or will be in the 1980s because of the system the government has erected.

The next thing is the complete absence of any kind of industrial strategy for the province of Ontario.

It was obvious that it was easy to govern in the early 1970s when the Premier took over the reins of government because we had, until 1973 at least, a growing and a burgeoning economy. The government's answer to every problem was to throw money at it in the hope the problem would go away or people would be bought off. It didn't really deal with the nuts and bolts of what's going on and what's going to happen in the 1980s.

When I think there are 75,000 civil servants backing those people up over there, the mind boggles at the incompetence and the lack of planning they have done. One of the best speeches I've heard in 12 years in this Legislature was that given by my leader on industrial strategy for the province. I don't see one from across the road. I don't see one from the government's federal friend, Mr. Clark, who ran on a policy of having an industrial strategy and in seven months said not one word about it. There is no planning going on in Ontario. There's no planning for the 1980s. We're entering a new decade with some serious problems and nothing is coming out of the people opposite to say how they are going to deal with those kinds of problems.

Obviously—and I feel this very personally—there has been no planning in northern Ontario to expand the industrial structure of that part of the province.

The Treasurer's predecessor made a great statement that still echoes in northern Ontario about the fact that there will never be anything in northern Ontario except resource industries. I understand that my friend, the Minister of Industry and Tourism, has made similar statements in North Bay, because at this Tory meeting there happened to be somebody who became a Liberal after he listened to the Minister of Industry and Tourism. My leader has recounted the net migration from the province and the fact that the value added in the province in percentage terms has decreased and is the lowest increase in Canada. We know we have structural problems in the economy.

When I think about the net migration out of Ontario of about 5,000 people, it occurs to me that very shortly there'll probably be 5,058 people as all the Tories leave to get away from Joe Clark and head south.

An hon. member: Are you going south?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Unfortunately, I'm going to Kenora-Rainy River. It has been suggested to me that by the time the Premier comes back, he'll probably be speaking in a very heavy southern accent because he will have been down there for so long.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I expect to see your leader there.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Are they going to play tennis together?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We'll see Smith for Pierre in Sarasota, Florida.

Mr. T. P. Reid: And Davis against Clark in Miami Beach.

It's interesting that as we wind up, I've just been handed a copy of something I have been trying to get for years. It's called Public Attitudes Towards Education in Ontario. It's a public opinion poll commissioned by one of the agencies of the government. It makes fascinating reading because it indicates, obviously, the Conservative Party has been using these polls to direct public policy in Ontario. If we refer to this, we can look and see that what few initiatives there have been have been based on the public opinion polls the Premier and the government refuse to release, but for which the taxpayers have paid.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How about those myths in the Ministry of the Environment you won't tell us about? You're an honest man.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What is he talking about? As usual, I don't know what the Premier is talking about.

I was going to quote chapter and verse on all the things the Premier said about his federal leader. I was going to repeat chapter and verse from the Treasurer's statement, which I am sure he wouldn't have given on Thursday afternoon had he known what was going to happen Thursday evening. But the Treasurer has always been noted for his bad timing. There is no point in going over all that.

Mr. Nixon: That shows great respect for the Treasurer.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I don't want to get too personal. I don't want to repeat all of that, except to say to the Premier wholeheartedly that I hope he will review his decision to support Joe Clark in the next election.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you reviewing your decision to support your brother?

Mr. T. P. Reid: No. He is my brother, but he is also a member of the Liberal-Labour Party, and we can't afford to lose any of those.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Blood is stronger than public interest.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I know the Premier has heard this before and I am sure he will hear it again. On page 23 of his statement to the last first ministers' conference the Premier said:

"Each of us in representing our own province will have different interests and, consequently, will see our country a little differently as well. But, in the final analysis, the government of Canada accounts directly to all the people of Canada. There is a view being advanced that Canada is a community of communities or a nation of provinces and that our country is made stronger, not by building the whole but by strengthening the separate parts.

"In some measure, Prime Minister, that may be true, so long as province-building does not replace nation-building as the most ambitious goal of Canadians. Thus the government of Canada must stand, not merely as an arbitrator of community differences but the guardian of the nation as a whole."

Those are sentiments I agree with entirely. They are sentiments I hope the Premier will recall when he goes out on the hustings and finally decides he should protect not only the people of Ontario but the people of Canada from Joe Clark.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it's nice to welcome the new leader of the Liberal Party here this evening.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Liberal-Labour Party.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Liberal-Labour Party.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Liberal-Labour Party. Has that got something to do with my Premier's comments about your contribution to the youth of this province—the labour part of it, I mean?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's a labour of love.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Keep it clean.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, most of my aggravation will be vented at the leader of the NDP because he did say a few things I found a bit interesting today. He talked about this having been the decade of lost opportunity, the decade of all the troubles. For members opposite, it certainly was a decade of lost opportunity. The member for Ottawa Centre was elected to the leadership of the NDP, while the other fellows opposite have a man who isn't even here this evening.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The leader of the NDP talked a great deal about a number of his pet topics. He talked about health care and decried the condition of health care in this province. He wanted to make it sound as though there wasn't a soul in this province who dared to go to see a doctor for fear of being shifted off to some unscrupulous whatever-he-may-be person, willing to take his money but give nothing in return. He is a bogeyman. He deals in fear and fantasy. He doesn't deal with the reality.

The member said our Minister of Health hasn't got our confidence or his confidence. I will tell him that he has ours.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: He has the confidence of a great many people in this province.

It is interesting to see what happens when the great country to the south of us, the United States of America, decides it will emulate a program. Where does it turn? It turns to Ontario to find what it considers to be the finest health care system, not just in North America, but in the world.

The member started talking a lot about oil and energy and the problems of oil and energy. I think he talked about blue-eyed Arabs. If we extend that, we will say all we want is a fair shake.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: At the prices I pay for writers, what else do you expect?

I got an interesting piece off the wire a few minutes ago. The member was ranting and raving about the losses of this government in energy. This afternoon the Prime Minister of Canada says that Petrocan will remain in the public domain. He is going to give out shares to Canadians, and it will remain.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's something we said in our papers. We have been heard and we have won.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The leader of the Liberals just quoted a few minutes ago something about the Premier's comments on building a strong Canada. Yesterday the Prime Minister said he has been convinced that a strong Canada is the most important thing and that he is going to work towards that direction. We have been heard and will continue to be heard.

He talked about revenue distribution. I talked about it in my paper last week. The Prime Minister of Canada has said that one of the first things he will do when he wins the next election is to have a serious review and study of the revenue distribution of oil revenues in this country and that it will be done in Canada's interests.

He has already said the price of oil will not exceed 85 per cent of US pricing, another factor we kept on saying.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would say Ontario's paper on energy clearly and honestly stated the issues publicly, even though it was against the people we basically support, and it has been heard. We stood up for the consumers of this province loudly, strongly and firmly, and we have been heard.

Mr. Breaugh: Why didn't they hear you last week? I don't understand.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Where does the real irresponsibility lie? This country deserved a government in power, a government given a chance to run. Which party moved the motion that put them out in the street? The member's party did. He would support hypocritically any stand of his cohorts in Ottawa.

We are not afraid to stand up for the interests of the people we represent, all the while recognizing that at least we had a government there that understood it inherited 16 years of totally irresponsible financial management in this country and was able to put it back on a course.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can understand why the member probably never saved any money or even made any progress in business. He only counts one way. He deducts. He has never learned to add.

He stood up and read into the record all the jobs lost. I just happen to have the figures here. All the jobs lost add up to 167,000 more people at work in Ontario today than a year ago. In addition, two negatives don't make a positive. I used to teach mathematics. I don't know where the member learned his.

He talked about import penetration and import replacement. He talked about regional development. Today I had the honour of being in eastern Ontario for the signing of the eastern Ontario DREE agreement with the federal government. That is an agreement we negotiated with the federal Liberals for four years. In six months we got the Conservatives to sign.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does it cover Conway's riding?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It covers Conway's riding, but it won't be his riding for long.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'll gladly give him a franchise in Pembroke. He does say "Ho, Ho, Ho" very nicely, say it again. Can he grow a beard yet?

Regional development is something this province has stressed. There will be a northern agreement with DREE very shortly, I'm quite sure, and it will be signed before this coming election.

In Cornwall today, we were pleased to note grants to one company exporting $10 million worth of equipment per year to the States in heavy truck bodies because of an Employment Development Fund grant. I was glad to give another grant to another company, establishing in Canada for the first time, in Cornwall, manufacturing facilities to make carpets in Canada that have been previously imported.

Those are the kinds of things we've done constructively, piece by piece, throughout this year with the budget, as we said we would in April, when I stood up.

Some members said we were going to have to go to the electorate sometime soon. Yes, that's true. I'm afraid, unlike them, we're not going to go by the electorate. We'll still be here when the election is over. Where do they want to be? They want to be here in the 1980s and they're not going to be. We are going to be.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Back at Carleton or in some academic environment.

Hon. F. S. Miller: When I turn to the Liberal comments, and I've used up my 10 minutes, I find their spokesman has gone. I was going to say nice things. I had prepared a whole lot of things, hoping there would be something to respond to, but he is the best boxer I have run into. There were a whole bunch of feints and a whole series of shifts, but nothing left to attack.

We set out with our budget this year to achieve a number of objectives: to maintain a high quality of public service in Ontario, and we did; to help create more jobs, and we did; and to provide incentives for economie growth and small business development, and we did. The Small Business Development Corporation legislation, which was pooh-poohed by a lot of people, now has 21 corporations incorporated and over a hundred lined up to be approved. These are average Ontario citizens investing in their province in the form of equity, something we determined we would do at the start of the year.

We said we would continue our sound management of provincial spending, and we have. This year our incomes have exceeded our expectations in Ontario very nicely because of the spirit of confidence in this province that investors and management have. We've had the best year ever for investment in capital works in this province, I'm very delighted to say.

I could go on for a long time. I could recite a lot more things. Is there any place you would rather be? I don't think so. Ontario is the best.

Mr. Speaker: On Tuesday, April 10, Hon. F. S. Miller moved, seconded by Mr. Davis, that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

On April 19, Mr. Laughren moved, seconded by Mr. Wildman, an amendment as follows:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following be substituted therefor:

"This House deplores the government's failure to recognize the seriousness of the unemployment problem in Ontario by providing any full-time jobs; rejects the increase in OHIP premiums and other regressive taxes, while doing nothing to protect consumers against rising prices; condemns the lack of commitment to rebuilding any specific industry within our manufacturing sector and the failure to attach any performance and employment guarantees to its Employment Development Fund; opposes the continued giveaways of our mineral resources; and, finally, condemns the shift of the cost of education and social services to municipalities. For these reasons, the government no longer enjoys the confidence of this House."

The first question to be decided is the amendment by Mr. Laughren.

All those in favour of Mr. Laughren's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment by Mr. Laughren, which was negated on the following vote:

AYES

Bounsall, Breaugh, Cassidy, Charlton, Cooke, Davidson, M., Davison, M. N., Di Santo, Dukszta, Foulds, Germa, Grande, Isaacs, Johnston, R. F., Laughren, Lawlor, Lupusella, Mackenzie, Martel, McClellan, Philip, Renwick, Swart, Warner, Wildman, Young and Ziemba.

Ayes 27; nays 70.

The House divided on the original motion by Hon. F. S. Miller, which was agreed to on the same vote reversed.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried. It is resolved that this House approves in general the budgetary policies of this government.

SUPPLY ACT

The following bill was given first, second and third readings on motion by Hon. F. S. Miller:

Bill 212, An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980.

Mr. Speaker: Before I leave the chair, I would like to take this opportunity to thank all members for their co-operation during this session, and the staff of the assembly for their continued service to the members and to wish you a safe trip home, a merry Christmas and a happy 1980.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario entered the chamber of the Legislative Assembly and took her seat upon the throne.

ROYAL ASSENT

Hon. Mrs. McGibbon: Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honor, we, Her Majesty's most dutiful and faithful subjects of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario in session assembled, approach Your Honour with sentiments of unfeigned devotion and loyalty to Her Majesty's person and government, and humbly beg to present for Your Honour's acceptance, a bill entitled An Act granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Services for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth thank Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, accept their benevolence and assent to this bill in Her Majesty's name.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was pleased to deliver the following gracious speech:

PROROGATION SPEECH

Hon. Mrs. McGibbon: Mr. Speaker and members of the Legislative Assembly: The close of this third session of the 31st Parliament of Ontario also marks the end of a decade. As a province, Ontario has made great strides throughout the 1970s, despite certain economic difficulties which few countries have escaped in recent years. As a nation, the 1970s have brought us to the edge of one of the most critical moments in our history, as Quebec determines its future within Canada.

Today, as at the start of the decade, Ontario continues its unflinching efforts to promote the cause of "Canada first," in policies which the government feels are important to the nation as a whole. Significantly, the government can cite from the early 1970s the positive actions which stemmed from the work of the select committee on economic and cultural nationalism, appointed by this Legislature. Again, in Ontario's stand on energy pricing, consistently held since the mid-decade, the interests of the nation have remained paramount. But among the most vigorous manifestations of this approach is the recent rejection of the sovereignty-association proposal of the government of Quebec.

In looking ahead to the 1980s, my government reaffirms its belief in the ultimate wisdom of its philosophy, which takes as given that the future will be better if shared by all Canadians working in harmony, one with another. At the same time, looking back on this session, the record shows a substantial number of achievements which reflect a deep sense of duty and commitment to the interests of the people of Ontario on the part of all members of this House.

Unfortunately, in 1979, nature was not always kind to certain areas of Ontario. In the first part of the year, ice storms and flooding made emergency assistance and special funding arrangements necessary in 10 areas of the province. Similar assistance was also provided as a result of the severe tornado damage in Oxford and Brant counties in August. Last month, what could have become an overwhelming disaster in the city of Mississauga was averted by the dedicated service of the men and women who work in our fire, police, hospital and related services, and by the highly laudable sense of order exhibited by the quarter of a million citizens directly affected.

The plight of the boat people and of refugees in southeast Asia has been of enormous concern to the government and people of Ontario, who have assisted both in relocation and settlement of several thousand individuals and families in the province, as well as in providing emergency relief through the Canadian Red Cross for thousands more in refugee camps in the Far East.

The observance of 1979 as the International Year of the Child was marked in numerous ways throughout the province. Within the government, the children's services legislation package, which received royal assent last year, was proclaimed in June. The legislation covers amendments to almost all areas of social service to children and includes provisions governing child abuse, adoption procedures and day-care services—all of which have the singular aim of serving the best interests of children.

Special attention has been paid to the health of young children through a highly successful immunization program against communicable diseases. Of equal, if not greater, significance is the fact that by expanding the provincial screening program for newborns to include detection of hypothyroidism, about 30 babies who would almost certainly have been mentally retarded now have a good chance for healthy, normal lives.

Already preparations are under way to observe 1981 as the International year of the Handicapped, with governments and organizations developing initiatives that respond to the needs and desires of handicapped citizens. One recent major initiative of this government was the creation of a province-wide program of subsidies to municipalities to provide transportation facilities for the physically handicapped. The program, which began on July 1, follows on experimental services run in five cities over the previous two to three years. The pilot projects themselves are now permanent programs.

The new Residential Tenancies Act has been proclaimed, with the exception of certain sections which are the basis of a constitutional reference to the Court of Appeal. Under the act, the residential premises rent review program is continued throughout the province in a form that will simplify and improve the process for landlords and tenants.

Major legal reforms have been the hallmark of the Ontario justice system over the past several years, and 1979 has been no exception. A new Provincial Offences Act sets out a code of procedures for the prosecution of provincial offences as distinct from offences under the Criminal Code of Canada where past rigidities may often have appeared to be less than just. The built-in flexibility of this new legislation is likely to attract greater respect from the public at large by relating penalties for minor offences more closely to the nature of the offence.

At the same time, greater responsibility is being asked of Ontario drivers who are now obliged by law to carry a minimum of $100,000 in third-party liability insurance on all motor vehicles. This is the main purpose of the Compulsory Automobile Insurance Act which took effect December 1, and which also provides for the formation of an insurance industry pool to ensure that high risk drivers have access to coverage.

The Evidence Act has been amended to permit the use of the official translation of statutes in French-language court proceedings. This measure falls on the government's undertaking to prepare official translations of 150 select statutes over the next four years, for which task a special legal translation unit has been set up in the Ministry of the Attorney General.

Ontario's economy has, by any reasonable standard, fared well in the 1970s. Ontarians have been spared the undue hardship that might have occurred without the timely adoption of a program of restraint in government spending that began in the middle of the decade. Nevertheless, it is the government's continuing endeavour to temper the obvious limitations required by fiscal restraint with an ever-present awareness of the needs of our citizens and of the community as a whole.

Municipal governments can look forward in 1980 to an average increase in provincial grants of over 10 per cent. In addition, unorganized communities may now make use of a special mechanism to facilitate the provision of such basic services as fire protection, water supply and street lighting. Through the Local Services Board Act, residents and property owners in these communities may create corporate boards with powers to revise these services. This legislation will be particularly useful in communities in northern Ontario.

Ontario's budgetary policies paid high dividends last year in terms of the creation of over 130,000 jobs in the province, all of them in the private sector. Projections run to about 140,000 new jobs for the current year. Efforts to create jobs for young people also produced better results this year, with the Ontario youth employment program providing over 40,000 jobs in the private sector over a six-month period. Government wage subsidy costs for this program will run to about $26 million. A seven-member advisory council on equal employment opportunities for women was formed in March. The Ministry of Labour is relying on the joint co-operation of high-level labour management representation on this body to provide invaluable assistance in securing better prospects for women in the work place.

More than 20 Small Business Development Corporations have been registered since the announcement of this new incentive program in the Ontario budget last April. The program is helping to stimulate private sector investment where it is most needed, in manufacturing and processing, tourism, and mineral exploration, by encouraging equity investments in Ontario-based small businesses. In other budget measures aimed at stimulating investment, succession duties and gift taxes have been abolished in Ontario.

The government has taken up the challenge to ensure that the opportunities facing our manufacturing sector and the accompanying demand for skilled labour are met. The province has promoted the formation of community industrial training committees under the employer-sponsored training program.

The Employment Development Fund, established in the spring, is securing the development and expansion of manufacturing enterprises that will create long-term employment. The fund is also being used as the source of needed incentives to the pulp and paper industry whose modernization it is widely agreed, is imperative both in productive and environmental terms.

At the same time, Ontario must capitalize on the tariff advantages gained at the Tokyo round of GATT negotiations, which were concluded this summer, and make necessary adjustments where the rules are less in favour. In its consultations with Ottawa, the province has persistently underlined the key role required of the federal government in this area, if markets are to be maintained and enhanced both at home and abroad.

In the constant, watchful concern of government and the public about the quality of our environment, the problem of acid rain has become a major area of focus. Intensified research programs are being carried out, involving the monitoring and analysis of effects on fish and other aquatic life. Some of this research funding is being made available from proceeds of the provincial lottery.

The studies also underline the basic goals and objectives for water quality and management in Ontario, which were published earlier in the year. The government's policies, as set out in this document, have been updated according to newest scientific developments and criteria established in the international Great Lakes water quality agreement.

The negative effects of increasing energy costs on the economy and the question of security of supplies are a source of concern to the government. While Ontario has had a good record in energy management and conservation over the past several years, there must be a resolve by our institutions, industries and by individual citizens to do much more. This resolve is our strongest weapon against any possibility of inconvenience or hardship.

Honourable members, the scope of these issues and your efforts in addressing them speak well of the loyalty you bear to this province and to the wider interests of our nation. Ontarians can look back on the 1970s with a feeling that our people have made much progress. But, more important, we look to the new decade with optimism because we know we have the required abilities, resources and resilience to serve our highest aspirations.

On behalf of the people of Ontario, I thank you especially for your endeavours and accomplishments during this session. May I wish you the joys of the season and a safe and happy holiday among your families and friends.

I now declare the session prorogued.

In our Sovereign's name, I thank you.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker and honourable members of the Legislative Assembly, it is the will and pleasure of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor that this Legislative Assembly be prorogued and this Legislative Assembly is accordingly prorogued.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was pleased to retire from the chamber.

The House prorogued at 7:30 p.m.

APPENDIX A
(See page 5805)

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER
MULTICULTURAL POLICY

377. Mr. Duksza: Will the Ministry of Labour outline in detail what initiatives, if any, it has undertaken since May 1977 to reflect the multicultural policy enunciated by the Premier at that time? In its reply, will the ministry outline specific policies, programs, procedures and appointments undertaken to recognize that Ontario is a multicultural society? What, if any, other initiatives are to be expected in this fiscal year? (Tabled December 3, 1970.)

See sessional paper 307.

MINING COMMUNITIES

396. Mr. Foulds: Would the ministry table the dates, the times and the topics discussed at meetings of the cabinet committee on the future of one-industry towns, since the Premier announced its creation in 1977? (Tabled December 6, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McCague: The cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities was established by the Premier on November 3, 1977. The committee worked intensively during 1977 and 1978. As with all meetings of cabinet and its committees, the agendas of this committee are confidential.

The government's further initiatives for northern communities have been the chief responsibility of the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), in conjunction with the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle).

Because the Ministry of Northern Affairs, the Provincial Secretariat for Resources Development and the board of the Employment Development Fund are currently the best vehicles for dealing with the problems of resource based communities, the cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities has been sunsetted.

POLICE ACTIVITY IN LABOUR DISPUTES

401. Mr. Mackenzie: Would the Solicitor General inform the House as to the number and rank of OPP officers and the number and rank of municipal police officers and the daily costs for each group for the month of November 1979 who have been assigned to the picket line, or held in reserve near the site, since the response tabled in the House on December 4, 1979, at: (a) Radio Shack; (b) Boise Cascade, Fort Frances, Kenora; (c) Butcher Engineering, Brampton; (d) Canadian Gypsum, Hagersville? (Tabled December 13, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The answer is as follows:

(a) Radio Shack, Barrie: Barrie Police Force; in November, six constables were on duty for 40 minutes each at a total cost of $60.54. Ontario Provincial Police; nil

(b) Boise Cascade, Fort Frances and Kenora: Fort Frances Police Force, nil. Kenora Police Force, nil. Ontario Provincial Police, nil.

(c) Butcher Engineering, Brampton: Peel Regional Police Force; in November, ten constables were on duty for 15 minutes a day at a total cost of $120.00.

(d) Canadian Gypsum, Hagersville: Ontario Provincial Police—see following.

November 1: One staff superintendent; one inspector; four corporals; 15 constables; total, 21 (all ranks); total daily costs, $563.00.
